In dealing with the Great Commercial Centres of this Country, the editors of THE WORLD-WIDE ENCYCLOPEDIA have with great care, and at enormous expense, obtained the Statistics of the Growth and Development of Population and Manufacture, direct from the Civic Authorities, the Board of Trade, and the Chamber of Commerce in each city.

THE WORLD-WIDE ENCYCLOPEDIA answers Every Question, however abstruse. A Digest of all Knowledge from the Earliest Time is contained within its pages, and no person, however untutored, provided he can read, need lack for full information on any subject within the scope of human knowledge, once he is the possessor of this great work.

THE WORLD-WIDE ENCYCLOPEDIA is very handsomely and durably bound in modern silk finished cloth with genuine gold stamp.

These Twelve Large Octavo Volumes, aggregating nearly TEN THOUSAND PAGES, make a most imposing array, Attractive enough to Ornament the best and costliest library in the world. No Two Hundred Dollar Encyclopedia can make a better exhibit on the book-shelf, and the ownership of this great work, a Complete Library in itself, will rank its possessor among the intellectually progressive men of the day.

"What Man Has Done Man Can Do"

ABRAHAM LINCOLN at twenty-two simply knew how to read, write and cipher.

ANDREW JOHNSON, President of the United States, NEVER ATTENDED SCHOOL. His wife was his only teacher. She taught him how to read.

HIRAM SIBLEY, formerly President of the Western Union Telegraph Co., left his father's farm at fifteen to learn a trade. After having given away millions of dollars during his life-time, he died worth many millions more a few years ago.

PETER COOPER, whose name will ever be cherished in the hearts of the many thousands of young men and young women who have been graduated, free of expense, from the night school of Cooper Institute, himself never had more than one year's schooling.

Now if these men, under such unfavorable circumstances, succeeded in achieving fame and fortune by dint of industrious application to study and work, why need any of the tens of thousands of young people who have in them the making of great men and great women, despair of reaching the height of their ambition with such an opportunity as this, placing within their easy reach everything necessary for a liberal education?

HOW TO GET THE WORLD-WIDE ENCYCLOPEDIA:

Send us One Dollar, and your full name, with full shipping instructions, and immediately we will send you the Whole TWELVE Volumes of THE WORLD-WIDE ENCYCLOPEDIA, neatly boxed, freight charges payable at your end.

After that, send us One Dollar each month until paid.

No simpler plan was ever devised. You cannot go astray. The terms of easy payment, which we have adopted, will place within the reach of every man and woman, young and old, who is fortunate enough to act quickly, the most serviceable Encyclopedia for everyday use which the world has ever produced.

Remember, it is ONE DOLLAR DOWN to get the books, and then One Dollar each Month until paid. These Payments are so easy that you will never miss them, and while you are paying for the books, you are enjoying all the advantages which the possession of this great work confers.

THE NEW BUILDING FOR THE BOYS' CLUB OF NEW YORK

SECRETARY HENRY S. BROOKS

AN IDEAL CLUB FOR TENEMENT LADS

The Pioneer of its Kind, Opened in New York Amid the Multitudes of the East Side—A Noble Philanthropy

ONE of the most beneficent institutions of the city of New York is that which has this week formally occupied its magnificent home. The Boys' Club is now housed in a building appropriate to its grand work. On the corner of Tenth street, overlooking Tompkins Park, is the substantial edifice which is the finest, most commodious and best equipped of all the buildings devoted to its work in the United States. Thanks to the interest taken in the Club by Mr. E. H. Harriman, the President, who advanced the necessary funds, the site costing about sixty thousand dollars was purchased, and the building costing one hundred thousand to erect, and twenty thousand to furnish, has been completed.

Great care and much skill have been devoted to rendering it absolutely suitable to its work. With the roof, which is an important and popular resort, it is six stories high. In the basement are the baths, the storage rooms, carpenter's shop and the offices. On the first floor is the great general room, with chairs, tables, and rooms for storing and delivering games. On the second floor is the large meeting room for the Seniors, and rooms for special games. The third floor contains the library, the natural history museum, and five rooms for the use of the smaller clubs. The fourth floor is devoted to the gymnasium, equipped with the most modern apparatus; a room for music, and another for drawing. On the fifth floor is the running track and the Superintendent's rooms. The roof, well fenced in, will be in the hot summer days a place of welcome relief from the scorching pavements and the fetid stench of the gutters. The value of such a building among the teeming population of the east side of the city can be realized only by a visit in the evening, when the boys have finished the day's schooling and the youths have come from their work. Without it, the street corners and the questionable resorts of the neighborhood would be the only places for social meeting and recreation. They would not stay in the little tenement rooms that serve as their homes, but would go somewhere to meet their friends, even at the risk of contracting bad habits and encountering temptation. The club meets the need. There they are welcome as to their own, in virtue of their membership, and can spend their evenings according to their taste. Often no less than eight hundred boys may be counted in the general room in an evening, talking with their chums, laughing and joking before they separate for their individual pursuits in the library, the gymnasium, the singing class, or the game of checkers.

The principle of the club is not educational, though indirectly it has proved a most valuable educational and moral ways of spending their evenings. In the winter an evening in the gymnasium, the library or the play-room in a warm and well-ventilated building, is more pleasant and distinctly more safe from a moral point of view than roaming the streets, or sitting in the cheap theatre. The boys appreciate the club, count membership in it an honor and a privilege, and are eager to introduce their friends. There is generally a waiting list of two or three hundred ready to fill any vacancies in the membership that arise from death or removal to other cities.

In the summer the Boys' Club has its appropriate diversions. The schools are closed and the boys who are employed in offices and factories can get short vacations. The Club has obtained the consent of the Government to organize a camp on Plum Island in the Sound, and thither such boys as can spare a week are taken in relays of three hundred at a time. During their stay, they spend some of their time in garden work, which is a new enjoyment to the city-dweller and prevents their growing weary of the continual outdoor play. They delight in carrying back to their homes the flowers, fruits and vegetables which happen to be at maturity when they return. This, of course, involves considerable expense, which is met in part by a special fund named in honor of the late William Carey, who while was on the Editorial staff of the Century Magazine, took a deep interest in the Club and organized the camp.

Besides the camp there are appropriate outings on Saturdays and holidays for those boys who are unable to leave the city for a week at a time.

Thus the Boys' Club is making many lives happier, and is striving to lead the future citizens to take pleasure in wholesome recreations, to get them away from low and vulgar tastes and habits, and develop in them a love for pure and elevating occupations. Mr. Tabor, whose influence pervades the club, is regarded as a friend by all its members, and is consulted by the boys in many matters, which show how the institution is gradually leading them to a greater activity of conscience and a desire for usefulness.

The expenses of the Club are now about fifteen thousand dollars a year, which is not a large sum to pay for such benefits as it confers. Patriotic citizens who have the welfare of the city at heart, would do well to visit the Club, examine its work and contribute to its income.

agency. Everything is free from constraint and informal in character. Its classes are only such as the boys themselves organize and manage, though Superintendent Tabor is always glad to have them do so and places facilities at their disposal. The main purpose is to afford them a place for meeting where wholesome influences are at work, and to encourage them in pure

HARNESS On and Off

TEXT—I. Kings 20: 11:

"Let not him that girdeth on his harness boast himself as he that putteth it off"

HARNESS is the obsolete word for armor. It means harness for the man, not harness for the beast; harness for battle, not harness for the plough. The ancient armor consisted of helmet for the head, breastplate and shield for the heart, greaves for the feet. The text makes a comparison between a man enlisting for some war and a veteran returning, the one putting on the armor, and the other putting it off.

Benhadad, the king of Syria, thought he could easily overcome the king of Israel; indeed, the Syrian was so sure of the victory that he spread an antebellum banquet. With thirty-two kings, he was celebrating what they were going to do. There were in all thirty-three kings at the carousal, and their condition is described in the Bible, not as convivial or stimulated exaltation, but drunk. Their gilded and bannered pavilions were surrounded by high-mettled horses, neighing and champing, and hitched to chariots such as kings rode in. Benhadad sends officers over to the king of Israel, demanding the surrender of the city, saying: "Thou shalt deliver me thy silver, and thy gold, and thy wives, and thy children," and afterward sends other officers, saying that the palace of the king will be searched, and everything Benhadad wants he will take without asking. Then the king of Israel called a council of war, and word is sent back to Benhadad that his unreasonable demand will be resisted. Then Benhadad sends another message to the king of Israel, a message full of arrogance and bravado, practically saying: "We will destroy you utterly. I will grind Samaria into the dust, but there will not be dust enough to make a handful for each one of my troops." Then the king of Israel replied to Benhadad, practically saying: "Let me see you do what you say. You royal braggart, you might better have postponed your banquet until after the battle, instead of spreading it before the battle. You huzza too soon. 'Let not him that girdeth on his harness boast himself as he that putteth it off.'"

An avalanche of courage and righteousness, the Israelitish army came down on Benhadad and his host. It was a hand-to-hand fight, each Israelite hewing down a Syrian. Benhadad, on horseback, gets away with some of the cavalry, but is only saved for a worse defeat, in which one hundred thousand Syrian infantry were slaughtered in one day. Now we see the sarcasm and the epigrammatic power of the message of my text sent by the king of Israel to Benhadad: "Let not him that girdeth on his harness boast himself as he that putteth it off."

Premature Boasting

All up and down history we see such too early boasting. Soult, the Marshal of France, was so certain that he would conquer that he had a proclamation printed, announcing himself king of Portugal, and had a grand feast prepared for four o'clock that afternoon, but before that hour he fled in ignominious defeat, and Wellington, of the conquering host, sat down at four o'clock at the very banquet the Marshal of France had ordered for himself. Charles V. invaded France, and was so sure of the conquest that he requested Paul Jovius, the historian, to gather together a large amount of paper on which to write the story of his many victories, but disease and famine seized upon his troops, and he retreated in dismay. So Benhadad's behavior has been copied in all ages of the world. It will be my object, among other lessons, to show that he who puts off the armor having finished the battle is more to be congratulated than he who begins.

First, I find encouragement in this subject for the aged who have got through the work and struggle of earthly life. My venerable friends, if you had had at twenty-five years of age full appreciation of what you would have to go through in the thirties and the forties and the fifties of your lifetime, you would have been appalled. Fortunately, the bereavements, the temptations, the persecutions, the hardships were curtailed from your sight. With more or less fortitude you passed through the crises of pain and sadness and disappointment and fatigue, and still live to recount the divine help that sustained you. At twenty or thirty years of your age, at the tap of the drum you put on the harness. Now, at sixty or seventy or eighty, you are peacefully putting it off. You would not want to try the battle of life over again. So many of just your temperament, and with as good a starting, and as fine a parentage, and seemingly with as much equipage of character as you had, have made complete shipwreck that you would not want again to run the risks. Though you can look back and see many mistakes, the next time you might make worse mistakes. Instead of being depressed over the fact that you are being counted out or omitted in the great undertakings of the church and the world, rejoice that you have a right to hang up your helmet, and sheathe your sword, and free your hands from the gauntlets, and your feet from the boots of mail.

At the Soldiers' Home in the suburbs of this city I often admire the peaceful and contented looks of the venerable heroes as they sit under the trees or go in and out the fine abode that our Government has appropriately provided for them. They are not longing for other Chapultepecs. They do not want to undertake another South Mountain. Their foot does not ache to get into the stirrup of the cavalryman. They are not longing for the "hard tack" of the soldiers' breakfast along the Chickahominy. They have no desire for another ride in the ambulance to the field hospital. When the Spanish war broke out they sometimes wondered if their rheumatic knee would allow them to keep step in a march, and if their sight was good enough to see an advancing foe, and if their ear was alert enough to hear the command, "Charge!" But for the most part they are glad that there is no more war for them. So let all of the aged in peace with God, through the blessed Christ, cultivate contentment and thank the Lord their Sedan has been fought, and the war is over. "Let not him that girdeth on his harness boast himself as he that putteth it off."

The Worker at Rest

There are old farmers who cannot do one more day's work. What harvests they raised in 1870! They knew the rotation of crops as well as they knew the rotation of the seasons. Under what blistering suns they swung the scythe and the cradle. Through what deep snows they drew the logs or cut their way to the foddering of the cattle. What droughts, what freshets, what insectile invasion they remember. To clothe and feed and educate the household they went through toils and self-sacrifices that the world knew but little about. Rest, aged man. Let the boys do the shoveling and threshing and cutting and sweating. You have put the harness off, and do not try to put it on again.

There are old mechanics that can no more shove the plane or pound with the hammer or bore with the bit or run up the ladder to the scaffolding. Master mechanics they were, or subordinates who wrought faithfully in the work of house or barn or shipbuilding. You have a right to quit. You have finished your task. Be thankful that your work is done.

Then there are aged physicians. What tragedies of pain and accident they have witnessed. How much suffering they have assuaged. How many brave battles they have fought with lancet and cataclysm. How many fevers they cooled. How many broken bones they set. How many paroxysms they quieted. How many anxious days they passed when they knew that human lives depended upon their skill and fidelity. They drove back death from many a cradle. Instead of becoming hardened at the sight of suffering, their sympathies deepened, as with aged Dr. Valentine Mott, when standing before his students in clinical department and a child was about to be operated upon in surgery, he said: "Gentlemen, here are surgeons who will do this work as well as I can, and you will excuse me if I leave the room, for as I get older I cannot as composedly witness pain as once I could, especially the suffering of little children." God comfort and bless the old doctors, allopathic, homeopathic, hydropathic, and eclectic, and make them willing to be out of practice. Before long they will hear the benediction of him who said, "I was sick and ye visited me."

Good and Faithful Servants

And there are the old ministers. Once they were foremost in general assemblies, and conferences, and associations. They have preached in Pentecosts. They have stood by Christian deathbeds and seen Elijahs go up in flaming chariots of glory. The Gospel they preached for fifty or sixty years illumines their every feature. They have stopped preaching, for their breath is short, or their nerves are a-jangle, or they lose their thread of discourse, or suffer from confusion of ideas. Cheer up aged dominies and doctors. The Bible says God forgets our sins when we repent of them, but he never forgets faithful services rendered. He remembers that revival, where you stood watching the souls that came "as clouds and as doves to the windows." He has indicated by your physical or mental condition that it is time for you to stop. Be content to stop. Your helmet bears the mark of many a battle-ax; your sword is bent from many a holy struggle; your shield is dented with the thrust of many a spear. Now hang up the armor with gladness. "Let not him that girdeth on his harness boast himself as he that putteth it off." That was a suggestive and tender scene when the aged Mr. Finlay, of Edinburgh, said to a girl sinking in rapid decline: "Weel, my dear, you're afore me. nineteen, and are almost across the river. I'm seventy, and may be I'll have some hard steps to hear its ripple. Oh, lassie, this is a sweet day for you'll be home first."

Beguiled by Self-Confidence

Again, I learn from Benhadad's behavior, the dom of boasting of what one is going to do. Two sages had been sent to the king of Israel, both full of insolence and braggadocio. With bribe in hand, he is talking with the royal about what he will do with the spoils of the vict is going to achieve that afternoon. He takes granted that Samaria will surrender. He gives mand for the capture of some of the inhabita Samaria who are approaching, saying: "Whether be come out for peace, take them alive; or whether be come out for war, take them alive." But beho fugitive king in frightened retreat before sunder. Better not tell boastfully what you are going. Wait until it is done. You do well to lay out your but there are so many mistakes and disappointment life that you may not be able to carry out your and there is no need of invoking the world's derisio caricature. Napoleon was so sure of conquering land, Scotland and Ireland, that he had a medal celebrating the conquest which he never made. That medal was represented his own crowned head.

Dr. Pendleton and Mr. Saunders were talking time of persecution under Queen Mary. Saunders trembling and afraid, but Pendleton said: "What Man, there is much more cause for me to fear than You are small, and I have a large bodily frame; you will see the last piece of this flesh consumed ashes before I ever forsake Jesus Christ and his which I have professed." Not long after Saunders faint-hearted, gave up his life for Christ's sake, Pendleton, who had talked so big, played coward, gave up religion when the test came. Wilberforce not tell what he was going to do with the slave but how much he accomplished is suggested by Brougham's remark concerning Wilberforce after his decease: "He went to heaven with eight hundred thousand broken fetters in his hand." Someone, trying to dissuade Napoleon from his invasion of Russia, said: "Man proposes, but God disposes." Napoleon replied: "I propose and I dispose." But you remember Moscow and ninety-five thousand corpses in snowbanks. The only kind of boasting that prospered was that of Paul, who cried out: "I glory in the cross of Christ;" and that of John Newton, who declared: "I am not what I ought to be; I am not what I wish to be; I am not what I hope to be, but by the grace of God I am not what I was."

Historical Warnings

Do not boast of your moral strength. One of the most brilliant men of the nineteenth century, having temporarily reformed from inebriacy, stood on the platform of Broadway Tabernacle, New York, and said: "Were this great globe one crystalline, and I were offered the possession of it if I would drink one glass of brandy, I would refuse with scorn; and I want no religion to help me." But that same man died at Poughkeepsie drunk pauper. Better underrate than overrate ourselves.

My subject is also a refutation of the famous sentiment that God is on the side of the heaviest artillery. From all I can read about this struggle, Benhadad spoke the truth when he said: "The gods do so on me, and more also, if the dust of Samaria shall suffice for handfuls for all the people that follow me." He was so confident that with his superior numbers he could defeat the king of Israel and capture Samaria that he left the work for a short afternoon. He is at noon wassail with his royal associates. The battle of Waterloo was not opened until twenty-five minutes of twelve o'clock at noon, but that was because the ground was too wet to move the artillery. Benhadad waits until afternoon because he is over-confident. God is not on the side of the most swords, or the most war chariots, or the most cannon, if they be in the wrong, but on the side of the right. How such a preposterous sentiment as have mentioned should have gained sway I know not when all history proclaims the opposite. Describing the very next battle in which Benhadad fought and was miserably defeated, the Bible says: "The children of Israel pitched before them like two little flocks of kids, but the Syrians filled the country." How insignificant were the unarmed Israelites, half-starved and unorganized, compared with Pharaoh's host, on foot, on horseback, and charioted! But the waves of the Red Sea took part in the conflict, parting to let the pursued pass.

coming together to destroy the pursuers. The Amalekites and Amalekites were like grasshoppers for Gideon, but three hundred men under Gideon came with their only weapons pitchers and lamps and trumpets, and as they held up the lamps and threw down the pitchers and blew the trumpets, the flash of the lights and the crash of the instruments and the crash of the trumpets made their enemy fall back in wild terror.

So, that my text takes it for granted that you have the harness; else, how can you take it off? The harness—a thirty years', a forty years', or a fifty years' harness. Helmet you must have, for the battles of scepticism and agnosticism are aimed at your head. Every possible effort will be made to make you go wrong. The young man who gets his head filled with wrong notions about God, about Christ, about the Bible, about the great beyond, is already captured. Put on the helmet, the latchet well adjusted under the chin. It is right, and you will act right. Yes,

That is the most important part of your being to be protected. That decides what you love and what you hate; what you hope for and what you despise. That decides earthly happiness and eternal destiny. Keep your heart pure, and the life will be pure. Have the heart corrupt, and your actions will be corrupt. Oh, if all of us might have a new heart, covered with a heavenly-wrought breastplate! Yes, greaves for the legs. So many dangerous roads are we compelled to take. So many people tread on sharp prongs of temptation, and go lame and limping all the rest of their lives. Iron-mailed shoe for the foot.

Young man, see that you have on a complete armor. It looks bright now, and it seems as if you could march right on without opposition or attack, but be not deceived. There are hidden foes ready to halt you on every way. The same cup that Benhadad drank out of before his defeat will be offered to effect your defeat. His intoxicated brain saw victory when there was nothing but rout and ruin. What work Benhadad's army made for Benhadad's army! What shipwrecks on the sea, what disasters on the land, caused by inflaming the tongue upon the tongue to set seething the brain! How many kings of thought and influence, with crowns brighter than the one Benhadad wore, have, by strong drink, been put into flight as base as that in which Benhadad rode! "Give them to me," says the demon of bribery. "Give them to me; hand them down—the mightiest legislators of the land. I will thicken their tongue; I will bloat their cheek; I will stagger their step; I will damn their soul. Hand them down to me—the physician out of his laboratory, the attorney from the court room, the minister of the Gospel from the altar of God. Hand them down to me—the queens of the drawing-room, and I will disgrace their names, and cast their homes, and throw them down farther than Nebel fell to the dogs that crunched her carcass." We hold our breath in horror as once in a while we hear of some one, either by accident or suicide, going over Niagara Falls, but the tides, the depths, the awful surges of intemperance are every hour of every day washing scores of immortals down into unfathomed gulfs. Suicides by the hundreds of thousands! Suicides by the million! Beware of the cup out of which Benhadad drank personal and national demolition! Yes, you must have full armor. There are temptations to an impure life all the time multiplying and intensifying. Read in private and discussed afterward by the refined and elegant in parlors are books poisoned from lid to lid with impurities. Loose characters in the novel applauded by rhetorical pens, and proprieties of life caricatured as prudery, and infidelity of behavior put in a way to excite sympathy and half approval. My wonder is not that so many go astray, but my wonder is that ten times as many are not debauched. There are influences at work which, if unarrested, will turn our cities into Sodoms and Gomorrah ready for the hail and fire and brimstone of God's indignation.

Yes, you must have full armor, for there are all the temptations to gaming practices, either in gambling halls or in the money markets, buying what they never paid for and selling what they can never deliver, first borrowing what they cannot return and stealing what they cannot borrow. All hours of the day and all hours of the night are vast sums of money passing fraudulently, for gambling in all cases is fraud, whether it be a twenty-five cent prize package or a crash in Northern Pacific, which made Lombard street and the Bourse aghast and shook the nations with financial earthquake.

O, yes, you need the harness on until God tells you to take it off. In olden time it was leathern armor, or chain armor, or ribbed armor, fashioned in ancient foundry, but no one can give you the outfit you need except God, who is master of this world and the infernal world, from which ascend the mightiest hostilities. Lay hold of God. Nothing but the arm of Omnipotence is strong enough for the tempted.

Young man, put on the entire Gospel outfit. If you have come from the country to live in the city, imitate the example of a young man who arrived in New York on Saturday night, intending the following Monday to enter his place of employment. On Sunday morning, carrying out the good advice before leaving his country home, he went to church. Standing at the door, he was abashed at the beauty and fashion and wealth swept through the doors of the sanctuary, and he dared not go in. As he was about turning to go away, a gentleman said: "Have you a seat, young man?" "No, sir?" "Do you belong to the city?" "No, sir." "Where is your home?" "In the country." "How long have you been in the city?" "I came in last night." "What are you going to do here?" "I hope to go into business to-morrow." "That is right."

You Have Begun Well

young man. Never forsake the God of your fathers. Come; I will give you a seat in my pew." The next morning the young man presented his letter in business circles. "What do you want, young man?" said the Scotch merchant. "I want to get credit on some leather, upper and sole." "Have you references?" "I think I can get references. My father has friends here." "Young man, did I not see you yesterday in Mr. Lenox's pew?" "I do not know, sir. I was at church, and a kind gentleman asked me to sit in his pew." "Yes, young man, that was Robert Lenox. I will trust any one that Mr. Lenox invites into his pew. You need not trouble yourself about references. When these goods are gone, come and get more." That young man became an eminent merchant, and more than that, a Christian merchant, and he attributed all his success to that first Sabbath in the city. Young man just arrived, put yourself under good influences your first day in town. There hangs your helmet; take it down. There is your breastplate; adjust it. There is all the harness for safety and triumph; put it on.

Also see in my subject the folly of underestimating the enemy. That was Benhadad's fatal mistake. He could whip them before sundown. He wanted less than half a day to capture Samaria and make the king of Israel capitulate. But what he thought was so easy turned out to be the impossible. Better overestimate than underestimate the other side. We who are trying to make the world what it ought to be, contend not with homunculi. We wrestle not with striplings; we have a whole army of antagonists trying to halt the King of God and overthrow the cause of righteousness. If we secure the victory, it will be a struggle as fierce as when the Greeks and Persians met at Marathon, as when Darius and Alexander grappled each other at Arbella, as when Joan of Arc rode triumphantly at Orleans, as when the Russians met the Swedes at Pultowa, as when Marlborough commanded the allied armies at Blenheim. Those were fights for earthly crowns and dominions, but the fight that now goes on between all the allied armies of heaven and all the allied armies of hell, is to settle whether God or Satan is to have possession of this planet.

I congratulate all those who are now in the thickest of life's battle that the time is coming when the struggle will end and you will put the harness off, helmet and greaves and breastplate having

Fulfilled Their Mission

You cannot in one visit to London Tower see all. But no part of London Tower will more interest you than the armory, in which is skilfully and impressively arranged a collection of all styles of armor worn between the thirteenth and eighteenth centuries, suggesting five hundred years of conflict—cuirass, and neck-guard, and chin-piece, and lance-rest, and gauntlet, and girdle, and mailed apron. You see just how from head to heel those old-time warriors were defended against sharp weapons that would cut or thrust or bruise, and allowing them to come out of battle unhurt when otherwise they would have been slain.

O, ye soldiers of Jesus Christ, when the war of life is over and the victors rest in the soldiers' home on the heavenly heights, perhaps there may be in the city of the sun a tower of spiritual armor such as encased the warriors for Christ in earthly combat. Some day we may be in that armory and hear the heroes talk of how they fought the good fight of faith, and see them with the scars of wounds forever healed, and look at the weapons of offense and defense with which they became more than conquerors. In that tower of heaven, as the weapons of the spiritual conflict are examined, St. Paul may point out to us the armor with which he advised the Ephesians to equip themselves, and say: "That is the shield of faith. That is the helmet of salvation. That is the girdle of truth. That is the breastplate of righteousness. Those are the mailed shoes in which they were shod with the preparation of the Gospel." There and then you may recount the contrast between the day when you enlisted in Christian conflict and the day when you closed it in earthly farewell and heavenly salutation; and the text, which has so much meaning for us now, will have more meaning for us then: "Let not him that girdeth on his harness boast himself as he that putteth it off."

STUDYING THE PROPHECIES

CLOSING SESSIONS OF THE RECENT PROPHECIC CONFERENCE AT BOSTON, MASS.

PROMINENT SPEAKERS AT THE RECENT PROPHECIC CONFERENCE AT BOSTON, MASS.

THE closing sessions of the Boston Prophetic Conference, the earlier sessions of which I described last week, were characterized by an intense and profound interest. The audiences, even on Saturday, on which day it is seldom that religious meetings are held, were among the largest of the Conference. It is evident that a much greater number of Christian people are interested in the doctrine of the Pre-millennial Advent than is generally supposed. It is probable that the result of the Conference will be a revival of interest, both in the pulpit and the pew, in the unfulfilled prophecies, and a keener watch for the signs, national, political and social, which are to precede the great consummation. The addresses were in no sense sensational. There was an absence of the attempts, which the late Dr. Cumming made popular half a century ago, to fix the dates of fulfillment, but the expectation was no less confident.

Rev. W. J. Erdman was the chief speaker at the Friday afternoon session. His topic was the situation and condition of Israel during the times of the Gentiles. It is conceded that there is a suspension of prophetic time during this period which comes between the sixty-ninth and seventieth week of Daniel's computation, and its length remains uncertain, except for the vague reference in Deuteronomy. During this period Israel is a despised and scattered people and will remain so until the "Times of the Gentiles" are completed.

Rev. Henry Varley gave an address at the same session, showing that the coming and world-wide supremacy of Christ are the world's great need, and not until that event occurs may we hope for the equitable adjustment of social conditions and the cessation of wars.

On Saturday afternoon Rev. Robert Cameron read an able paper on the eschatology of Jesus, showing how the confusion that has arisen between the prophecies relating to the destruction of Jerusalem, and those relating to his second coming, disappears under careful analysis.

Rev. E. C. Gordon, of Lexington, Mo., spoke at the evening session on "The Second Advent and the Future Life." He was followed by Dr. Henry M. King, of Providence, R. I., on "The Testimony of Christian Experience to the Word of God."

At the close of Dr. King's address, the Rev. W. J. Erdman presented a resolution, which the Conference adopted, to the effect that a committee be appointed, with headquarters in Philadelphia, to promote belief in the doctrine of the personal coming of Jesus Christ. To assist this committee in its work, the Conference put itself on record as being in entire accord with evangelical doctrines, except in so far as evangelicism denied the personal coming of Christ.

SPIRITUAL CONQUEST

..THE PROMISE OF POWER FULFILLED

INTERNATIONAL SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON FOR JAN. 12.
ACTS 2: 1-36

By Dr. and Mrs. Wilbur F. Crafts

GOLDEN TEXT: ACTS 2: 39
THE PROMISE IS UNTO YOU, AND TO YOUR CHILDREN

AS God commanded Israel to conquer the Land of Promise, so, in our last lesson, he charged the new Christian Church to conquer the world. The Israelites heard there were giants and walled cities in Canaan, and amid such difficulties felt they were as "grass-hoppers." That would have been well if they had also remembered that God was pledged to give them power to do whatever he commanded. When that fearful generation had died in the wilderness, God led their children to victory, opening the Jordan, toppling the walls of Jericho, terrifying the giants. The apostles, commissioned to conquer the world, also felt their own insufficiency, but were driven by it to God, and received the power from on high.

It was also as when Israel returned from the captivity to rebuild the temple. The opposition and accusations of the Samaritans having stopped this work, which the Hebrew princes Zerubbabel and Joshua were superintending, the prophet Zechariah was given a vision to encourage them. A mountain, seemingly insurmountable, rose in the path of the temple builders, but an angel said: "Who art thou, O great mountain? Before Zerubbabel thou shalt become a plain; not by might, nor by power, but by my Spirit, saith the Lord" (Zech. 4: 6, 7). Whereupon the mountain disappeared. To Christianize such a world as the apostles looked out upon seemed an insurmountable task, but more than half the world is now under Christian governments. Its complete Christianization is waiting on the Church's baptism of power.

The Lesson Story

God's pen is his finger, and his writing is with fire. King Belshazzar saw the part of the hand that wrote on the wall of his palace, and his guilty conscience trembled in fear even before he knew the meaning of the words. He had even more reason to tremble when he was told by the prophet Daniel that God was writing his sentence of punishment.

God wrote the Ten Commandments in fire on two slabs of beautiful blue stone called lapis lazuli, so say the Jewish rabbis. On the very day of Pentecost that celebrated that giving of the law as the lesson-story of to-day tells us, there was another instance of God's fire-writing, but this time it was picture-writing, not words, and the pictures were tongues of fire. We see on old obelisks and tablets how men used to make pictures stand for words. So God wrote on that day of Pentecost, nineteen hundred years ago.

Who saw the picture-writing? Peter and James and John and the other apostles, and other friends of Jesus who had seen him ascend from Mt. Olivet to return to his home in heaven. They had heard his good-by words telling them to go to a certain room in Jerusalem, and wait there until he should send them the Holy Spirit to be their helper. They had been in that room for ten days, praying and waiting and talking together about the loving words and deeds of Jesus, when, all at once, the fire-pictures were seen, one over the head of each person, in a shape like a tongue, and there was a sound in the room as if the tongues were speaking, a sound like that of a rushing mighty wind, such as would be made if many people were talking together in many languages. It was God's way of saying to them: "Now, you can go out, and preach the Gospel in many tongues, on fire with enthusiasm, to the crowds of people who are in the city from many countries." There were more than a million of visitors in Jerusalem at that time. They were mostly Jews, who had come from far-away lands to be there at the time of the great harvest-home festival called Pentecost. It was a Thanksgiving feast, and a time of great rejoicing. One might have thought of Babel as he listened to the people in the streets, speaking in different languages. Those apostles and friends of Jesus did not need a prophet Daniel to tell them the meaning of the tongues-of-fire-pictures, but they left the room at once, and went out among the people to teach them about Jesus. God had said in tongues-of-fire-pictures, "I will help your tongues to speak." And how wonderfully he did help them, for they found themselves able to speak to any and to all persons in their many different languages! How astonished the people were to hear them! They were all the more surprised, because these friends of Jesus who thus spoke were not wise and learned men, but only plain fishermen. The people looked at each other, and asked, "What does this mean?" They had never seen nor heard anything like it before. Then they said: "They must have been drinking wine." But the words which they heard were very different from the foolish babbling of drunkards. Not all of the people said unkind things, but some listened, and heard about Jesus with gladness. As many as three thousand people that day became the friends of Jesus. The apostles, astonished at the power their words had, must have remembered what Jesus had once said to them: "He that believeth on me, the works that I do shall he do also; and greater works shall he do; because I go unto my Father."

God's gift of tongues is still blessing the world, but in another way. In every part of the world people are being taught about Jesus in the language wherein they were born, for God gives preachers and teachers power to learn the different languages, and, better still, he makes them able to translate his Bible, so that every man may read for himself about Jesus in his own tongue.

Illustration and Application

Pentecost, as the name implies, comes fifty days after the Passover, and celebrates the birth of the Jewish Church at Sinai, when the law was received from God on tables of stone. It was therefore a fitting day for the birth of the new Christian Church in another fire writing of God, written this time on the fleshly tablets of burning hearts, that would pour forth their divinely enkindled love for God and man in tongues of fire. But Pentecost, in its spiritual significance, is not to be thought of as a day forever past, but rather as a type of what every new day should be in this dispensation of the Spirit. Thirty-five times the Bible speaks of the giving of power for service. We are to abide constantly in the Spirit since the Church was lifted to the lofty plateau of the new spiritual life on that first Pentecost. But we are also to seek special endowment of power for special duties, and receive it again and again in new Pentecosts every year. Now that we have abundant opportunities to learn "other tongues," that part of the miracle need not be repeated. But we may and should have tongues of fire for enthusiastic, effective witnessing of Christ at home and abroad. The promise is to us, and to our children (Joel 2: 21).

Lord, we believe to us and ours
The apostolic promise given;
We wait the Pentecostal powers
The Holy Ghost sent down from heaven.

If every one that asks may find,
If still thou dost on sinners fall,
Come as the mighty, rushing wind,
Great grace be now upon us all.

The Church, and every church and every Christian is called to give the world a book of Acts, but in order to do that they must first have a day of Pentecost, and in order to do that they must first of all know of the Holy Spirit through preachers and teachers. One can not effectively teach of the Holy Spirit who has not himself been taught of the Spirit from within. In order to work or witness effectively, one must first see God in the holy of holies of his own heart. Dr. S. F. Upham, of Drew Theological Seminary, is accustomed to remind his students that many hungry hearts in the pews will each Sabbath look up in their faces with the unspoken question, "Man, have you seen God this week?" Demosthenes, being asked, "What is the first essential of eloquence?" replied: "The first is action, and the second is action, and the third is action," by which he meant power to move to action. The speaker has failed who has only moved men to admiration. When Demosthenes was most eloquent he was probably himself unconscious of his eloquence, and his hearers forgot to compliment, but cried, "Let us march against Philip; let us fight for our liberties; let us conquer or die." The "tongue of fire" must become as a "pillar of fire" to lead men on to the land of promise.

When one's motive is anything less in seeking power, he will be refused, as Simon, who saw that by laying on the apostles' hands the Holy Spirit was given, and offered money for the same power that he might, as a divine healer, win money and the admiration of multitudes. His motive destroyed his prayer, and brought a curse instead of a blessing: "Thy money perish with thee, because thou hast thought the gift of God could be purchased with money." Even a good man may desire the Holy Spirit in part because of the admiration and success it will bring. We must desire it that we may work and witness to the glory of God and the good of men. Selfishness, even in its higher forms, bars out the Spirit.

An amusing story is told concerning the late Jean Ingelow, the poet. She was once staying with some friends in the country, when she remarked in conversation that although she had often written of nightingales, she had never heard one sing. So, one night, the whole company went out in the moonlight especially to hear them, and when for many minutes the nightingales had been singing most beautifully, they were startled by Miss Ingelow's asking, "What are they singing? I don't hear anything!" It was then found that the poetess had a great dread of drafts, and before going in the night air had filled her ears with cotton-wool.

It may be cotton as property or some other absurd business, or it may be a political "bee" buzzing in the ears of some syren song of pleasure that crowds out the Spirit. That hath emptied ears to hear, let him hear what the Spirit saith.

Let us be sure of this, no intellectual preparation for Christian work, no external helps of architecture or printing press, can take the place of a heart and tongue on fire with holy enthusiasm. A Mohammedan neophyte, impressed by the story of Omar's victories, made a great effort to visit the conqueror that he might see the sword with which they had been won. The sword proved to be insignificant, but Omar answered his disappointment by saying that the secret of victory is in the warrior's arm and heart. The Church before had so much education, never such abundant in nations of every kind, but we still find victories only in proportion as the invisible sword of the Spirit is kept bright in hearts. In the words of an ancient proverb, "Our souls must be bathed in heaven."

Many have seen the striking experiment in lectures on the life of a candle blown out by one man's breath, lighted again by another whose mouth had been filled with oxygen. Again and again the first man blows the candle out, and another, in a merry contest, blows it back to life. This is because in the lungs of the first man the oxygen has been taken out of the air in natural breathing, and only nitrogen and carbon dioxide are exhaled; while the other man's mouth is filled with breathed oxygen. So one man's words fall dead, while another's give life.

because the latter has the divine Spirit in his soul. Infidel meetings are usually so dull and without enthusiasm. Professor Joy, having gone to a meeting of Positivists, reported that he found "three persons who had no God." On the other hand, how mightily the Spirit of God worked through and in Mr. Moody, whose life was a new book of Acts indeed. When he was holding meetings in Boston, a gentleman from St. Louis was in that city on business. The Boston friend whom he had come to see invited him to go to the Tabernacle. He declined, saying that the Tabernacle was no place for him. Subsequently he thought better of the invitation, and, without the knowledge of his Boston friend, he spent an evening at the Tabernacle. The next morning he reported himself to his friend, and said, "I heard Moody last night, and I am troubled. I cannot stay in Boston. I'm going to fit up my business and get away just as soon as I can." He was true to his word, and that day or the next he took his departure for St. Louis. "Whither shall I go from thy Spirit, or whither shall I flee from thy presence?" There was no escape from the "trouble" which Mr. Moody's words had occasioned. The words which had been heard were fixed in his conscience, and the end was his repentance and conversion. A few days later the Boston gentleman received a letter from his St. Louis friend, bringing the glad news that he had submitted himself to God.

There is a real danger that one who receives the gift of the Spirit in unbelief, in fear of losing it by contact with the world, will steal away to enjoy it by himself, as monks and mystics do. Romanism and mysticism have so often done. But y

Protestantism has so often done. But y will lose it if you do not use it. God does not give the Spirit to make us happy, but to make us useful. Pentecost must be followed by a book of Acts. We are called out of the world to receive the Spirit, but sent back to the world to use it soon as received. It is the spiritual man who should be the front in fearless, fervent leadership of every aggressive application of Christianity, like the prophets of old, who were fearless reformers. Kipling has strongly pictured the soul whose religion has lacked the active side.

And they came to the gate within the wall, where Peter holds the key. "Stand up, stand up now, Tomlinson, and answer loud and high. The good that ye did for the sake of men or ever ye came to die—The good that ye did for the sake of men in little earth so lone!" And the naked soul of Tomlinson grew white as a rain-washed board. "This I have read in a book," he said, "and that was told to me, And this I have thought that another man thought of a prince of Muscovy!"

And Peter twirled the jangling keys in weariness and wrath. "Ye have read, ye have heard, ye have thought," he said, "and the tale is yet to run: By the worth of the body that once ye had, give answer—what have ye done?"

A Pastor's High Appreciation

Rev. T. S. Sayer, Nantucket, Mass., writes: "Your Art Portfolio and Heaven, Home and Happiness have been received. Each of the art productions is a gem and well worth a handsome frame. The book premium is something grand just the kind of reading I like to put into the hands of my daughter, and ought to be in every home. It surpassed my expectations. There is much material in it which can be utilized to brighten sermons. I shall feel that I am rendering a good service to my church and congregation by showing the premiums, and speaking of them from my pulpit and in the Sunday School."

THE MIDNIGHT SUN, SEEN FROM MT. DUNDRET

A RAIDED ILLEGAL SALOON IN THE MINING REGION

LADY OF THE HOUSE OF THE FUTURE

WORSHIP UNDER THE NORTHERN LIGHTS

A MIDWINTER SUNDAY SERVICE IN SWEDISH LAPPLAND, WITHIN THE POLAR CIRCLE

By REV. K. A. JANSSON

AR up in Sweden, in the province of Lappland, owing to the recent discovery of deposits of valuable iron ore, mining towns and mining camps have been established, and railroads are now building. The region is, in a certain way, a newly-found land.

Until a few years ago, it was inhabited only by Lapps, who drove their reindeer herds to pasture to the mountains in the summer, and down to the lakes and into the valleys in the winter. But now that has begun to be settled by people who work at the railroads and in the mines, others will come; its numerous waterfalls will supply the power for many industrial establishments; and in the near future, this region will be an important and wealthy province in Sweden.

In the short Arctic summer, which lasts scarcely more than two months, the midnight sun can be seen for weeks, and the weather at this season is very warm. During the long winter it is very cold, the temperature falling sometimes to forty or fifty degrees below zero.

But because the air is calm and dry, the cold is not so severely felt. At the time of the winter solstice, the sun remains below the horizon for weeks, and the moonshine and the aurora light, luminous and beautiful though they be, are but cold substitutes for its rays. The picture of Malmberget, with Mt. Dundret in the distance, which accompanies this article, was made from a photograph taken by moonlight between 11 and 12 o'clock P. M. On the top of Mt. Dundret, which tourists who come here usually climb to watch the midnight sun, the Tourists' Society of Sweden has built a hut for their accommodation.

Under the laws enacted for the regulation of the liquor traffic in Sweden, there is a constant struggle between the temperance people and the keepers of illegal saloons. In every mining camp, and along the railroad, such saloons are numerous. The vice of intoxication is sadly prevalent in Stockholm, the capital of Sweden, but it is much worse in these far northern communities, where at one time hundreds of intoxicated men may be seen. In the winters which the temperance people, assisted by the police, sometimes make on these illegal saloons, their work is thoroughly done. The furniture is taken out from the saloon, the building torn to the ground, and the strong drink confiscated by the police.

In Swedish Lappland, there are tracts of country covering thousands of square miles in which there is no Protestant church or minister. To this part of the country and into these mining camps our evangelical organizations are striving to carry the Gospel. It is a new and difficult field, but, considering the means at our disposal for the work, God is crowning our efforts with success.

Let me describe a Sunday at Malmberget, a mining town in Swedish Lappland, near the time of the winter solstice. The town is situated sixty miles within the Polar Circle, and the snow, which has covered the ground for more than three months, is already several yards deep on the level, with drifts which sometimes exceed twenty-five feet in depth. The days, as they draw near the time of Christmas, have become shorter and shorter, the points in the horizon where the sun rises and set have come nearer to each other day by day, until now we see the sun rise and set at the same spot. The hour is 10 A. M., when the Sunday School service in the chapel begins. Daylight has not yet come, but the children have good eyes and they manage to read and sing. At 11 A. M. the Sunday School is closed and the preaching service begins. If the day is clear, with a cloudless sky, the preacher can see by the light of the coming dawn to read the Bible without the aid of lamp zenith. The spectacle is glorious, wonderful, scarcely to be described!

The preacher must be earnest and eloquent to keep the attention of his hearers now, because all are tempted to look out through the windows upon the ever-changing spectacle. He has got through Divisions I., II., III. of his sermon and come to the application, when, at about 11.45 A. M., the sun shines forth, with half of its bright face showing above the mountain ridge, pouring out unearthly splendor over the wintry landscape. It is at meridian, and when the preacher has come to the end of his application and made his exhortation, the sun has gone down behind the mountain, and the doxology is sung in the gathering twilight. Evening has fallen when the congregation leaves the chapel, and the people who arrive at the house of worship before sunrise, depart from it after sunset to their homes.

At 5 P. M. another preaching service is held at the church, and at eight in the evening the young people have their meeting. When the young folks come out from their meeting it is night. Darkness has gathered around the mountain-top to the south: the snow is crisp under the feet; the thermometer is 40 degrees below zero; the frost is cracking in the walls of the houses. The northern lights sparkle around the pole in waves of red and blue and green, which stream far out over the sky. In the clear moonlight, one may read the smallest type, and take good pictures with the camera.

In the advancement of the Gospel in this northern province, even more than in the other parts of Sweden, the greatest difficulty encountered is to get preachers for the work. This want it is sought to meet through the building of the Scandinavian Theological School, at Gothenburg, Sweden. For the construction of this institution, which is intended to be, in the fullest sense, a Union Seminary, which adequately will accommodate and educate, on equal terms, Protestant students from Sweden, Norway and Denmark, $24,500 already have been raised at home and in America.

The additional sum of $16,000 still is needed to make up $40,500, the amount required to begin and carry the seminary building to completion. The thousands in America who are interested in the advancement of Christ's Kingdom in all lands are invited to help on this work in behalf of my countrymen who spiritually are starving for lack of the preaching of God's Word among them. Contributions for this purpose may be sent to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York; they will be gratefully received, and duly acknowledged.

or candles. By the time he has announced his text, the heavens are aglow with the most glorious colors. The whole sky, from zenith to horizon, is sparkling in hues of red, brown, yellow, violet, blue, gold—yes, in all the colors of the rainbow. The white snow, reflecting the crimson hues in the sky, is turned to red as far as the eye can see. In the south, behind Mt. Dundret, the sun, although it has not yet appeared, is somewhere creeping upward, for from this part of the horizon, pillars of many-colored lights now are towering up as high as the

The binding is very flexible. The book stays open at whatever page it may be opened. How He Values the Red Letter Bible

Wm. Roscow, Pawtucket, R. I., writes: "I was surprised and delighted at the fine appearance presented by the Red Letter Bible. It is well bound, well printed, the type is of good size and clear, and the spacing between the words well marked. The printing of the words spoken by our Saviour (as also those in the O. T. which are regarded as having reference to him) in red, is quite unique, and may possibly result

H. P. Meech, Hartford, Conn., writes: "The Art Portfolio just received. Its beauty and value were a great surprise. They are real works of art, not in mere name, but in actual fact; and I intend to have several framed. I have been a subscriber to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD for about ten years and grow more fond of it every year. There is no magazine published, at any price, that can take its place."

Methodist Stamps

A Unique Method of Interesting Young People in the Achievement of a Huge Task

THE FIVE DENOMINATIONAL STAMPS ISSUED BY THE NEW YORK TWENTIETH CENTURY M. E. FUND

HOW to interest young people in a gigantic undertaking is a problem that has been solved in an ingenious way by the Twentieth Century Thank-Offering Commission in New York. Children who will become collectors, will have, under the arrangement that has been made, for their use a beautifully variegated stamp album as a souvenir of their work. It will be filled by their own efforts and will be an object lesson, representing the results of their energy. The commission has induced the Treasury Department in Washington for the first time to give its consent to the issue of a series of denominational stamps. They are in denominations of from one cent to twenty-five and each bears the likeness of some eminent Methodist. The juvenile collector is supplied with an album, each page of which is marked off for a variety of the stamps, and when he or she receives a contribution, the stamp treasurer issues a stamp of the corresponding value, which is duly placed in the proper space. When the album is filled it will represent contributions aggregating ten dollars, and entitles the collector to a beautifully engraved certificate. The scheme is a skilful one, and will surely accomplish its design of arousing the ambition of the young people.

The one-cent stamp bears the likeness of Nathan Bangs, chief founder of the Missionary Society some seventy years ago; the two-cent stamp carries the portrait of Samuel Halstead, a leading member of the famous Allen Street Praying Band; the five-cent has the portrait of the celebrated Bishop James; the ten-cent has Daniel Curry, famous preacher, writer, leader and theologian, and the twenty-five cent stamp has the face of Joseph Longking, still living at ninety, and for many years the leader of the Bible Class in Greene Street Methodist Episcopal Church, New York. These names are all those of men eminent in Methodism in New York.

REDUCED FAC-SIMILE OF THE CERTIFICATE

As many of our readers are aware, this is part of an effort to raise a million dollars as a thank-offering to celebrate the beginning of the century. It is to consist of gifts over and above the usual offerings for churches and missions which cannot afford to have any part of their incomes diverted. It is consequently a stupendous effort, for Methodists are famous for giving as a regular habit as much as they can afford. To make a special offering so enormous implies not only generosity on the part of the givers, but persuasive eloquence of no mean order on the part of the workers. The task is confided to a commission, of which Bishop Andrews is President, and Dr. Ezra S. Tipple is Executive Secretary. We are glad to learn that the fund, which was not organized until April last, has already passed its half-way milestone, and on December 14 had reached $583,000. There is now, therefore, no doubt of the whole million being raised. It is to be divided among objects which must enlist the sympathies of all Methodists, and of broad-minded Christians of other denominations, who know how much Methodism is doing for the public good. Of the whole sum, $700,000 is to be devoted to the liquidation of the mortgages on the Methodist Episcopal Churches of New York, $100,000 toward the endowment of St. Christopher's Home for Orphan and Destitute Children in the Sunday Schools of the Methodist Episcopal Church, $100,000 toward the equipment and endowment of the Deaconess' Home and Training School, and the remaining $100,000 to increase the vested funds for the support of widows and orphans of men whose services to the church during their life ought to be rewarded by care of their dependents.

Deserving objects, all of them, and entirely worthy of the gifts of loyal Methodists. Men of other denominations may well sympathize with so praiseworthy a project, and aid our Methodist friends in achieving it.

THE GOSPEL AMID VENEZUELAN WILDS

"BUNGUES" OR RUBBER BOATS OF THE ORINOCO

THE Rev. R. W. Crichton and wife, who sailed from New York last summer to conduct missionary work among the native tribes in the interior of Venezuela, taking with them the little river steam launch La Verdad, built in the United States expressly for the work, have written to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD a letter full of hope and encouragement. Their mission work is already producing excellent results. Mr. Crichton (who writes from Ciudad Bolivar, under date Nov. 12), says: "We are again reminded of your kindly remembrance of us, having received through our treasurer by the last mail, the five dollars remitted to him for our work. I know you will rejoice at the good hand of our God upon us, and we shall appreciate a part in your earnest prayers.

"It has pleased the Lord to keep us in this one place since our arrival in Venezuela; but while this is true, our testimony has not been confined to these surroundings. Living on our little launch, surrounded by native canoes, we have been able to meet, beside those in the city, people whose homes or business are in far-away places, to whom we could give the glad tidings and by whom we could send it in tract form to their neighbors. Even these bungoes (rubber trading boats), that seem so uninviting after their two months' journey from the rubber region, and not being very attractive after being rigged up for their return voyage of four months, have been the means of such service, carrying the printed gospel page far into the interior, beyond where we could hope to get for a long time to come.

"But more than this—we are sure that our testimony is more far-reaching than we can now see or know, although we need the patience of the husbandman in our work. Our detention here has been the Lord's deliverance from conditions we could not foresee, brought on by the sad state of civil war so long continued in this country, we being kept and supplied through it all. Then, too, the Lord did not forget us when we were most sorely tried; we have just received word by a friend, of one thousand dollars placed at our disposal for the purchase of a Mission Home in this city. It comes not from one who is rich, but whose heart has gone out in behalf of this land, and we could not but recognize in it the hand of our heavenly Father, encouraging us and preparing for a further advance of his work in this field. We hope soon to see a well-located, healthy house secured for the work here, and so there will be a permanent station established as well as the launch for itinerating. Will you not help us by your earnest prayers? Our address is Ciudad Bolivar, Venezuela."

The young women from the colleges and cities of the middle west will meet at Lake Geneva, Wis., Aug. 22 to Sept. 2. The committee will hold its Eastern Conference at Silver Bay, Lake George, June 27 to July 7.

This last-named conference for several years past has been held at Northfield, Mass.

A GOSPEL LIGHTHOUSE IN CUBA

ON the steamer Morro Castle, en route for Havana from New York, we heard passengers speaking of "El Faro Cristiano" (Christian Lighthouse), and of the tracts which that mission had circulated in Cuba. Some of our traveling companions told of having visited the mission in passing through Jaruco, the Cuban town where the "Lighthouse" is located. Several said, "We read of El Faro Cristiano in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, and went out of our way to visit it." Your correspondent soon after reaching Havana made a journey to Jaruco, the headquarters of this beehive of Christian endeavor, whose declared aim is not only to evangelize this and neighboring towns, but the whole Cuban island. We had no difficulty in finding the mission, for everybody seemed to know "El Faro Cristiano." We were soon in the building which serves for meetings, and also for the home of a half dozen evangelists. Their evening service was begun, and we were delighted to find about five hundred eager listeners, many of whom appeared to be devout worshippers. We were extremely interested to see a child of eight years of age leading that congregation in song. Soon after the service (which was all in Spanish) closed, we made the acquaintance of this little lady, Senorita Angelita Rodriguez by name. She was too shy to tell her own story; but for some time she kindly entertained us with Spanish songs, while Mr. W. H. Clarke played her accompaniments.

Through her interpreter, Miss Woody, we afterwards learned her history. She is one of four children belonging to a prominent Cuban family, who have always been most friendly and helpful to the mission; her brother, only fourteen, is an excellent Bible student, and an effective worker among children. About a year ago, Angelita, while in Miss Woody's room, after eager questioning on her own part, and faithful and patient explanation on Miss Woody's, said she wanted Jesus to take her heart, and accept her for his own little girl. She knelt down in her trustful, childlike way, and in a few simple words of prayer told her desire to the Master. When she arose she said: "I am very happy," a fact which was perfectly apparent from the glad look in her large, blue eyes.

visitor to the "Lighthouse" Home, bringing with her a sunshine of affection that brightens the hearts and lightens the labors of all the inmates. People hearing of this little song-bird ask: "How can a child so young lead a congregation in song?" The simple answer is, She does it. She leads all the regular services for adults and all the gatherings for children. El Faro makes a specialty of meetings for children. The Sunday School is well attended, and there are "doll socials" during the week, at which many little dark-eyed maidens have a very happy time. Miss Woody is the leader of all this work for little ones.

The morning after the meeting, we took a stroll over the hills past the well-kept hospital, beyond the prison portals, and down to the valley, through which runs the Jaruco River. We found near the Matanzas and Havana Railroad bridge, a company who had gathered legend that one who drinks of it will never leave the town again, and that health and long life will be his portion.

Through the columns of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, great good has been brought to many souls here; through that paper Mr. Clarke was led to know of and join "El Faro Cristiano." Not because he has drunk of the enchanted fountain, but because he is doing needed and excellent work here, he expects to spend his life in Cuba, preaching and teaching the Gospel.

Opposite the mission home is a public school, and readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD will doubtless be interested in the group of teachers and scholars, who arranged themselves for the photograph sent herewith. They will be interested, too, in the three Cuban ladies who compose another group. Senoritas Caritima, Pinar and Elousia are three sisters, whose father was killed during the war, and whose beautiful home was burned to ashes. They, with their widowed mother, now live in a poor dwelling, built of palm trees, with thatched roof and earthen floor, awaiting the better days that may come when the proceeds of their crops allow them to construct another house. They have no money with which to forward the work of the mission, yet are invaluable helpers, visiting the sick and the poor, carrying beautiful flowers and tender service and cheering words wherever they go. They are regular attendants on mission services, and always come with their arms loaded with flowers, of which they raise a great many around their palm-tree home.

Until lately, nearly all the expenses of the mission have been paid by the workers themselves. They are trying now very hard to raise $4,000 with which to buy the house which is their home, and in which the meetings are held. The cause is worthy and the amount ought to be quickly secured, but the people around the mission are poor, and it is to friends in the United States that the "Lighthouse" workers must look for aid to keep the place where they have planted such a shining beacon of Christian help and hope. Readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD who are interested in the evangelization of Cuba will doubtless take pleasure in lending aid. Any letters addressed to Miss Hannah E. Forbes, United States Secretary and Treasurer for "El Faro Cristiano," Hotel Margaret, Brooklyn, N. Y., will receive prompt attention. W. here for a day's picnic. The group was typically Cuban, and our artist "snapped" a photograph, which I send you. The Jaruco is a very picturesque river, as it winds its way down to the northern coast of the island, cutting a gorge, while on either side stately palms rise, one tier above another, giving one of the finest views to be had in all Cuba. A short distance from the river's brink is the fountain, to which clings a

ANSWERED PRAYERS

B. B., Maryville, Mo., writes:

I see in your columns that you print answered prayers, and I write to tell you that I was praying all summer for an opportunity to go to school. I am at school now. I wish others to know and to be encouraged to work and pray.

A Worker in Christ's Vineyard, Jackson, Miss., writes:

For the encouragement of some timid ones, I write you about a direct answer to my prayer. The subjects to be discussed at prayer-meetings in our church are not known in advance; so we cannot think upon them and consider what we shall say. I have sometimes longed to take part, and felt that I ought to take part, but I could think of nothing to say at the right-time, and so excused myself. Christ made me feel that I was not depending enough on him, and that my silence was wrong. I began to pray that he would give me some message to speak for him. Three times has he led my thoughts aright and given me courage to speak for him. I have been enabled to deliver three messages for Jesus. Oh, timid ones, trust Christ!

Martha Seals, Bridgewater, N. C., writes:

For several days I had wrestled in prayer, begging deliverance from a sore trial. When my resources were almost exhausted, I sought refuge and strength in my Bible; reading first the fifth chapter of Romans; next my eyes accidentally fell on St. John 7: 13, and Matthew 21: 22. Then and there I put my trust alone in Jesus, and received the witness of the Spirit that my prayers were not in vain. The answer was received on the following day.

I., Canastota, N. Y., writes:

A few years ago these words came to me with renewed force, "In all thy ways acknowledge him, and he shall direct thy path." Some months ago, in business matters in our family, a great trial arose, a terrible thing that we had no control over. I saw how powerless I was in my own strength, and with childlike faith, took this trouble to my God. My prayer was answered; that misfortune, which it seemed no earthly power could stay, was stayed, and I rejoice in faith in God to answer prayer.

E. C. B. H., Kenka Park, N. Y., writes:

I wish to acknowledge answer to prayer for a young lady, who, though a professed Christian, had been living in doubt and darkness. Lately, she has found full assurance of her faith in Jesus Christ.

Mother, Illinois, writes:

The Lord has answered my prayer, and I praise his name.

M. C. K., Central City, Neb., writes:

I have received secondary answers to prayers for the safe-keeping of my children. A week ago I was stricken down with dangerous illness. My good doctor worked faithfully and wisely, and friends crowded around trying to help, but I felt the need of a greater help, and I cried from my soul, "Lord, Jesus, if it be thy will, bless the remedies being used that I may be spared for the sake of my loved ones!" My prayer was answered, and I am alive to declare to the world that God does answer prayer, and that he lendeth to the sick and to the good physicians who minister to them.

A. S., Albany, N. Y., writes:

I felt much discouraged over the condition of my dear son; but took it to God in prayer; and he heard, and I am answered.

The Art Portfolio a Joy

S. S. W. O., Philadelphia, writes: "The Art Portfolio is a joy to me. I have received it, which I return my thanks. I delight in art, and will take great pleasure in looking over so many lovely pictures of beautiful subjects as the Portfolio contains."

"The Whirligig of Time"

THIS significant phrase, so grotesque, appears in the writings of the "Bard of Avon," where the clown says: "And thus the whirligig of time brings in his revenges." The more we think of the rapid flight of time, and as the journey of life advances, it seems to be a veritable whirligig. We cannot contemplate the passing period, and noticing how unsatisfactory is the inventory of the closing year compared to the bright and flattering promises at its dawn, without confessing that "time's whirligig brings its own revenges." What the ravages of fleeting time are, every heart and home is familiar with, and to many they mean great and crushing trials. Hope is the strongest element with most people, because in every man's nature there is that which impels him to look forward, rather than backward on the highway of life.

There is infinite goodness in this arrangement, for both bravery and strength are needed to face the future, rather than to take a remorseful gaze at the past. Failures ought to be utilized as stepping-stones to future successes. Men can be valiant and heroic with this faith regnant in their souls. The past must influence our present, as it should the future. It is inspiring to believe, and act on the belief, that the mistakes and errors of what lies behind us can form rounds in the ladder by which to mount to a nobler life! Among the many wise and good things said by H. Clay Trumbull, I find this: "It is not the chipping off of the diamond's surface that polishes the diamond, but it is by the wise use of the diamond dust in the hands of a skilled lapidary that the brilliance of the diamond is secured. It is not the making of mistakes that makes a noble manhood, but it is the wise use of the mistakes that enables a man to be made and become brilliant in his chosen sphere. Whenever we see the light and glow of a beautiful character, we may know that its illuminating power came through its slow polishing by its own diamond dust at the hands of the Great Lapidary." The world has only seen one pure, perfect, stainless life. But there have been "a multitude which no man can number," who stand to-day crowned victors in heaven, who by their moral failures were thrown so completely back upon God and his strength and free grace, that their very mistakes became their Saviour's. This, then, is the lesson to be learned, that all the errors, failures and shortcomings of the passing year must help us toward greater fidelity, and unflinching zeal, and truer faithfulness in the untrodden paths of 1902. We can transfigure with the beauty of love, old familiar duties, and glorify such by meeting them, not as mere accidents floating up to us for attention, but as God's appointments sent by him to ennoble life. No man was ever made stronger or better by mere misanthropic brooding over past faults. It is not possible to build a strong character by deploring, and only mourning our injudicious actions. If we rise at all, it will be by ascending a sound stairway built out of well-recognized mistakes and failures, saying, "Let the dead past bury its dead"—we are determined to rise to better things and to a life hid with Christ in God!

Take staunch farewell, then, of 1901, grateful for its manifold blessings, grateful for all its griefs and tears; grateful for its joys and pleasures; grateful, above all else, that our Heavenly Father has been swift to forgive our blunders and overrule our failures, and grateful, too, that we can leave its every hour trustingly in the pierced hand that is laid upon the helm of all human affairs! If the eager question leaps to the lip, "Will 1902 be better and crowned with grander achievements than the passing year?" we answer without any hesitation, Yes! but conditioned upon an unreserved obedience to do his will, for while "the fashion of this world passeth away, he that doeth the will of God abideth forever!"

Cold Ears

IT is cold, cold, fearfully cold! We see the people running along the street in seal-skin caps and big mittens. They come in blowing. They stand on the corners waiting for cars or stages. The thermometer tending to zero. They rub their stinging ears. They beat their arms around them. What do they do that for? To keep warm, they answer us sharply, as though we ought to know without asking. It is no spite that makes them seize the rims of their ears and pull and pinch and shake them. But as the process went on, we thought to ourselves: that is what is the matter with a great many people. They suffer from cold ears. We have seen people in church, both summer and winter, the atmosphere at most genial heat, sitting with frosted ears, yet making no attempt to warm them. There are your critics, with astonishing cold ears. They listen. They measure your words with an iron rod. They weigh them in brazen balances. Words of invitation or entreaty may go forth from you red-hot, but by the time the ardent utterances reach them, the warm message somehow gets cooled off. These critics sit in freezing imperturbability. Their tympanum is hung with icicles. They are congealing critics. They are dying of cold ears. What they want is friction. Our plan is first to get them good and mad. We never can do anything with such people till with some vigorous exhortation we have pulled their ears. Somehow you must get the circulation started.

Among the best saints are those whom we once made hopping mad by what we said about their worldliness, or greed. We could do nothing with them till by some hair-cloth denunciation we had cured their cold ears. By some recent physiological explorations we found out that every man had six ears. On each side the external ear, the middle ear, and the internal ear. That is the reason they get so awfully cold, there are so many of them exposed. Two ears are an embarrassment in such weather as that of to-day; but what to do with six is a still more absorbing question. Nature intended that we should have no excuse for dull hearing when she gave us six, the outer one defined by learned men to be a cartilaginous funnel, covered by the integument, serving to collect sonorous vibrations, and we suppose the others quite as tremendous. In every case school-teachers and ministers must wake up these six ears appertaining to each individual, or fail. That was what made the schoolmaster of our boyhood days (perish his memory!) pull our ears till he sometimes almost pulled them off.

We noticed, however, that many of the people in this fiercest day of all the winter were more troubled with their hands than their ears; and they stood, some in one place and some in another, whacking their arms about their body till you could hear the thump a block off. Jack Frost had evidently attempted to shake hands with them, and like some over-cordial people, gripped them too hard. There they stood pounding themselves, first throwing their arm around one way and then throwing their arm around the other way, until they seemed to be in quite a glow. Why did they not pound the brick wall, or the lamp-post, or some of the passers-by? Ah! they had found out that the best way to get themselves right was to smite themselves rather than somebody else. We all need some self-whipping.

Much of the time we give for the chastisement of others we might better spend in chastisement of ourselves. When the Church is cold, instead of shaking others we had better do like the stage-driver while waiting on the corner on a winter morning, and begin to whack ourselves. The reason that the Pharisee did not get warm was because he trounced the Publican. The reason that the Publican did get warm was because he beat his own breast. We give our best oats of moral reflection to somebody else's horse, letting our own horse gnaw an empty manger. We pull away at the mote in our neighbor's eyes while we have no anxiety about a beam in our own, large enough to keep a saw-mill busy.

At which cold-day considerations we drop our pen, wipe it carefully out, and lay it upon the rack, and taking our position in mid-floor, began to imitate the stage-driver; and having first rubbed our ears for a moment to get them in a pleasant glow, we hurl our right hand across our chest in one way, and our left hand across our chest in the other way, with rapid and emphatic stroke, not only chastising our own shortcomings, but at the same time starting up lethargic circulation, and getting our hands warm, warmer, warmest.

Sanctimonious Frauds

ONE of the mightiest temptations in commercial life in all our cities to-day is the fact that many professed Christian men are not square in their bargains. Such men are in Presbyterian and Episcopal and Baptist and Methodist and Congregational churches. Our good merchants are foremost in Christian enterprises; they are patronizers of art, philanthropic and patriotic. God will attend to them in the day of his coronation. I am not speaking of them, but of those in commercial life who are setting a ruinous example to our young merchants. Go through all the stores and offices in our cities and tell me in how many of those stores and offices are the principles of Christ's religion dominant. In three-fourths of them? No. In half of them? No. In one-tenth of them? Decide for yourself. The impression is abroad somehow that charity can consecrate iniquitous gains, and that if a man give to God a portion of an unrighteous bargain, then the Lord will forgive him the rest. The secretary of a benevolent society came to me and said: "Mr. So and So has given a large amount of money to the missionary cause," mentioning the sum. I said: "I can't believe it." He said: "It is so."

Well, I went home, staggered and confounded. I never knew the man to give anything. But after awhile I found out that he had been engaged in the most infamous kind of a swindle, and then he promised to compromise the matter with the Lord, saying: "Now, here is so much for thee, Lord! Please let me off!" I want to tell you that the church of God is not a shop for receiving stolen goods, and that if you have taken anything from your fellows you had better return it to the man to whom it belongs. In a drug-store in Philadelphia, a young man was told that he must sell blacking on the Lord's day. He said to the head man of the firm: "I can't possibly do that. I am willing to sell medicine on the Lord's day, for I think that is right and necessary, but I can't sell this patent blacking." He was discharged from the place. A Christian man hearing of it, took him into his employ, and he went on from one success to another, until he was known all over the land for his faith in God and his good works as for his worldly success. When a man sacrifices temporal, financial good for the sake of spiritual interests, the Lord is on his side, and one with God is a majority.

Music for Every Home

OUR CONCERT ROLLER ORGAN is now in use in several thousand homes, where it gives genuine pleasure to all who hear it. The price is $10 cash, or $1 down and $1 per month for eleven months. A child can play it, as it is quite simple to operate; yet it renders exquisitely the most difficult music—songs, hymns, marches, chorals, concerted pieces, and selections from the great masters, to absolute perfection. Strong, pure and sweet in tone, with full accompaniment, these organs furnish ideal home music, and are unsurpassed for an evening of social song, a hymn service, or for leading a Sunday School or small congregation. Large variety of tunes on metal rollers ready for the instrument.

TEN TUNES will be sent FREE to each organ purchaser sending in cash order before Feb. 1, 1902. $10 cash, or $1 down and $1 per month for eleven months. Address CHRISTIAN HERALD Book Department, Bible House, N. Y.

Our Free Course of Shorthand

In our issue of January 8 will appear the first of our series of Thirty Lessons in Isaac Pitman's system of shorthand. The course is the most valuable educational feature ever presented by a weekly publication, and should attract many thousands of students. Free to all CHRISTIAN HERALD subscribers. THE BIBLE AND THE NEWSPAPER

Marconi's Triumph

AMONG all the scientific triumphs of recent years, none has so startled the world as did the announcement on December 14, that Signor Marconi had received signals across the Atlantic without a wire. For several weeks past, incoming ships have been in communication with the land by wireless telegraphy when fifty miles away, but that it would be possible to signal across the whole stretch of the Atlantic seemed beyond belief. Signor Marconi has a station at Poldhu, in Cornwall, England, at which he has an instrument capable of generating an electric current of enormous force. On his arrival in Newfoundland recently, he arranged to suspend a vertical wire from a kite, about four hundred feet high. He then cabled to his representative in England to send, at certain intervals, the signal representing the letter S, which, in the Morse code, is three dots. At the appointed time, on two successive days, the receiver in Newfoundland recorded the signal, which was quite distinct and was received so regularly as to leave no doubt that communication had been established. The distance traversed is nearly two thousand miles. Signor Marconi, having demonstrated the possibility of signaling, will now proceed to perfect his apparatus so that he can send messages. It will be necessary to find some method of suspending the vertical wire, that will give more steadiness than can be secured by a kite; and there are other details that need attention. Legal difficulties also have arisen, as the cable companies have a monopoly of electric communication with Europe, which is protected by law for two more years. These, however, can probably be overcome, if Signor Marconi can surmount the scientific difficulties in sending messages. He is only twenty-seven years of age, and has been six years engaged on the study of wireless telegraphy. How delighted he must have been to read off those three dots, by which he knew that people two thousand miles away were signaling to him! To the unscientific observer the dots would not have had much significance, but Marconi knew the source of the signal and recognized its meaning. It would be well if we were similarly on the alert to perceive the significance of the events of our time and to understand when God is speaking to us.

They shall call on my name, and I will hear them: I will say it is my people, and they shall say it is the Lord my God (Zech. 13:9).

Counterfeiters Arrested

Secret Service detectives are congratulating themselves on the arrest of a gang of counterfeiters in New York. On Dec. 7, they succeeded in tracking to his headquarters a skilful engraver, and there arrested him among his stock and apparatus. The men who were helping him in his work arrived one by one at the house and were amazed when, in response to their knock, an officer opened the door and placed them under arrest. Among the goods collected in the house was a large quantity of pure silver and a number of dies for stamping it, besides a large sum in counterfeit coins. These latter were in nearly all respects equal to those issued by the Government, containing as much genuine silver and of equal weight. From an ounce of silver, costing sixty cents, they could make five quarters, and so exquisitely had they made the dies that only under a magnifying-glass could the difference be detected. Then it was seen that the stars were irregular in shape and some of the letters were defective. They were quite equal to the genuine coin when tested by the sense of touch, and the ring of them was exactly the same in tone. Considering how many people rely on the sound and the feeling of coins, it is readily seen how dangerous was the counterfeit, and how easily they imposed on tradesmen and car-conductors, who were their chief victims. Less skilful plotters would have used base metal, which would have been so much cheaper; but the coins would not have passed so readily as those so closely resembling the genuine coin. It is so that the Church suffers. The openly wicked and immoral are easily recognized, but the hypocrite, who can speak and act like the Christian, brings loss and shame on the name of Christ.

Believe not every spirit, but try the spirits whether they are of God, because many false prophets are gone out into the world. (1 John 4:1).

Gifts of Skin

A man is lying in the Englewood Hospital, N. J., who is suffering from terrible injuries. He was working on an estate at Tenaflly, and had entered a pit in which a private gas plant is operated. While he was at work there, an explosion occurred which wrecked the place and nearly killed him. His arms, breast and head were severely torn and burned, and for a time his life was despaired of. Gradually he has been gaining strength under the care of Dr. D. A. Currie, who has given him devoted attention. The surgeon took a deep interest in the case from the beginning, and it increased when he learned that his patient had served in the war with Spain, in which the surgeon also did good service. During the past few days, Dr. Currie found that the wounds having improved, were in the condition that they could be treated by skin-grafting. He therefore laid the case before the military post of which he is a member, and asked any members who were willing to contribute a piece of skin, to come to the hospital. Nineteen young men responded, and the doctor took two inches of cuticle from each and applied them to the wounds of the patient. He believes that he will now soon recover. This was a test of brotherhood, for there are many who would be willing to give money to help a comrade, who would shrink from physical suffering for him. Measured by that gauge, how great must have been Christ's love for men when he died to save them.

Greater love hath no man than this, that a man lay down his life for his friends. (John 15:13).

Lost for Four Years

An interesting paper was read at a recent meeting of physicians by Dr. Kendall, of New Westminster, near Vancouver, B. C. He said that about three weeks before, a man entered his office and asked permission to sit down for a few minutes. The doctor gave him a seat and looked at him curiously. He appeared to be a man of intelligence and culture, but was dazed and bewildered. Presently he asked the doctor where he was, the year, the date and other things which formed equally surprising questions from an apparently sane person. Finally he told his story. He had been a practising lawyer in a city in Mississippi, he said, and could remember leaving his home on the morning of Aug. 21, 1897, and walking toward his office. Then all was a blank until, awakening as from a dream, he found himself standing in the sunlight in a strange street in an equally strange town. His clothes and calloused hands, which he himself examined with curious surprise and amusement, showed that he had grown familiar with hard work. Subsequent investigation disclosed that he had for several years been working as a longshoreman and deckhand on the Frazer River, under a name that does not now carry to him the least significance. He has been known among his fellow workmen as a quiet, peaceable, hard-working man, whose actions have at no time suggested the slightest element of mystery, or of his being a lawyer. At the conclusion of Dr. Kendall's recital of the facts the physicians present discussed the question whether such a loss of identity, which has of late become more common, could be considered as insanity. It is clearly a sign of mental derangement of some kind, though the cause has not been explained. The lawyer was not present at the discussion, as he started for home as soon as he had fully recovered his identity. How good a thing it would be if all wanderers from the home of their heavenly Father could similarly recover and return to him!

When he came to himself he said: I will come and be to my father. (Luke 15:17).

BRIEF NOTES

There are now 1,476 Young Men's Christian Associations in the United States, with a membership of 477,000, an increase of over 13,000 in the last year.

Rev. A. B. Fisher, of the Church Missionary Society, reports the baptism of the first of the pigmies of Central Africa, whom travelers have described as among the lowest types of human beings.

Dr. Edward P. Ingelsoll, pastor of the International Christian Church in Boston, was elected one of the corresponding secretaries of the American Bible Society, to fill the vacancy caused by the death of Dr. Edward W. Gilman.

It is reported that an extensive system of irrigation is to be inaugurated in India immediately, to prevent the recurrence of famine. The Government is said to have made a first appropriation of three and a half million dollars for the purpose.

Professor Biardsee said at the recent congress on tuberculosis that alcoholism is the greatest factor in increasing the dread disease. Drinking weakens resistance against disease germs. It is the Benedict Arnold that unlocks the fortress gate to the enemy.

There are seventy members in the Christian Endeavor Society organized in the Iowa prison. One of the prison Endeavorers is doing missionary work in the galleries, which has increased the membership.

During the past four years the Student Volunteer Movement has maintained five traveling secretaries, three for men's colleges and two for women's colleges. In addition, there is an educational secretary, who prepares the text-books, and a general secretary who oversees the entire work.

Mr. J. Pierpont Morgan has given fifty thousand dollars to defray the cost of illuminating St. Paul's Cathedral, in London, with electricity.

Dr. F. B. Meyer has resigned the pastorate of his church in London to make a missionary tour of Jamaica, W. I., after which he purposes to travel through Sweden and Germany, preaching in the larger towns.

Reports come from both Italy and Spain of conversions occurring by the blessing of God on the perusal of the sermons of the late Pastor C. H. Spurgeon, which are being translated into Italian, and widely circulated in both countries.

The municipality of Paris are the judges of the recipients of the annual "Virtue Prize." They have awarded it this year to a humpbacked seamstress, who has for several years past supported her paralyzed father, an invalid mother and several sisters by her needle. The prize is worth $200.

Mrs. Leland Stanford's gift of $30,000,000 to Stanford University, and Mr. Carnegie's offer of $10,000,000 to endow a university extension movement under the patronage of the government, came at the close of a year memorable for great gifts to education. The total of recorded gifts is $81,415,220.

Plans have already been made for an enlargement of the Metropolitan Tabernacle, London, of which Rev. Thomas Spurgeon, son of the late C. H. Spurgeon, is the pastor. The rear of the edifice has been purchased at a cost of $7,500, and the work of building will soon be commenced.

Evangelist George C. Needham is holding revival services at Chattanooga, Tenn. His recent work at Palestine and Austin, Tex., had remarkable success. A wave of moral reform swept over the community, resulting in the closing of many dens of infamy and the ingathering of many souls.

Rev. J. H. Vincent, who has been the pastor of the Wesleyan Methodist Church in New York City for many years, will sail for the United States and spend August in his old work at Chautauqua, with which he is still officially connected.

The Broadway Tabernacle, New York, has been sold for a much smaller sum, the general opinion is that the trustees acted wisely in selling the venerable edifice.

PHILADELPHIA'S PENTECOSTAL MISSION

THE Pentecostal Mission, located in what is termed "the slums" of Philadelphia, is doing a practical Christian work in one of the most sin-darkened places of the world. No. 620 Panama Street, now occupied by the Pentecostal Mission, was once a house of ill-fame. Here Gospel services are held regularly, and the "Life-Line" is thrown out to men and women who are sinking hopelessly to their ruin and death.

The Mission workers are mainly from the Tacony Methodist Episcopal Church; and although they find the financial part a burden beyond their strength and numbers, they keep steadily at the work, realizing that the field they are occupying is too ripe with golden opportunities for winning souls to be abandoned for a lack of funds. It is God's work; will he not supply the money required?

The Matron, Miss Clara Kolb, and her assistant, Miss May Heath, live at the Mission, and in addition to looking after the Gospel services, they conduct a Lodging House for Women, and do practical Christian work—such as house-to-house visitation, and helping the sick and the poor—around the neighborhood.

The Lodging House for Women is a greater blessing to destitute, wandering, sinful women in that neighborhood than words can well convey. Here, it is possible for helpless, hopeless, friendless creatures to stay over night, or longer; after they secure employment, or employment is found for them. They are supposed to pay five cents for each night's lodging, and a small sum for each meal. The writer knows personally of a large number of cases where wayward women, given temporary aid in time of need, have been brought to Jesus through such kindness, leading afterward good, moral lives, and becoming a help to others.

One instance will serve as an illustration of many cases. "Nellie," as she was called, was a woman well on toward middle age, when one of the "slum workers" met and spoke to her one night of Christ's power to save to the uttermost all who come to him. It was after looking in vain for another woman, who had promised to meet her that Miss Righter encountered "outcast Nellie." She says that clearly and distinctly the voice of God bade her "Take Nellie."

Poor Nellie! A hopeless case she seemed—back of her an awful record; she had served seven years in the penitentiary for killing a man. Was there any use in talking to her? The missionary could not but ask herself this. But the voice was clear, the command distinct, and it was obeyed. Nellie was taken to the Home; and there, Nellie—even Nellie—found Jesus. Space does not permit the recording of the events of the three or four years that have passed away since, during which Nellie prayed and struggled; but with some temporary defeats, "Nellie, the Outcast," was eventually numbered with the overcomers; and with those who help others.

It was about one month ago that her transition took place. To some of the Mission workers who went to see her, she talked brightly of her sure and abiding faith in God; after telling them that her mother refused to forgive her for the life of sin she had led, she said, "But Jesus has not turned me away, and I am going home to be with him forever." Her spirit took its flight. Her poor body was lowered into the ground, but "Nellie, the Outcast," went as "Nellie, the Redeemed," to join the ransomed ones in the City of our God. In the pictured group of Mission workers on this page, a cross-mark indicates Miss Kolb, the leading spirit of this band who will have many souls for their hire. WM. K. FISHER.

THE INSCRIBED POTTERY OF PALESTINE

BY THEODORE F. WRIGHT, PH.D.

WHEN the spade is sunk into any place of former habitation in Palestine, the soil is found to be rich in potsherds. As the explorers went down with their shaft eighty feet, near the southeastern corner of the Temple wall of Jerusalem, they found fragments of pottery all the way, and, what was most remarkable, a little, unharmed vase at the bottom of the shaft. Aware of the suspicion which would naturally arise, that some one had stealthily placed this vase where it would be found, and would give clat to the exploration, the English officers who did the work were very careful to ascertain that it could by no means have been imposed upon them, and that it must have lain since Solomon's time where it was found.

Being less than three inches high, and of strong thickness, this vase was placed in a hollow of one of the lowest stones, and there it had rested safely. It bore no inscription, and it is not the habit of the Exploration Fund to frame theories, but some one has suggested that it may have been ceremonially used at the laying of the corner-stone.

As at Jerusalem, so at Lachish, the ground was full of potsherds, of which the most important fragment bore the word, in old Hebrew, le hassek, "to pour out," meaning that it was used to pour a libation, and so may have been a well-made bowl.

The strongest part of an ordinary vase or jar was its handle. In one of our illustrations, the reader will note the top of a jar resting on several fragments, and having two handles reaching from the top of the jar to the broadest part of its body. These handles are much thicker than the rest, and are consequently more durable. It is common, therefore, to find handles intact when all that went with them has been reduced to small fragments. Now, these handles always bore a stamp, which was pressed into the soft clay before it was baked. Moreover, being sunk a little below the surface, they would be less likely to suffer injury. There are now nearly a hundred of these handles, which have been found at Jerusalem, Lachish, and other places in Judea, recently excavated. The impression was sometimes put on too far to one side, so that the stamp only left a part of its mark; and again, it was sometimes made a second time, causing a confused effect; but in many cases it was well put on, and is legible to-day.

A glance at some specimens will show strong points of agreement. The form is oval. The words are two. The upper word remains the same, while the lower word varies. Between the words there is a symbolic figure.

As to the inscription, there is no doubt that the upper word

VASE FOUND UNDER TEMPLE WALL

means "to the king or lord or Molech," it being possible to read the letters LMLK in any one of these three ways. The second word is the name of a town, Hebron, Ziph, Shochoh and the like. If we regard the symbol as that of a deity, we may read the inscription as votive, meaning that the jar, with contents, was offered to the deity represented, by the town named; and it looks most likely that we are dealing here with the worship of Moloch or Molech, of the Ammonites, or with that of Beelzebub, whose poisonous beetle or fly was the agent of his baneful power. This point may become more clear when further research has brought a greater number of handles to light. These handles bear Hebrew letters; many are later, and use Greek letters. One, which came from east of the Jordan was lately examined, and was found to bear the head of a bullock, the symbol of such worship as Aaron permitted before the mount of God, when Moses seemed to have been taken away (Exodus 32), and like that which Jeroboam instituted at Bethel and Dan. Of course, a Greek inscription can go back only to about 300 B. C., probably not quite so far, but the worship of the bullock was characteristic of the district of Ashteroth-Karnaim (Gen. 14: 5), the mother goddess of the horns. This inscription reads epi kalliston moron ("for the happiest destiny"), and thus is again votive; and indeed the people of Palestine were exceedingly religious, whether in the service of God or of idols, and so were all the ancients.

Another form of pottery which often bears inscriptions is the lamp. These little lamps are of very many patterns. Sometimes they were without ornament, and sometimes the ornament was made by the potter, with a few symmetrical marks; but in rare cases, the mould must have been furnished with letters. One such lamp was found in a niche in a tomb near Jerusalem. The tomb was hollowed out of the rock and a little shelf had been left for the lamp. This lamp was white when found, and had probably been placed new in the tomb. As to its date, that most likely was the first century of our era, before the city was destroyed, and the Christians were driven over the Jordan. The letters on this lamp are Greek and are phos Chr. phou. pasin. The people of Palestine at that day used Greek freely but not very correctly, but their meaning is not in doubt, and this inscription means, "the light of Christ shines for all."

The destruction of Jerusalem reminds us of the Romans, and of the pottery which they left behind them in the form of tiles with which they floored their barracks. A number of these tiles have been found; they are under a foot square, and bear a stamp which reads, "LEG X F." The first three letters here are for legio, legion. X means tenth. F means Fretensis, that is, from Sicily or the strait, fretum being Latin for a narrow channel.

The legion came from Sicily originally. Josephus tells us that the tenth legion was with Titus at Jerusalem, and this gives the proof of it, and illustrates how other statements regarding historical events in the Holy Land will be proved, by finding beneath the soil the needed evidences.

ERZEROUM'S GREAT EARTHQUAKE

1,000 Houses Destroyed and 1,500 More Damaged—Many Lives Lost, and Thousands Destitute

ERZEROUM, in Armenia, a city which only a few years ago was the scene of a cruel massacre, has been visited by a succession of earthquakes which destroyed 1,000 houses and seriously damaged 1,500 others. Many lives were lost and thousands of Armenians have been rendered destitute and helpless. This calamity, occurring in the winter season, when bleak icy winds and deep snows make the suffering exceedingly severe, is now attracting the attention and exciting the sympathy of many people in other lands who are moved to help the Armenians of Erzeroum in their present distress.

Erzeroum has about 60,000 inhabitants, and is about eight days' journey over the mountains from Trebizond, on the Black Sea. The climate is cold and rigorous and the winters are long; snow often lies on the ground from October to April. Its consulates are strongly represented by men of experience and ability. The English and American consuls, with their families, and four American Board missionaries, together with an English lady, who, under the Armenian Relief Committee of England, has charge of the Girls' Orphanage, constitute the whole English-speaking community. The missionaries are Rev. Mr. Stapleton, at the head of the Mission and with special care of the Boys' School, and his wife, Dr. Stapleton, and Miss Lord and Miss Bushnell in charge of the Girl's School. The schools of the Mission are largely made up of children orphaned by the massacre.

The terrible earthquake, coming at such a time, upon a people already so wretched and hopeless, seemed at first an almost fatal calamity. Home letters recently received in this country by friends of the missionaries, graphically describe the scenes during the succession of earthquake shocks, and the suffering that followed. We are permitted to quote from some of these letters below:

ERZEROUM, TURKEY, November 8.

Friday Afternoon.—Before you get this you will have some idea of what a day this has been. I think there have been (and are being) as many as twenty-five earthquake shocks; some of course very slight. The first we felt was a little after six o'clock this morning, a strong shake! Nothing in our house was injured then, but the girls were very much frightened. I was in bed, but jumped up and ran down to the garden door without even daring to stop to put on some shoes, and there the girls were huddled together crying and trembling. Before I was dressed came another worse one, which sent us all into the street. Great strips of plastering came down, pictures, clock, plants, vases thrown down, the water jugs in the kitchen were broken to shivers and all the water and milk on the floor. The heavy pago (Russian stove) in our sitting-room was twisted on its foundation, and two chimneys were thrown down. We gathered all the girls in the dining-room, and knelt to pray—our only comfort and safety. The earthquakes have continued all day; many houses have been entirely or partly thrown down, and people killed. The streets are full of people, whole families sitting on their beds or carpets on the snow and mud trying to keep warm about a little mongal. The Bodvilly's family and several others are in the churchyard. Many tents have been put in this street, and this afternoon others are fixing up shelters of matting or rugs fastened to poles. One family is sitting in a cart. The Orphanage is such an old house, they dared not remain there, and all the orphan girls—forty only, because many went home—have been with us all day, and are going to stay tonight. Besides, we have had some relatives and friends of the orphans, so our house has been very full.

Saturday Morning.—Again, a very heavy shake stopped me, and they are not all over yet. Last evening we all put beds on the floor downstairs. The little ones were abed, and the older ones and we had just finished prayers, and were lying down without undressing, when there came another heavy shock, and the girls, with one scream, or wail, rushed into the street. By this time the girls had got so nervous I was really afraid for some of them, and we decided it was better to put up a tent, and then we might rest some. Although it was a cold frosty night, we were warm, for there were forty-seven of us packed together. Such a sight as it was. We were lapped over like sardines in a box. But we were perfectly warm, and managed to sleep, and last night we spread the girls' beds—like our feather beds, only filled with wool instead of feathers—entirely over the floor—which made us snug and warm. I think after we were settled for the night there must have been five slight shocks, and this morning we have had several, and one quite strong. The people say they come in this way about once in fifty years; that the last one was in 1859, and lasted forty days. I am writing you now sitting on the floor of the tent, beside me a little orphan, who is holding my ink-bottle. On the other side lies a girl who is ill with the typhoid fever, and a boy with pneumonia, both orphans. In another corner is a poor sick woman, grandmother of one of the orphans. Our whole street is so full of tents, or apologies for them, we could scarcely find a place for ours, but we are in a very good one, where the houses on both sides are very low, and the street is so broad there is no danger of their falling on us. We hear of many houses that have fallen. The Bodvilly's family, and several others slept in the churchyard.

As soon as day dawned this morning we sang a number of hymns, and had prayers, and then the girls washed in the ice-cold water of the fountain. "There shall no evil befall thee," we stay ourselves on that. We have just been up the street, and it is a pitiful sight. All the city, apparently, are making some sort of a thing to cover them and living out of doors in the cold. They say the Vali has issued an order for the people not to go back to the houses for twenty days.

November 12th.—This morning we had prayers, and a half hour's Bible study all together. Now the girls have copied the words of a new hymn for us to learn for the church, and the rest of the time this morning they will give to study and work. Last night (yesterday, too) we had snow and rain, and the streets are in a dreadful state.

Sunday the earthquakes continued—light shocks all day. No one dared to go into the church. Sunday night we had another very severe shock, almost as bad as the one on Friday. We heard a big fall down the street. An old, low house, just back of us, was rolling down stones and earth all night at intervals. The people in the tent by us, and all down the street, began to chant their prayers and sing. They talk and cough about us all night long. Many have sick babies who cry all night, poor children! Three babies were born in one day, in a tent where there were fifty people. All the consuls are in tents. Last night there were four or five shakes, but slight; and I have not felt any this morning. But what the poor people whose houses are destroyed will do, I don't know.

Wednesday, November 13.—The earthquakes have subsided so much I for one feel a great sense of relief. Last night they say there were two slight ones, and there have been a few very slight ones to-day. Many of the people are going away from the city to villages. All the prisoners have been taken away to Trebizond.

Thursday. This morning R—and I took a walk through some of the nearer streets to see the wrecks. The houses which have entirely fallen are mostly small, old, badly-built ones. But many good houses are cracked. In the Turkish quarter one of the mosques is entirely demolished. They say many Turks have been killed. The government has sent men to tear down the dangerous buildings to-day, and one was next the Mission House, just across the narrow alley. Word has come this afternoon that the Sultan gives 3,000 Turkish pounds to Erzeroum. The citizens have raised 700, of which the Vali gave 70—one tenth.

Saturday Morning, Mission House.—Yes, we prayed for a quiet mind and more faith, and came back here last night. It was getting so cold we couldn't keep warm in the tent. All slept downstairs together. They say there were one or two shakes, but I did not feel them, and most of us slept well. Mr. Stapleton and Mr. Ojaloo sent a long telegram to the New York Tribune yesterday, asking for relief. They have organized a relief committee here, and asked Mr. Stapleton to serve on it with them. They say there are 1,000 houses destroyed and 1,500 more badly damaged.

Any contributions in aid of the Erzeroum earthquake sufferers may be sent to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. The following have been received:

TURNING THE HOUR-GLASS

SEE ILLUSTRATION ON FIRST PAGE

LOW run the sands—the hour is nearly done
That marks the solemn passing of a year
And sees another on its course begun—
We mingle sighs and laughter, grief and cheer.

One instant tolls a bell—with measured strokes—
Then silence—for a year is lost to sight.
Its deeds are memories now which thought evokes,
Its labors, loves and woes are shades of night.

We sadly bow in prayer as o'er a bier,
Where life itself doth lie in death's embrace.
We lift our heads—and hope transforms a tear
Into a smile—we see the New Year's face!

And all the bells peal forth in joyous chime—
Golden and silver-throated to the dawn.
The night is o'er—the strong, new child of Time,
Fronts with brave eyes and true the New Year's morn!

How many, many sands his hour-glass holds!
How many wondrous hours a year may give!
A fair, new purpose in each heart unfolds—
So gladly, purely, truly may we live.

That every moment, jewel-like shall shine
As through the glass it runs, serene and bright.
Ah! let us make the sands of life divine,
And all our years shall glow like lamps of light!

MYRTA LOCKETT AVARY.

Delighted with Her Premiums

Mrs. J. A. Bishop, Denver, Col., writes: "The Red Letter Bible is beyond my anticipation of helpfulness, so full of explanations, yet concise; type clear, easily read by eyes such as my own, that have been used now into the afternoon of this life. Now, to-day comes your generous 'Art Portfolio.' What beauties the pictures are. How I prize them."

They Admire the Portfolio

Harvey E. W. Harnsburg, Pa., writes: "The many works of art—your free gift—reached me to-day. I am so proud of them. They are most beautiful. My wife just thinks they are lovely. She is a great admirer of art. Have shown them to many of my friends already, who are greatly impressed."

"A Source of Blessing"

"THE CHRISTIAN HERALD has for years been a source of great blessing to me, and I am sure others can say the same. Continue the good work. Be brave and fearless. Attack iniquity wherever it is found, even in high places. Our age requires brave men and women, who dare stand alone with God." San Francisco, Calif. A. BROWN.

Framed Her Art Treasures

Maria L. S., Bethlehem, Pa., writes: "Just received, in perfect condition, the beautiful book, How to Read the Bible. I treasure you a thousand times. I am delighted with it. I also received the Art Portfolio. They are really beautiful. I had three of them framed for Christmas gifts. Those I like best are 'The Madonna,' and 'Leaving the Hills.'"

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS

The usual five new questions are omitted this week, in order that other letters to "The Mail-Bag," many of them long delayed, may receive attention. Hereafter, once a month, the entire page will be devoted to this class of letters.

Readers are invited to forward new questions which they believe would be suitable for discussion in this department

W. C. E. Stockton, Calif. Some years ago I saw an article enlarging upon the tradition concerning the compilation of the Creed, and giving the sentence of each apostle as added by him to the general creed. Can you publish that?

According to one ancient writer, it was Peter who contributed the first sentence—"I believe in God the Father Almighty"; John added—"Maker of heaven and earth"; James—"And in Jesus Christ, his only Son our Lord"; Andrew—"Who was conceived by the Holy Ghost, born of the Virgin Mary"; Philip—"Suffered under Pontius Pilate; was crucified dead and buried"; Thomas—"He descended into hell; the third day he rose again from the dead"; Bartholomew—"He ascended into heaven and sitteth at the right hand of God the Father Almighty";—Matthew—"From whence he shall come to judge the quick and the dead." The other clauses were contributed by James (son of Alphaeus), Simon Zelotes, Jude and Matthias. It should be remembered, however, that neither Luke nor any ecclesiastical writer before the fifth century makes mention of an assembly of the apostles to formulate a creed, and the early fathers never claimed that the apostles framed it. Its date and the circumstances of its origin are uncertain.

J. F. W., Chicago, Ill. When one has sinned, and knows that he has sinned, and is sorry for having done the wrong, and asks God to forgive him, and he henceforth lives a better life, will God hold him responsible for the things he did and had asked to be forgiven for? Or, in other words, if one becomes converted, and leads a pure, Christian life, will God on the Judgment Day ask him all those things that he has done prior to his converted life? Does God blot out all memory of wrong-doings when you ask his forgiveness and henceforth show by deeds that you are sorry and do the right thing?

God utterly blots out the memory of the sin he has forgiven. This is very distinctly and emphatically promised in many passages of the Bible. Perhaps the most explicit is Ezekiel 33: 16, "None of his sins that he hath committed shall be mentioned unto him: he hath done that which is lawful and right: he shall surely live." There are, however, warnings to the pardoned man that he must quit his sin. Having once been pardoned, he must be careful not to abuse God's magnanimity under the impression that God will continue to pardon. There are many warnings of the peril that a man incurs who returns to an evil life after once being delivered from it.

A wealthy, but avaricious, woman dreamed she died and went to heaven. Wandering about, she saw a beautiful mansion being built. She inquired who it was for, and the guide replied, "That is for your gardener." "Why," she said, "he always lived in a hut; they are very poor, with no comforts; he would not know what to do with it." "Ah!" the guide replied; "he need not have been poor had he not given so much away. The Master-BUILDER is using the material he sent." She wandered on and came to a small cottage. "Who is this for?" she asked. The guide replied, "That is for you." "Why, I would not know how to get around in it. I have always lived in a mansion down there." "Ah!" the guide replied, sorrowfully; "the Master-BUILDER is doing the best he can with the material you sent him." She awoke, thankful that it was not too late to bear fruit, in the name of Christ, and that still there were opportunities to use her wealth, mental powers and talents in his service, thereby laying up treasures in heaven.

Alfred M., Utiia, Honduras, C. A. 1. Is educating a child a luxury or a necessity? 2. What is it that tends most to the enlightenment of the human race?

1. As education, on proper lines, prepares a child for self-support and makes it a good, law-abiding, moral citizen, while a large proportion of those of neglected education, and who are reared in ignorance, are usually incapable of self-support and frequently drift into vicious and criminal ways, it is evident that education is not only a present duty but an ultimate economy to the community. Education is thus a social and moral necessity. 2. Our universities, public schools and technical training institutes on secular lines, and our churches, Sunday Schools and theological institutions on spiritual lines, to which should be added the printing press as the most far-reaching factor of the present age.

E. B. E., Northboro, Mass. If the income of the farm is insufficient to reclaim, stock and furnish it with the most improved agricultural machinery, and at the same time furnish the house with the comforts and conveniences of modern times—which should await the accumulation of further means, the farm or the house?

As the farm income supports the home, we naturally conclude that it would be wisdom to make home conveniences (such as were not in the nature of necessities) wait on the farm; in other words, that business should come first and luxuries afterward. We take it for granted that the home, in any event, is supplied with what is absolutely necessary. This being so, thrift and self-denial there would go far toward replenishing the farm and increasing its revenues, thereby ultimately furnishing the means to improve and beautify the home. We can imagine a case, however, in which too much of the home is sacrificed for the farm, just as in the city there are men who get so absorbed in business that home is neglected. This is the extreme swing of the pendulum, and should be checked. The wife and her comfort are entitled to generous consideration; she is a partner, and has a right to a share in all the benefits that come from the partnership.

Birney H., Carbondale, Pa. The lines you mention are attributed to Thackeray. Their equivalent is as follows:

Two Williams, Henry, Stephen, Henry, Dick, John, Hal, three Neds, Richard, and three Hals quick;
Two Edwards, Richard, Henrys two, one Ned, Mary, Bess, James, and Charles, who lost his head.
Charles, James, Will, Ann, four Georges, Williams one, Victoria next, now Edward VII., her son.

A reader (E. B. Parker, Delmar, Ia.), sends these appropriate New Year's verses:

Another year, for each I see,
Has spread his wings o'er land and sea;
He'll give sweet greeting true to you,
And glad he can your joys renew:
A Happy New Year with his smile,
While oft some weary feet beguile.
He'll round your pathway cause a glow
That spreads sweet joy where'er you go.
And other hearts, less blessed than you,
Will from life's gloom sweet hope renew.

I. M. C., Hopewell, Oreg. How many wives had Moses?

Josephus, the Jewish historian, says that, according to tradition, he married Tharbis, daughter of the king of Ethiopia. In Exodus 2: 21 and 3: 1, it is stated that (at a later period) he married Zipporah, daughter of Jethro of Midian. In Numbers 12: 1, a Cushite wife is mentioned, whom he probably espoused after Zipporah's death.

M. G., Bristol, Tenn. What is the "Holy Shrub" of India?

The plant known in our gardens as "Sweet Basil" is called "Tulasi," or "Holy Shrub" in India, where it is an object of deep reverence, and, in some sections, of actual worship. It is dedicated to Vishnu, the sun-god of Vedic mythology; his wife, Lakshmi, the goddess of beauty, fortune, prosperity, was transformed into the Tulasi, or "Holy Shrub," according to one of the strange traditions of Brahmanism.

A. L. B., Rocklet, N. Y. 1. What is conscience? 2. Can we, with moral safety, always follow the dictates of conscience?

1. Conscience has been defined as the faculty which enables us to form moral judgments. It is born in us, but is capable of development or repression, just as other faculties are. It may vary in its operation and methods, owing to circumstances, early influences, training, environment, etc.; but, in all cases, the moral basis which distinguishes between absolute right and absolute wrong is present. 2. This faculty of moral judgment may be impaired, through neglect or abuse, and rendered less acute or delicate, so that at times it fails to discriminate, and conscience thus blunted is no longer a safe guide. On the other hand, it may be quickened and cultivated to such an extent that, heeding its guidance, the whole nature is spiritualized and purified.

L. S., Tuscaloosa, Ia. In what way should the choir face—in the front or the back of the church?

It depends largely upon the form of the building and its acoustic or sounding quality. Some of our leading choirs are in front galleries, others in rear galleries, and still others grouped near the pulpit or platform. The conductor would probably be the best judge.

Heppie W. H. 1. What authority did the Mormons have for their doctrine of polygamy? 2. Do they still practice it? 3. Have they any other distinguishing tenets?

1. They have no other authority than that derived from Joseph Smith. 2. Yes, they still believe it, practice it, and teach it. They teach that men may become God by marriage and generation. 3. They teach the doctrine of implicit obedience to their priesthood, thus including all that the priesthood teaches; and they claim that their priesthood speak with the authority of the Almighty.

M. R. M., Receville, Ia. Has a father the right to forbid his wife and family from joining or attending church, he himself claiming to be a Christian, and to belong to a church that has no existence?

A father has the legal right to control his children until they are of age, but we doubt whether this control could be exercised in the case you mention. He has no right, legal or moral, to prevent his wife or his grown-up children from attending or uniting with any church they please.

Subscriber, Brooklyn, N. Y. How did the children of Israel know there was corn in Egypt to go down and get it?

Such news would be sure to travel widely on account of the prevalence of the famine and the public interest in the question of food supplies. Josephus, the Jewish historian (Book II., Chapter VI. of the Antiquities), explains that Joseph, having provided generously against famine, sold corn from the public granaries to all who came to buy. He adds that "Jacob sent all his sons into Egypt to buy corn for the land of Canaan."

F. S. H., Norfolk, Va. Is the Bible absolutely grammatical, according to our present rules of grammar?

In the authorized version, prepared in the reign of King James (seventeenth century), many of the forms and phrases used by the earlier translators were retained, and these have not all disappeared even at the present time. The relative pronoun is frequently used in the A. V. instead of the personal, the word "let" for "prevent," "mine" for "my," "an" for "a" (before the aspirate), "beware" for "betray," etc. Amid the changes which every language undergoes, these ancient forms (now obsolete) seem out of place; but the veneration in which the Bible is held has been the means of preserving them. At the time they were first employed, they were not only thoroughly grammatical, but elegant in a literary sense, and even to-day they cannot be regarded as a violation of grammar. The Revised Version has substituted modern phraseology for very many of the old forms employed in the King James Bible.

J. V. B., Grandville, Mich. Would it be wrong for a Christian, living in a suburban town at a comparatively small distance from a large city, to take the electric car on Sunday evenings and attend church services in that city, when no church services are held in the home church on those Sunday evenings?

"A comparatively small distance" may mean within easy walking distance, in which case it would be unnecessary to ride, unless the person were unable to walk. There may, however, be circumstances which put walking out of the question. It is a matter for the individual conscience. If he cannot get there in any other way, he should use the only available means of conveyance, of course, and would be justified in so doing.

Mrs. L. M., Lexington, Ky. What was Solomon's age at his death?

From the Bible account we should infer that he was about sixty, but Josephus, the Jewish historian, says Solomon reigned eighty years and was ninety-four when he died.

C. A. Jeffries, Philadelphia, writes:

I have read the query and answers on admitting a drug clerk to membership in the Christian Endeavor Society. Through ignorance of Pharmacy as a profession, the impression created will be that all drug stores are like the one mentioned. An injustice is imposed upon drug clerks in general, by not granting them eligibility to active membership in the C. E. Society, and also by placing them on the same level with bartenders. In most stores in the eastern part of the United States, not a drop of liquor passes over the counter without an authorized prescription from a registered physician. Why not admit the clerk into membership? Did not Christ seek sinners, that through his teachings they might be saved? What better way is there of converting him, than to bring him into closer touch with the children of God? I dare say that that individual society would be held responsible for that soul.

Hessie H., Industry, Pa. Must a person join the Church to be a Christian, or should people be saved before they become members of the Church?

The Church is a means of grace, and welcomes to the congregation all who are desirous of beginning the Christian life, whether they have actually accepted Christ or not. To be a communicating member, however, one must make public profession of Christianity.

E. C. B., Montrose, Pa. In a recent issue, I notice Dr. Ganse's version of the hymn beginning "Nearer, my God, to Thee." In it does not occur this stanza:

Christ alone leadeth me
Where thou dost shine;
Joint-heir he maketh me
Of the Divine,
In Christ my soul shall be Nearer, my God, to Thee.

This leads me to believe, that it was the closing verse of Miss Adams' hymn, omitted by publishers.

J. H. S., Lincoln, Neb. The majority should rule. If the greater part of the congregation stand by the pastor, and if the question be simply a matter of preference and not of doctrine, morals or conduct, then the pastor does well to stand by the church fearlessly, do his best and trust the issue in God's hands. He need make no aggressive campaign, but to retire under fire would be to do just what the minority wishes.

Inquirer. A writer in Country Life in America explains that the goldenrods were named when only the European species were known, and these have a wandlike or rod-shaped flower-cluster. Had it been an American species that first received a name in the English language, it is probable that the name would have been golden-plume, or some other descriptive of the pyramidal and often wide-spreading flower-clusters of our common goldenrods.

IF old, God often appeared to his people in dreams and visions of the night. The whole Bible testifies to his intimate relations with his dear children, and to his frequent revelations of himself for their guidance and consolation. We are accustomed in this later time to say, that as we have the written Word, and as our Saviour has appeared in the flesh, we are no longer in need of the earlier manifestations, and we fancy that in this view we are near the truth. But are we? Does not the Divine Father still bend lovingly down over every individual child of his, and may he not still reveal his love to them sometimes in a dream. It is my belief, never yet shaken, that the angels are often with us, sent as messengers from the King, and I love to think that they do not come in a haphazard way, but are directly commissioned in their beautiful errands.

The suggestion of this subject comes to-day through reading a very touching letter, sent to the editor of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, by an esteemed friend, who last September was called upon to part with a lovely daughter, aged nineteen. She had been an invalid, suffering greatly for two years, always patient and brave, and of an exquisite fortitude. But, one day when the torture was fearful, she exclaimed: "Oh! God, why do I have to suffer so?" This was in May some months before she was released from earthly pain, and taken to heaven. She fell asleep, and "dreamed that she was in an open field, and she saw three large white columns or posts standing in a row. On the first post was painted in large letters these words: 'You suffer for your own sins.' On the second post was painted: 'You suffer for the sins of others.' On the third post was painted: 'You suffer to bring you nearer to Christ.' There were paint and a brush nearby, and she took the brush and dipped it into the paint, and drew it over the letters on the first post, and they disappeared, leaving the post perfectly white. She went to the second post, and painted it in like manner, and the letters and words disappeared, and left the post perfectly white. She went to the third post, and painted it as she had the other two, but the words remained. She drew the brush over the words again and again until she was exhausted, but the words remained as distinctly as they did before, and while she was still at work with the brush, she looked up and saw a vision of Christ standing by her side. While she was contemplating this scene, she awoke. It made a deep impression upon her mind, and she related it to her mother just as I have related it to you. I love to think that this dream was a direct answer from God to her question, and a very beautiful one."

The quotation is from the father's letter. With him I feel that the dear girl was uplifted in an hour of extremity, by a hand stronger than any one among her loved ones here could extend to her in the crisis of her bodily weakness and torment.

They who watch for providential happenings are more likely to see them, than they who go through the world blindly and stupidly, depending only on themselves. No earthly parent is indifferent to the cry of a little child's want; why should we limit the Almighty, or measure the infinite power and grace of Jehovah in our tiny scales. A biologist studying nature under the microscope finds the same minute and amazing finish in the humblest forms of life, as in the highest. The God who cares for us, cares for the least things as for the greatest, and no soul in its agony need ever doubt that the Creator and Father cannot help it in the hour of want and to the uttermost give it peace and rest.

Golden-Hair

Golden-hair is her mother's pride and darling, and her fleece of shining locks glinting in the sun, or her shower of sunny curls, is most beautiful to see. That hair is, however, not an unmixed blessing. When Golden-hair's mother was a child, and until she reached her teens, her hair was kept short, and she simply brushed it smooth in the morning and put it back with a round comb from her forehead. Nobody had any bother with it. Indeed, there were so many children in the old home that there was no time for elaborate braiding and unbraiding and for putting up ringlets in papers and rags. The strain on Golden-hair's temper and on mother's nerves, caused by the care of the child's curls, is very great. To an old-fashioned observer, it seems that the game is not worth the candle, and that the barber's shears might be employed to Golden-hair's ultimate profit.

Evening Home Study

As a guest not long since in a home where several children were growing up, I was interested in the evening of study. When dinner was cleared away, the girls and boys, with books and exercises, surrounded the lamp. It was a lovely sight, the dark heads and the fair, bent over the lessons for to-morrow; occasionally an older sister helping a younger one, or a child appealing to a parent for a little needed aid. In how many homes this scene is witnessed nightly, the family bond drawn closely while the quiet evening passes. "We wish the children to feel," said one wise mother, "that nothing takes precedence of the daily duty, and that whatever the lesson is, it must be prepared in good season." Such conscientious thoroughness is the very best discipline for actual life that an American man or woman can have. American children are the men and women of the future. God bless them as they study around the evening lamp.

Stately Courtesy

IN the midst of the joyous holiday season we do not forget that only a little while ago, the nation passed through a period of intense mourning. The influence of our noble martyr-President, Mr. McKinley, has not passed, and will not pass, though the old year that took him from us glides away into the shadows of lost centuries, and the new year steps radiantly in. A friend of the late President, who is also a reader of this paper, has sent THE CHRISTIAN HERALD a sketch of the great and good man gone, which is very fitting to be read beside the hearth. In a thousand simple households boys are being trained for worthy manhood, here in our country, and they will not be the less strong, the less honorable, and fine and useful if they cultivate the amenities of life in which Mr. McKinley so excelled.

Receiving an appointment in Mexico, I called at the White House on a Monday about two o'clock. It was just at the close of the Christmas recess of 1901. The day had been a most busy one for the President, and great numbers of statesmen of high rank had held conferences with him. Presenting my card to the usher at the door of the Cabinet room, I was promptly admitted. The President arose from his chair at the head of the table and advanced to meet me in a grave, dignified, yet most kindly manner—exhibiting those perfect and admirable traits of character which distinguish the true gentleman. His greeting, though extremely cordial, was, withal, frank and deliberate, and exhibited the proper measure of reserve, delightfully blended with truth and genial courtesy.

Returning, after an absence of two years in Mexico, I was again received by President McKinley, and again accorded a most kindly and cordial greeting, coupled with grave dignity. He had grown, with years and ripe experience, broader, stronger, nobler; yet he was the same true, unaffected, courteous and kindly gentleman.

It was my pleasure to meet him on many occasions, and in different circumstances—in his home, among his old friends and neighbors at Canton, at work and in repose, and amid the pressure of grave public duties at Washington. My last visit to President McKinley will ever be remembered by me. It was on August 14, 1901 just thirty days before his death. He received me on the porch at his Canton home, and sitting down, he gazed fondly at the beauty of the landscape revealed in the warm glow of the setting sun. He was in excellent health and spirits, and was then looking forward with interest to his visit to Buffalo. Every word, every act, and every gesture indicated the dignity of a great ruler, and the simple, unaffected manners of the kind-hearted, well-trained man—a citizen on an equal plane with any of his countrymen. Very tenderly and gratefully he spoke of his wife's illness, and of his love and veneration for members of his Cabinet, and expressed a touching sympathy for those who had experienced a recent family bereavement.

To the soft and tender influences of his mother and invalid wife, he owed a large measure of that exquisite manner, perfect courtesy, and true sympathy which rendered him the most amiable and lovable of men. Developing and practicing under his mother's watchful eye, the traits of character inherited from her while a youth in his Western home, William McKinley acquired the finest degree of delicacy, refinement, and true sympathy, by his love, faithful, and touching ministrations to his wife. It was during the exercise of these offices, daily and hourly, that he was brought into closer love and harmony with God, and thus received that Divine influence which alone can round out and develop true manhood in its purest type.

GEMS FROM THE WORLD'S GREAT PULPITS

Living Thoughts from the Recent Sermons of Eminent Preachers of Many Denominations

THE MISSION OF THE CHURCH

DR. GEO. C. LORIMER, MADISON AVE. BAPTIST CHURCH, NEW YORK

It is the mission of the Church to keep uplifted the veil that discloses the Infinite and Eternal, to kindle on the altar of the soul the sacred fires, which, consuming the dross of our natures, send heavenward our holiest thoughts and aspirations. It is her business to preserve, clear of all obstructions, the narrow straits and channels through which the immortal part in man may daily approach the presence of God, and to disperse the clouds of earthly unbelief which continually obscure the silver-lit boundaries where the waves of this life are arrested by the mystic shores and headlands of the other. She is herself the connecting link between the terrestrial and celestial, the meeting-place of the tides, where the divine and human interblend; the very source and spring, like the great equatorial current which gives rise to the Gulf stream, of that broad and mysterious influence which sweeps onward through the ocean depths of worldliness, and preserves the earth from the glacial blight of atheism and despair. And when she retains this consciousness, and when it is manifest in what she says and does, then to the world she becomes the very ladder seen by Jacob in his vision, connecting earth with heaven, and on which the angels of God are ceaselessly ascending and descending.

INDIVIDUAL RESPONSIBILITY

REV. H. H. BEATTYS, SUMNER AVENUE METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH, BROOKLYN, N. Y.

A LARGE part of the evil doing in life would be done away with if men really felt the grave truth of individual responsibility before God. There is ever the feeling present that somehow we can shift the responsibility that gives nerve to the hand and courage to the heart of the sinner. Let a man feel to the utmost the solemn truth that he is individually responsible for every sin he commits, and he will stay his hand from many a foul deed. The fact that we stand alone in our sinning gives us pause. We go with the crowd, very largely, in this life, but at the last, every soul meets God alone. "Every one of us shall give account of himself to God," is one of the most solemn utterances of the Bible. Death takes every man out of the multitude and sets him down by himself before his God. He can no longer hide in the crowd, but must stand before the searching eye of God. And who can stand before it? How all the disguises and shields and sophistries with which we are wont to hide our sins from our fellows and ourselves will fall away before him who "sets our iniquities before him, our secret sins in the light of his countenance." Happy, thrice happy, the man who has found the divine covering from sin, "whose transgression is forgiven, whose sin is covered."

SAVED TO SERVE

DR. W. P. LOVEJOY, METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH, ATLANTA, GA.

NO man is saved but to save some other man. Until the middle wall of partition had been broken down by the death of Christ this conception of redeeming grace, of the universal Fatherhood of God and brotherhood of man, was barely recognized in the teachings of priest or prophet. But any other conception is incongruous with the spirit of a Gospel which offers salvation equally to all men. "Freely ye have received, freely give," is not so much a command as it is the expression of the nature of spiritual life. He that believeth on Christ, out of him shall flow rivers of living water. The mustard-plant does grow; the leaven does penetrate and leaven the meal. Whatever view may be taken of the absence of this characteristic of the divine life in men prior to the coming of Christ in the flesh, since that day the giving spirit, the missionary spirit, is the law of the life that is in Christ Jesus. This spirit, this worldwide conception of the purpose of the Gospel, this idea that a church is no church that is not filled and fired with the missionary spirit, a universal church at work for reaching the ends of the earth with a universal Gospel—this is the realization of the divine purpose.

SIN AND CRIME

DR. T. B. M'LEOD, CLINTON AVENUE CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH, BROOKLYN, N. Y.

THE Holy Spirit convicts men of sin. To convince men of sin is much more than to convince men of crime. Society is satisfied with rough definitions, and therefore it unfairly uses these words as equivalent and interchangeable. In the higher reasoning this is wrong. There may be sin, where there is no crime. Society has organized to defend itself against crime, and yet every member of society is a sinner. Left to itself, the world has no adequate sense of sin. It condemns faults, offenses, failures, mistakes, misconduct; it takes cognizance of moral evils as they threaten to break up society. Society condemns murder, but it does not go down to the root of murder—to where it began. It convicts men of the crime, but not of the sin which accounts for the crime. It does not trace the crime back to the basis—passion and unholy anger—it takes notice of the act only as a social outrage. But it does not turn the light in upon a man's soul and tell him that the passion which he cherishes is murder: "He that hateth his brother is a murderer." Society may make the distinction between manslaughter and murder and murder in the first and second degree, but it does not convict the feeling which develops into the purpose which ripens into the deed. You ask this and that man: "What think ye of Christ?" And they cannot give you an answer because they do not know how to think of sin. So long as sin is judged from merely a social point of view, the Cross of Christ must ever appear as an exaggeration. Tell the Pharisee—the moral man—strong in the consciousness of his own integrity, that Jesus died for him. The man is utterly unmoved. Tell the man in whose heart the convicting power has been at work that Jesus died for him, and the statement becomes the glorious Gospel of the blessed God. "He shall convince the world of sin," and when the world is convinced, the Gospel of Christ will have free course and be glorified.

SEEING GOD

IN the case of a deep human friendship it is not the form or the feature which constitutes the friend whom you love. You look beyond the countenance, beyond all outward appearance, to the character, the dispositions of mind and heart that call forth your affection and compel your loving esteem. That which makes him your friend lies back of all that the eye of sense can see. A stranger may look upon the self-same face and be utterly unmoved, while one glimpse the concealed Peter which lies in every sifted Simon. Times there are when the great waves of temptation lash the rocks on life's coast with wildest fury; when the great, strong ocean currents seem intent on seizing the land itself and carrying it out to sea. But there is a line which never quivers with the awful pressure of the storm; a line which marks the points where Almighty God says to the Prince of Evil: "Thus far thou mayst go, but no farther." "Simon, Simon! Satan asked for you." Evil, by its very genius, will not believe in good. Every castle of goodness which is being enriched or strengthened it begs to assault. And God so trusts goodness, so sees how real goodness must be stormed and besieged before it will know its true strength—God so feels that character is not character until it stands its ground before evil, and is purified of all dross by fierce flame, that he permits man to be tried, even to be defeated, if by that means Peter may be sifted from Simon.

THE OPEN DOORS

DR. DAVID J. BURRELL, MARBLE COLLEGIATE CHURCH, NEW YORK

THE "power of the keys" was conferred upon Peter as a reward of his good confession (Matt. 16, 19). The keys referred to were not those of the Celestial City. The picture of Peter sitting at its gate as a ticket-taker is a ludicrous perversion of the truth. There are no keys of heaven. Its twelve gates are never closed. As a reward for his loyalty to the fundamental doctrine of the Lordship of Christ, Peter was commissioned to throw open the doors of the visible church to the Gentiles. This was done on the day of Pentecost. Previously, the Jews alone, as a chosen people, had been included in the charmed circle; but on that day, when the influence of the Holy Ghost came down on the assembled company, the middle wall of partition was thrown down. In answer to the cry, "Men and brethren, what shall we do?" Peter, as spokesman of the Church, said, "Repent, and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of your sins; for the promise is unto you and your children, and to all them that are afar off, even as many as the Lord our God shall call." Thus the keys were turned, and the gates rolled back to admit not Jews alone, but all the penitent children of men. It is obvious that in this matter Peter stood solitary and alone. To speak of his successors would be as presumptuous as to make a similar claim with respect to Columbus in his discovery of America. The doors being opened once for all, there was no further need of those keys. The Church is not to endure forever; only until its work is done. There will be no further use of its vitalized machinery when the Kingdom is established on earth; that is, when every knee shall bow and every tongue confess that Jesus Christ is Lord. Then "the holy city, New Jerusalem, will come down from God out of heaven, prepared as a bride adorned for her husband"; and a great voice will be heard, saying, "Behold, the tabernacle of God is among men; and he will dwell with them, and they shall be his people; and God himself shall be with them, and be their God" (Rev. 21: 2, 3). Meanwhile the Church stands, in pursuance of her Lord's promise, as the great miracle of the ages. She has done her work imperfectly, bowing oftentimes at false shrines, untrue to her espousal vows; yet she has continued to live because she had a work to do. And, notwithstanding her imperfections of character and vacillation of purpose, hers has been the one transforming influence through the history of the ages.

STRENGTH OUT OF WEAKNESS

REV. MARK GUY PEARSE, LONDON, ENG.

THE great hindrance in the religious life is not weakness of character. To the weakest here I would say, God can make as good a saint from thee as from anybody. He can do with weak as well as with strong. What would you think of a mother who could do with the strong and not with the weak children? Your weakness is no hindrance to him. He can do with weak folks, and we are all weak somewhere, and if we don't know it, our friends do. And, besides, our blessed Lord has such a blessed fashion of turning weak folks into strong ones. God can work a miracle still. Don't think the age of miracles is over. "Out of weakness we are made strong." This was written for us today. God can put backbone into people. Our hindrance does not lie in the character. The Gospel can turn a man into what he ought to be.

Welcomed as a Friend

J. E. B., Elliott, Ill., writes: "THE CHRISTIAN HERALD I consider superior to any Christian paper under my observation. When a man once begins to subscribe for it, it seems to become a fixed habit of renewal. To be without THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is, for any man living in the country, to be without a good friend. We love to read it. Long may it prosper and continue to carry good tidings to thousands!"

DR. GEO. C. LORIMER, PASTOR OF MADISON AVE. BAPTIST CHURCH, NEW YORK

quickens your pulse and lights up your face with joy. What is the explanation? You see that which is invisible to the stranger. He sees only a form; you see a friend. His is sense perception; yours is soul sight. Nay, more; your souls may meet and you may be vividly conscious of one another without the intervention of form. Even so it is possible for us to see God, to encounter him in all the varied experiences of life, to feel his presence and know that he feels yours. This is the privilege, the joy, the blessedness of the human spirit. It grows clearer and stronger with the development of the spiritual life. This is the vision that will be perfected in heaven, when the soul shall be freed from every impurity and limitation and we shall see him "face to face."

THE PURPOSE OF TRIAL

DR. F. W. GUNSAULUS, CENTRAL CHURCH, CHICAGO

BACK a short distance we go in the life of Peter from this warning (Luke 22: 31), and we hear his Master make a very definite announcement to him. His brother has just brought him to Jesus, and eyes which saw into both his frailties and possibilities at the same instant have beheld him. The great gem lies there all covered up with earth. His present character is a mixture of the low and the lofty. Jesus, however, says: "Thou art Simon—thou shalt be Peter." There was disclosed the great purpose of this Worker in character, with respect to this concealed jewel which had come into his hand. This sifting must be but one step in the process, which was begun when Jesus first saw him—the process of bringing Peter out of Simon—the stone out from the environment which almost entirely concealed it.

There is nothing in the power of evil in the world, so far as under the permissive providence of God, it sifts us, to destroy

The Needle's Eye

BY FLORENCE M. KINGSLEY FOR THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

A NEW SERIAL STORY
WRITTEN EXPRESSLY

Synopsis of the Earlier Chapters

Erasmus Winch, a small farmer, finds in his barn early one winter morning the body of a beautiful young woman. At her side is a new-born infant, Elizabeth Winch wishes to adopt the child; Winch objects, and a stormy scene follows, in which the wife carries her point. She finds on the body of the deceased a Bible, on the fly leaf of which is inscribed a text and a name. The body of the mother is removed to the undertaker's establishment of Elphaleet Dundor, who is ordered by the authorities to bury it at the expense of the town. On the evening before the funeral, a stranger visits the place, and asks to see the dead woman. He proposes to Dundor to pay the expenses of a respectable funeral. Dundor accepts the money under a pledge of secrecy, but proceeds with the paper funeral, and keeps the money for himself. Elizabeth Winch names the child Immanuel, from the words of the text in the Bible belonging to the unknown mother. He grows up, adopted by Elizabeth, but mistreated by her husband, till he reaches the age of five years. Winch then decides that the boy is old enough to be of use about the farm.

Chapter VI—His Father

NOW mind 'at you set still, Manuel, when we git inside, jest 's if you was in church!" The two were walking soberly up the broad path which led to the residence of the afflicted Turners, as Elizabeth repeated for perhaps the twentieth time the exhortation quoted above.

"My! ain't the flowers han'some!" whispered Elizabeth, pausing wistfully, "I wish 't I had a slip of that g'ranium!"

"Lookin' at the blows, Mis' Winch?" inquired a nasal voice from behind. "It doos seem strange to see 'em a-bloomin' so bright in this vale of tears, don't it?"

"Why, I declare, Mis' Dundor, I don't know when I've seen you before!" exclaimed Elizabeth, turning quickly around. "You ain't lookin' very well."

"No, I ain't well," responded the other with a heavy sigh and a subdued sniff. She was a tall, stoop-shouldered woman, with a curiously mottled, lavender-tinted complexion, which contrasted unpleasantly with her pale blue eyes and reddish hair. "I've been awful poorly most all summer; I tell Dundor 'at he 'll be buryin' me come fall." The woman's eyes had been busying themselves with the small figure of Immanuel as she spoke. "I s'pose," she went on, with increasing animation, "that this is the child 'at was born in your barn. I never seen him before."

"Yes," admitted Elizabeth, a mixture of pride and reluctance in her manner; "this is 'Manuel.'" She picked an imaginary bit of lint from his tunic, and settled his hat more squarely over the short dark curls. "Say how-do you-do to the lady, 'Manuel!'" she added, in a severe voice.

The child glanced up shyly into the watery blue eyes of the stranger. "How-do-you-do?" he repeated, obediently.

"Where in creation do you suppose his mother come from?" ejaculated Mrs. Dundor, blinking thoughtfully. "I s'pose you ain't never found out who his father is, have you?"

"No, I never have; an' what's more, I don't never want to," said Elizabeth, shortly.

The child lifted his eyes in manifest astonishment. "I know," he said softly.

"It doos seem a nawful pity to be lef' alone in this cold world," sighed Mrs. Dundor. "But it's a terrible responsibility to raise a child; you can't never tell how they 'll turn out. There 's Dundor standin' in the door; I guess if we want seats close to the mourners we 'd better be goin' in. Land, child, what do you want?"

Immanuel had grasped a fold of the woman's gown with determination. "I want to tell you about my father," he said eagerly. "I do know who he is. Munny told me." He pointed his finger at Elizabeth, who flushed with annoyance.

"You don't say!" cried Mrs. Dundor, nodding and blinking with pleased attention. "I thought mebbe you knew more 'n you was willin' to let on, Mis' Winch! Some folks would have thought twict afore tellin' what wa'n't so in the house of mournin'. Who is your father, bub?"

"Come right along in the house, 'Manuel,'" said Elizabeth, struggling with her mortification. "Don't pay no 'tention to what he says, Mis' Dundor; 't ain't likely I'd tell a lie one time, especially right afore the child."

"But you did tell me 'bout my father, munny," persisted the boy. "He lives up on the hill, an' he loves me more 'n anybody else; you said so, munny."

"You might 's well own up, Mis' Winch, seein' the cat 's out the bag," put in the undertaker's wife, her pale lips widening with a smile of malicious enjoyment. "They say it takes children an' fools to tell the truth."

"Well, if you mus' know, Mis' Dundor, I tol' the child 'at God in heaven is his Father," said Elizabeth, goaded into speech. "That 's Gospil truth, and you can't deny it."

"Fer the land's sake!" ejaculated the other, with uplifted hands. "It ain't no less 'an blasphemous to talk that way, seein' it ain't no ways likely 'at he 's one of the 'lect."

Elizabeth turned her back upon the speaker and hastily mounted the steps, dragging the child after her. "What a nawful naughty boy you be!" she whispered indignantly; you ain't got no manners after all I 've done for ye!"

meadow larks called and answered one another in a soft sweetness. There were other sounds about the place: the stamping of restless horses, the creaking of wheels, the shutting of distant doors; men's voices subdued to an inarticulate murmur, the going and coming of hushed feet in the room overhead. High above all struck in the nasal voices of the village choir, tuned to piercing insistence in the long drawn, dolorous notes of "The

Immanuel, depressed by Elizabeth's unwonted reproof and the general gloom, hid his face in Elizabeth's shawl; an aching lump struggled in his throat, forcing at last a loud wail from his lips.

"Why, 'Manuel, with an emphatic little shake, "do you keep quiet this minute; don't you see the minister's a-goin' to speak?"

"Man that is born of woman is of few days and full of trouble. He cometh forth like a flower, and is cut down: he fleeth also as a shadow, and continueth not!"

Again the child's voice filled the solemn pause with a choking sob of inarticulate misery.

Elizabeth glanced about her in perplexed distress to meet a fire of shocked and displeased glances. Mr. Elphaleet Dundor was already tip-toeing his way across the room with an air of professional omniscience.

"I 'd let him go outside, if I was you," suggested a kindly whisper from behind.

Elizabeth turned, her face on fire. "Oh Mis' Haskil," she breathed excitedly. "I don't know what in the world ails 'Manuel; I wouldn't ha' brought him only he always been so awful good in church!"

"My Rosy 's somewheres in the yard," returned the other, beaming encouragement from her broad, ruddy face; "funerals ain't no place for children. Run 'long out doors, sonny."

"Yes, do, do, 'Manuel; an' don't you come back neither. Go quick, before Liph Dundor gets here!" urged Elizabeth.

With a long sigh of relief the child slipped from his chair, and darted swift and noiseless as a frightened bird into the sunshine. Still breathing hard, his shoulders shaken with recurring sobs, he made his way to the far side of the deep, old-fashioned yard where ancient apple trees, unpruned for many a year stretched their branches earthward. The grass grew lush and tall here, quite shoulder high indeed, and tasseled out with fragrant plumes. Immanuel dropped on all fours into the midst of this verdant cover, and crept animal-wise into a snug hiding-place roofed and walled with green.

The long flute calls of the meadow larks, "Oh—sweet—Oh—sweet—Oh—my own sweet!" flooded the silence with tranquillity. The boy lay flat upon his back and stared into the leafy arches above his head: dazzling reflections of sky and cloud shimmered on the budding spheres which loaded the gnarled boughs. He wondered vaguely why he had wept. The comfort of this one among his Father's many mansions had already penetrated his soul.

A human voice broke harshly into the harmonious chord of peace. "I sez to m' wife, you women-folks gits smarter and knowin'er every day, I sez: but Mis' Winch takes the cake so fur!" The muffled tones ended in a low chuckle.

From his hiding-place Immanuel discerned other tokens of human proximity in two black shadows which blotted out the sunshine among the nodding grass plumes at his feet.

The voice went on in a tone of lazy enjoyment. "We men-folks 'ull git whipped clean out at the polls some day or other, an' I 'll bet ye on it! Ef the critters don't 'low us the priv'lege of c'rectin' our own young uns, onct they git a holt of the franchise they 'll keep us 'om votin' altogether, an' I 'll bet ye on it!"

"What yer gassin' about, Lute?" demanded a gruff voice, at sound of which

"HERE, YOU SHALL HAVE MY BERRIES," SAID THE BOY EAGERLY.

The child's large brown eyes filled with astonished tears, through which he gazed in silence about the dim room into which Elizabeth was pushing him. Presently he was set emphatically upon a wooden-bottomed chair. Elizabeth taking her place beside him with compressed lips. There were a great many people in the room, the child perceived, women mostly, dressed sombrely. Between the closed and darkened windows stood a long, black object heaped with white flowers, tortured into stiff shapes of stars and anchors and crowns. Among the sad-faced women, tip-toed the thin, active figure of the undertaker, with all the inconsequent bustle of the blue-bottle fly which boomed at intervals on the window-pane. A broken slat of the tightly closed blinds gave dazzling glimpses of green sunlit grass, and the scarlet and yellow of nodding blossoms. In the fields beyond, the child involuntarily shrank closer to the trunk of the friendly apple tree.

"Liph Dundor tol' me 'bout it yiste'd'y; he thought 't was too all-fired good to keep, an' I'm blamed if I don't. Liph, he tol' me to keep it to myself, but I reckon you 'd ought to know it. Say, I'll bet my wife 'ud think twict afore she 'd call in anybody offen the street to interfere when I 'm busy a-lickin' the boys! Why, ye can't gin 'em too much of it; ez I tol' Liph. Spare the rod, I sez, and spile the—"

"Who 's been interferin' with who? What in thunder you talkin' 'bout anyhow?" demanded Winch, raising his voice.

"Don't you git 'xcited now, Ras, or they 'll hear ye inside. You was givin' that 'dopted boy o' yourn a little taste of the gad day b'fore yiste'd'y, wa'n't you?"

"Yas, I was, an' what of it?"

"Wall, you 'll remember 'at you was intr'upted by Liph kind of unexpected like, an'—"

"She didn't dare ask Liph Dundor to—"

"That 's jest what she done, by jingo! I thought 't was mighty brash of Mis' Winch, same 's I tol' my wife. But, say, you ain't a-goin' to make no fuss 'bout it, I hope! Thinks, sez I, it 's sech an all-fired good joke on Ras, 'at mebbe he 'll enjoy it as much 's the rest on us!"

"It 's mighty enjoyable, thank ye, Lute," said Winch dryly. "Mis' Winch hes enjoyed it a'ready, I persoom. I 'll see to it 'at the boy don't lose nothin' by it!"

"I 'll bet ye!" agreed the other, with a hoarse laugh, cut suddenly short by a spasm of propriety.

At sound of the long-drawn windy cadence of a hymn, the two shadows moved slowly away. The child sat up and gazed about him with the furtive air of a wild creature confronted with some nameless peril. A friendly gap in the hedge behind the apple tree offered safe passage into the sunlit, blossoming meadow, where yellow-breasted lovers still called entreatingly: "Sweet—sweet! Oh—my own sweet!"

"My father loves me!" whispered a small, choked voice. "He loves me. I am going to find him!"

Chapter VII.—Hilda.

LIKE other seekers after the divine in all ages, the boy lifted up his eyes to the hills, whose swelling sides clothed with multi-colored squares of corn and pasture were crowned and belted with dark woods. His roving fancy reverted for an instant to the patchwork quilt with which the provident Elizabeth had tucked him snugly from the night since he could remember. The thought forced large tears, through which the landscape wavered as in a dream. Nevertheless he pushed on determinedly, following the line of fences, laid negligently of rough-hewn rails half hid in the lavish growth of weeds and low-growing trees.

A narrow road winding up by slow degrees from the lap of the valley next tempted his wandering feet. Here the child, mindful of Elizabeth's oft-repeated admonitions, paused to divest himself of his shoes and stockings. For a while he carried these useful articles in the skirt of his tunic, his brown toes sinking luxuriously into the dust cooled by a recent shower. Then, led by fast-springing hopes, he carefully deposited them behind a clump of mullein, which spread its stately velvet leaves by the roadside. "My Father will let me go barefoot even on Sunday," he thought, and ran forward with a new sense of joy and freedom. A little later the "Sunday hat," bound beneath his smarting chin with a strenuous rubber cord, found its way to a green bank, where he fancied that it might serve as a nest for certain friendly and inquisitive crows, who craned their necks from the fence rails to stare and chatter after the small figure.

Wild raspberries grew by the roadside; the steep bank twinkled with their scarlet fires. Beyond the fence also, where an upland meadow, clad in sparse grasses, lay sweet and silent beneath the warm afternoon sun. This meadow dipped toward a brook on its further side, and beyond, the white walls of a farmhouse shone through dark trees. Far beneath lay what appeared to the child's wondering eyes as the whole great world—a pageant of field and wood in the bright valley, with houses no bigger than his thumb and the loose-flung coils of the river gleaming blue and silver. On a narrow thread of road, dust-white, a line of black dots moved slowly.

The wanderer sat down on the mossy top of a giant rock which shouldered its way out of the hillside and looked long at the amazing picture. For the moment he was quite as happy as the little black crickets which sang at his feet. Like them he was filled with the joyous life which throbs at the heart of all nature.

Wrapt in the sweet silence, the boy did not hear small stealthy footsteps which crept quite up to the big rock, but he felt the touch of warm fingers which essayed to pull from his grasp the cluster of berries, which he had refrained from eating because they were too beautiful.

"I want 'em; they's bigger 'an mine," said a voice, sweet as a thrush.

Immanuel involuntarily tightened his grasp upon his treasure as he turned grave, startled eyes upon the intruder.

Blue eyes, shaded by a fluff of yellow curls, met his look of inquiry bravely. "I want 'em dis minute," repeated the sweet voice, imperiously.

"Whose child are you?" demanded the boy, unconsciously assuming the half-stern, half-patronizing air with which this inquiry had invariably been put to himself.

"I'm my mamma's little girl," answered the child, and immediately burst into loud crying.

"Why do you cry? Here, you shall have my berries," said the boy, eagerly pressing the bunch of fruit into the small rosy hands which hid the blue eyes.

The tears ceased as suddenly as an April shower. "Why did you cry?" he repeated.

"Because," answered the child, puckering up her face as if undecided between tears and berries, "my mamma's gone to heaven—gran'ma says so."

"What's your name?"

"Hilda—that's my name—Hilda."

"You're small, Hilda, much smaller 'an I, an' I'll tell you somethin'; heaven's where God is. God is my father. I'm goin' to find him. When I do, I think I shall stay with him all the while, an' never, never come down."

The child stared at him with round eyes. She made no answer, her mouth being pleasantly filled with berries; but she nodded her yellow head understandingly.

"I'm goin' now," said the boy with decision. "You c'n come if you want to."

"Pick me some more berries, boy; I like berries."

"Will you come then? I guess your mother 'll be at God's house."

Hilda shook her head. "My mamma's gone to heaven in a black box," she said positively. "I saw her go—just a little while ago. I don't want to go to heaven in a box."

"This is heaven," said the boy eagerly. "God made these berries an' that pretty stone, an'—an' ev'rythin'!"

"Tis not heaven; it's my gran'pa's meadow."

"Yes, 'tis, 'cause—"

"Tis n't!"

"You're a naughty girl to conterdict," said Immanuel, with dignity. "This is heaven 'cause God's here. He's ev'rywhere, an' ev'rywhere 'at he is is heaven."

Hilda looked at him with a shrewd twinkle in her blue eyes. "Where you goin' then?" she demanded.

"I'm goin'—well, way up to the top of this hill, I guess."

"Then I'm goin' home. Aunt Em's fryin' doughnuts an' I want one. The sugar bush is up there, but there isn't any sugar now, so I shan't go."

"Oh, what a bad, naughty girl to run away! Come here this minute." The words, delivered in a high-pitched, monotonous voice, caused both children to turn suddenly. A stout sun-bonneted figure was coming slowly toward them across the field.

"I—I must go now," stammered Immanuel, a sudden doubt as to the righteousness of his proceedings clouding his bright eyes.

"It's only Aunt Em," said Hilda, coolly, reaching after another berry. "I never mind her an' you need n't. Let's run; she could n't catch us."

Kansas' Great Revival

HUNDREDS CONFESS CHRIST AT WELLINGTON AND THE SURROUNDING VILLAGES

WELLINGTON, Kans., has lately been the scene of a revival of unusual interest. Evangelist Williams (whose work has frequently been referred to in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD), assisted by Charles Alexander, the Gospel singer, have held a series of remarkable meetings in that city, extending over a period of four weeks. Nearly 600 professed conversion. People came from many nearby towns and villages attracted by the news of the revival at Wellington.

In one excursion from Winfield, eight hundred people came on a single train—probably the biggest revival train ever known in the West. A great and marked change has taken place in Wellington as the result of the spiritual excitement. Swearing, loafing, drinking and gambling are banished, for a time at least; home prayer meetings are held everywhere; dancing is unheard of; and an improved moral tone is everywhere perceptible. Even the school children have felt the influence of the movement, and the teachers are delighted with the radical change in the pupils' conduct.

An Unwelcome Honor

I sat one evening at the tea-table with a large, prosperous family, who thought they had received great blessings out of our meetings. Several of the young people had been converted; and the parents reconsecrated their lives, as they supposed. Looking at the interesting faces, I said: "God could find timber here for the mission field, couldn't he?" "Hush!" said the mother in warning whisper. "Why," said I, "you wouldn't withhold one of your children if God called upon you to make the offering, would you, after the blessing?" "I have yielded," I said, "but I don't want that you wouldn't call his attention to it." When some young lady with a beautiful face came to our notice, we are not around here for attention will be called to anything that I see. It is not our duty to throw a foreign political mission, we generally consider it an honor. But when the King of Kansas and Lord of Land looks down on our loved ones to represent him and the kingdom of heaven in a foreign land, how apt we are to consider it a mission and a great sacrifice!

EVANGELIST WILLIAMS

As to Dancing

A dancing master can come into a town one season and tear down all the churches have been able to build up in ten years of hard work. I will tell you what will make you see harm in a dance; let an undertaker come to take your measure for a shroud or get a tap on the head.

The Boy Who Didn't Forget

One day a good man riding through the country stopped at a watering-trough to water his horse. A barefooted boy stood at the trough. "My boy," said the man, "do you love Jesus?" The boy looked down abashed and did not reply. "But he loves you," continued the man, "and he was once a boy. He knows all about the temptations and troubles in a boy's life, and will be your best friend, if you will let him. He will forgive your sins and help you through life, and at last will give you a home with him on high. Won't you give him your heart?" The boy turned away, and the good man rode on. Many years later, a young preacher came up and offered his hand to a bishop, who was presiding over an annual conference. "Bishop, you don't know me, do you?" "I believe not," said the bishop. "But I know you. Do you remember fifteen years ago you stopped at the watering-trough to water your horse, and you spoke to a barefooted boy who stood at the trough, about Jesus? I am that boy, and your words led me to seek the Lord and later to preach the Gospel."

Instant in season and out of season is the only rule for the Christian.

A Champion's Descendant

DURING the preparations for the coronation of King Edward VII., the question has arisen of observing the ancient custom of the champion's challenge. Heretofore a man clad in mail rode into Westminster Hall, and, flinging his gauntlet on the floor, challenged to mortal combat any person who disputed the monarch's right to the throne. The privilege of doing this duty has belonged for many generations to the ancient family of Dymoke or Dimmick, the head of which has possession of the estate called Scrivelsby Court, on condition that he performs this office. It is a quaint proceeding, but so incongruous with modern life that it will probably be omitted at the coronation next year.

It is an interesting fact that a representative of the hereditary champion's family was living until this year in Brooklyn, N. Y. Sarah Mervina Dimmick was the daughter of a New York farmer, and had a character worthy of her ancient lineage. She had sublime courage and a determination that overcame obstacles. At a time when schools in her neighborhood were scarce, she gained an education and made herself an efficient teacher. Many men who are now in high places owe to her their initiation in knowledge. After a few years of that work, she became the wife of Dr. Amos H. Brundage, a physician who had his own way to make in the world. They were succeeding, and were happy in their home in New York with their two children, when the young husband was called to serve his country in the Civil War. During the years of his absence the brave young wife kept the home together, and was ready to welcome her husband on his return.

Later, the cause of Temperance enlisted her service. She was one of the first officers of the first Woman's Christian Temperance Union at Newark, N. J., and for many years was in constant request as a speaker in the sections of the State where a W. C. T. U. was to be established. Perhaps the old spirit of her martial forefathers inspired her in this conflict with the gigantic enemy of her country's weal. In any case, she proved a doughty champion of temperance of whom the old warriors might well be proud. On her removal to Brooklyn, she was for a time active in the W. C. T. U. there and President of the Reform Movement, but in '88, enfeebled health compelled her to relinquish this work, but in private life she showed the same courageous attitude for truth and righteousness and lived a noble, beneficent life. Her death is deeply mourned by her two sons, one of them a well-known physician, and the other a minister of the Gospel, who, like the sons of King Lemuel's ideal woman, "arise up and call her blessed."

A Canadian's Appreciation

Mrs. J. W. S. Hampton Station, writes: "I received your Red Letter Bible in good condition. Am delighted with it. It is a rare bargain. I do not see how you can sell it so cheaply. I am showing it to my friends and they pronounce it beautiful. Some say it is worth five dollars."

GEMS FROM NEW BOOKS

THE STORY OF FORTY-ONE QUEENS*

MARY HOWITT'S Queens of England is an attractive book from every point of view. The literary form is good, and, as a rule, the writer keeps the personal element well in the foreground. Frequently there is too much confusing historical detail; but on the whole the character pictures are definite and life-like. The revised edition of Geneva Armstrong, now offered to the public, besides completing the life of Queen Victoria, is in other respects an improvement on former editions. If the reviser had felt at liberty to abridge freely, the volume might have been profitably cut down one-third, if not more. Books of this kind, like the messages of presidents, must be made short if they are to be read.

The subject-matter of the book is fascinating. In these forty-one lives, how much passion, crime and tragedy, and how little happiness! From their birth, these feminine royalties found themselves in the iron grasp of a system, which mocked their aspirations for a self-ordered life by the splendid profusion of their surroundings. They had every known luxury but one—that of doing as they pleased. Most of them submitted to fate and resigned themselves to misery. One at least became demoralized, asserted herself with energy, and displayed a ferocious cruelty worthy of the worst kings. One of them, Queen Elizabeth, was a real ruler, the greatest if not the only one in the whole list, and accordingly the history of her life is an essential part of English national history. Another, Queen Katherine, by her dignified and womanly resistance to Henry VIII. did, in a negative way, help to set the great English Reformation in motion, which her daughter Queen Mary then tried in vain to check. Queen Victoria, by her tact and firmness, and, above all, by knowing when to yield, maintained a real grasp on public affairs throughout a reign of unprecedented length and prosperity. Something like this, but not in an equal degree, may be said of Queen Anne. But the great majority of English Queens have had little to do with making history, except to be the wives of kings who neglected them, or did worse, and the mothers of other kings whom they were not permitted to treat with maternal care and authority. Yet this volume shows them to have been women of feeling and intellect, not very different from the women we meet every day in private life. They were neither monsters nor paragons, but sorrowful, feeble, human creatures, bearing the burden of royalty with the strength they had.

The reader will find, in many of these life stories, a tragic interest superior to anything in fiction. There are the happy childhood, the careful education, the betrothal to a stranger, the breaking off of a real affection, the splendid marriage ceremony, the pompous grandeur of royal existence, the plots of courtiers, the indifference of the kingly husband, the humiliating presence of royal mistresses, petty persecutions, children taken away, a broken heart and an early, perhaps a violent, death. The author speaks plainly, does not mince matters, and holds the reader's interest by stating facts. Of course, on the points about which controversies have raged for centuries, and still are active, the author must take one side or the other. Henry VIII., Cardinal Wolsey, and Elizabeth are not spared; Queen Mary I. is treated gently, and so is Anne Boleyn; Jane Seymour is severely censured, and the picture of Queen Mary II., wife of William III., is much less attractive than that drawn by Lord Macaulay. Still, it must be admitted that, from a historical point of view, the book is carefully and conscientiously written, and its conclusions deserve respect even if they are not adopted. But where did the publisher get the portraits? No references are given, the earlier likenesses must be apocryphal, and some of the later ones are doubtful. The value of the book would be enhanced by giving the pedigree of each picture.

PENTECOST

Christ's Promise of Spiritual Power Fulfilled to his Waiting People

BY MRS. M. BAXTER

GOD has his times and seasons. There is perfect order in all which he does. The things which are recorded in the Pentateuch "were our exhortations," and "were written for our admonition." Thus we see why it was, that just when Pentecost was fully come, the Holy Ghost was sent. The sacrificial death of the Lord Jesus was the fulfilment of the Passover, but the corn of wheat had fallen into the ground and died that it might bring forth much fruit (John 12: 24); now the ingathering of the first fruits must be fulfilled by a little company coming filled with the Holy Ghost. They were the beginning of that "people for his name" (Acts 15: 14), which the Lord will take away when he comes (John 14: 3; I. Thes. 4: 17), before he gathers his final harvest, prepared by the feast of tabernacles. The little band of "about a hundred and twenty" (Acts 1: 13-15), "the eleven and they which were with them," "were all with one accord in the place"; "the upper chamber" (Acts 1: 13; 2: 1). Their Lord had commanded them to tarry in the city of Jerusalem until they should be "endued with power from on high," and they had been "continually in the temple praising and blessing God"; and when they were not there, they were to be found in the upper chamber. They waited "for the promise of the Father"; not in sadness, as though there were a doubt that the Lord would keep his promise; but in glad and patient certainty; for they really and fully believed, according to the word of Christ, that the Comforter would come unto them.

The waiting ones were all together for one object; the strife which should be the greatest as came to an end; this miserable littleness disappeared before the greatness of their expectation, that God the Holy Ghost should indeed come to be in them as the Father had dwelt in their Lord (John 14: 10). They had one through deep humiliation in seeing, through the opening up to them of the Scriptures by their risen Lord, how little they had understood or really served him; and now they were self-emptying and ready to be possessed and guided by the Holy Spirit. God gave the Holy Spirit to them that ask him (Luke 11: 13), to them that obey him (Acts 5: 32), to them that believe and receive remission of sins (Acts 10: 43-44). The waiting disciples had fulfilled these conditions; God would do the rest.

God spoke at "sundry times and in divers manners unto the fathers by the prophets" (Heb. 1: 1). He has also been pleased to give the Holy Spirit to his people at sundry times and in divers manners. It is a great mistake to think there must necessarily be some outward manifestation, palpable to the senses, when the Holy Ghost is given: it is just as great a mistake to say there never is such a manifestation. It is not for us to dictate to God, or to choose how he shall act. Who hath directed the Spirit of the Lord, or being his counsellor hath taught him?

It was prophesied of God's Messiah: "He shall not strive nor cry; neither shall any man hear his voice on the street" (Isa. 40: 3; Matt. 12: 19); but what the twelve disciples heard in the ear was to be proclaimed upon the housetops (Matt. 10: 27). And thus, when the Holy Ghost came to testify of Christ, his disciples, filled with the Spirit, were, as he had said, to testify also (John 15: 27). And thus it was that the remarkable fact of a hundred and twenty men and women speaking in many languages "the wonderful works of God," and especially the work which Christ had wrought upon the cross, became quickly noised abroad, and the God-fearing Jews from many Jewish colonies in Asia, Africa, and Europe, who were in Jerusalem, came together with the multitude to see and hear of themselves. "Every man heard them speak in his own language." He who had once, in his holy majesty, confounded the language of daring sinners who were acting in high-handed rebellion against him (Gen. 11: 9), now, for this supreme moment, suspended his own judgment, and gave language and understanding of language, so that no single auditor should mistake the God-sent message.

It was not all, however, who bowed before the Word so miraculously and powerfully conveyed to them. Some of Satan's creatures were present, and, taking advantage of the wondering question of the many, they made the unworthy insinuation: "These men are all of new wine."

Peter, standing up with the eleven, lifted up his voice, and said unto them, i.e., unto the inquirers and the scoffers together: "Ye men of Judea, and all ye that dwell at Jerusalem, be this known unto you, and hearken unto my words. For these are not drunken, as ye suppose, seeing this is but the third hour of the day. But this is that which was spoken of by the prophet Joel." Who taught Peter thus to understand this prophet? He was an unlearned and ignorant man (Acts 4: 13); he had never been in the school of Gamaliel, or of any of the great theological professors of his day. Who taught him? The Holy Ghost, who had entered into, and dwelt within him, and who put into his thoughts and lips the words he spoke; so that it was not he who spoke, but the Spirit of the Father which spoke in him (Matt. 10: 20), and the word was given him at the same hour.

The prophecy of Joel was of the last days. If the Jews had received their Messiah, Christ would have come again to reign at that time. But they rejected their Messiah and crucified him. They would not have God the Father to reign over them (I. Sam. 8: 7); they would not have the kingdom which God the Son preached to them, and thus they crucified him; and when they stoned Stephen, they resisted and rejected God the Holy Ghost. What could God do with men who rejected the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost? Israel must come under judgment. Then was revealed to the Apostle Paul the mystery of the Church, which had been hid from ages and generations; and while the people for his name are being gathered out in this, the dispensation of the Spirit, the last days are prolonged until the last member of Christ's body is called and justified, sanctified and glorified, and meanwhile blindness in part is happened to Israel, until the fulness of the Gentiles be come in (Rom. 11: 25).

A Change in Russia

Is Russia awakening to the necessity for religious freedom within her borders? At a recent missionary conference of the Province of Orel, held to discuss steps for proceeding against heretics, the Marshal of the provincial nobles, M. Stachovitch, rose to protest against harsh measures, saying that it was high time for Russia to think of granting to all the invaluable prerogative of liberty of conscience. M. Stachovitch proposed that the government should be petitioned to repeal many of the severe statutes directed against heresy. Needless to say his proposal was rejected, but the newspapers took the matter up, arguing for and against the Marshal's resolution, and for the first time in the history of their country Russians were treated to luminous articles in favor of freedom of religion, in favor of abolishing the penal enactments, or some of them, which are directed against various bodies of Russian heretics. It is safe to say that in the reign of the present Czar's father the appearance of such articles would have been followed by the speedy suppression of the newspapers in question.

ENTERING THE KINGDOM

A Change of Nature Essential for the Entrance from Natural to Spiritual Life

EVERY Jew in Christ's time was familiar with the phrase, "the kingdom of God." The idea of the revival of that time when God was their king, was present in all devout hearts. Their poets and prophets had taught them to look for a time when Judea, beloved of God, and ruled by him, should be first among the nations, the centre of the whole world. The fact explains the remarkable popularity of John the Baptist. It gladdened the hearts of the best men of the nation to hear that the kingdom of heaven was at hand. True, the rulers and the aristocracy did not believe in him, but it was not because they did not long for the kingdom, but because they did not believe that such a kingdom as they looked for was at hand. And they were right. John, himself, does not appear to have clearly understood his own message, but he knew enough to warn his hearers of its spiritual character, and was aware that the rite he prescribed, typified a spiritual cleansing, and was the earnest of another change which he described as a baptism of the Holy Ghost. Still the people listened, not understanding, but clinging to the idea of the coming King, who should restore the kingdom. When Christ appeared, and was designated by John as the Man of whom he had spoken; when the miracles Christ performed became public talk, and still more when Christ cleansed the temple, the hopes of the people rose high. Nicodemus, evidently, was deeply impressed, and while not wishing to identify himself openly with the young Teacher till he saw more of him, paid him a secret visit to hear his plans and advise with him as to his future course.

That he was mystified and disappointed by the interview it is easy to see. Christ was indeed about to found a kingdom, but it was not the kind of kingdom Nicodemus expected. It was to be a kingdom founded without force; a kingdom in which none were enrolled but voluntary subjects; and a kingdom that would have none of the worldly prestige that the Jews expected. These matters, however, were not so astonishing to the Pharisee as was Christ's statement of the condition of admission. Jews were not eligible for admission, on the simple ground of descent from Abraham. Only men who were born again could enter that kingdom. Nicodemus was perfectly familiar with this figure of the new birth, in spite of his assumed ignorance. He knew that the Gentile desiring to become a Jew must be baptized and become in the eyes of the law a new man. He entered the waters of baptism a Gentile; he emerged from them a Jew. So complete and absolute was this change, as Edersheim has shown, that his relationships were dissolved by the rite, and as a new man he began a new life. This was the doctrine of the Rabbis, and if Christ intended admitting Gentiles to the kingdom, Nicodemus would not be surprised to learn that some rite typifying a new beginning of life would be required. His amazement was at the idea that the Jew also needed to be born again, or born from above. But Christ did not dismiss the literalness of Nicodemus' objection. He showed him that the objection did not apply. Even if a man could be physically born again, he would not thereby become eligible. Water does not rise above its source, and so what was born of the flesh would be flesh. The trouble was not with the flesh, but with the spirit. It was the spirit that needed renewal, and this applied to both Jew and Gentile. Christ proceeds to show why the change is necessary and how it was to be effected. The divine energy was to be applied. But that fact, and its inference that no one could control or direct the Spirit, did not relieve men of responsibility. The Holy Spirit would be imparted to all who believed on Christ and sought the transforming power.

Thus we have in Christ's conception, a spiritual kingdom, and the requisite that it shall be composed of spiritual men. We have, too, the fact that no man is born in the condition fit for entering it. He is endowed with capacities for living in this world, and he may grow to maturity, and on to old age, and perform his functions in this life, without ever hearing of God. Like the animals around him, such knowledge is not necessary to his life. But that is not all. He has capacities for spiritual development. The caterpillar may go through his caterpillar life in contentment, and may be crushed or frozen, and that is the end of him. But he is provided with capacities for something else. He spins his cocoon, enters into it, stays there a certain period, and emerges a creature with beautiful wings, able to lead a very different life from his caterpillar existence. The embryo wings were within him all the time, whether he knew it or not, and under the fitting conditions, they developed, and he became a new creature. So the Spirit finds men in the caterpillar stage, grovelling in the earth. But they have capacities for a higher existence. The Spirit touches them, and they spring into a new life. They are born again. Like the butterfly, they can soar. They belong then to a higher order of existence, members of a new kingdom—Christ's kingdom. Undeveloped, they cannot enter it any more than a caterpillar can fly. The change of nature is essential. But the change is optional; it is not forced on any man. The Gospel is preached to him, the good news that a higher life, called eternal life, is within his reach; that through faith in Christ he may have it; that he is intended for it, and endowed with capacities for it, and that the Holy Spirit, which can give it, comes upon all who sincerely seek for the privilege. If he submits, and seeks with all his heart, he receives new life, and is born again. But except a man be born again he cannot enter the kingdom of God.

*Topic of the Christian Endeavor Society, Epworth League and Baptist Young People's Union for Jan. 12. John 3: 1-8; 5: 24.

Prophecy Fulfilling

A resident in Jerusalem, a converted Jew, in the course of a recent letter, says: "Within the last ten years a wonderful change has taken place in the land. I remember the time when it was unsafe for anyone to go outside the city walls of Jerusalem after dark, and if any were out, they had to hasten back as soon as the sun set, for at that time all the gates were closed, and not reopened until sunrise. What has taken place during these last few years? The Jews have been returning in thousands to their native land. They are settling, not only in Jerusalem, but also outside the city walls. There was not room enough inside the city for all the houses needed. I remember the time, when I was a boy, when there were not more than two or three houses outside the wall. To-day there are quite as many houses without it as within. Jerusalem has grown by leaps and bounds. To-day you find large districts—houses, shops, synagogues, etc.—outside the wall, where ten or twelve years ago there was nothing but fields. I remember the first time when the gates were left open night and day. To-day they are left open at all times. I always think of that wonderful passage in Zechariah, "Run, speak to this young man, saying, Jerusalem shall be inhabited as towns without walls for the multitude of men and cattle therein." This is already partially fulfilled. There are 43,000 Jews in Jerusalem alone. In 1884, I do not think there were more than 10,000 or 12,000 Jews in the city. The population has also enormously increased in the country itself. I believe there are now over 100,000 Jews in Palestine. Ten or twelve years ago there were supposed to be only 30,000.

They Admire the Art Portfolio

Mrs. Thos. R. Pine, Idaho, writes: "The Art Portfolio is beautiful. Pine is forty-five miles from the railroad. We number—old and young, male and female—thirty. Two are school children, one an infant, and seven are women. We have no Sabbath School or church services, except sometimes in summer, when some stray preacher spends a night with us and gives us a little talk. The people are moral and respectable and as intelligent as most of the world. They admire the beautiful as well as others who are more favorably situated, and I could dispose of a couple of dozen of those Art Portfolios with ease and pleasure."

These Beautiful Instruments are the result of many years' experience in the manufacture of organs, and are confidently offered to the public. These musical wonders use no paper, but music is obtained from a roller furnished with pins. These pins operate upon valve keys, made of hard steel. All the working parts of the instrument are easily accessible, and are made of solid metal, the rollers and keys being mounted on metal castings. Nothing has been omitted to give these grand instruments their crowning qualities of extreme simplicity and durability. There is no limit to either kind or quality of music. They will play Hymns and Popular Airs, with a clearness and accuracy, and degree of execution which but few performers can equal. A mere child can play them. They have the carrying quality of a Large Pipe Organ, and are the only instruments that will render slow and sacred music with a powerful, sustaining organ tone. They will play tunes as long as desired, without any break, instead of stopping to change the piece, as must be done with organettes. They are beautifully finished in solid walnut. The reeds are organ size, and the volume of tone will fill a hall. They are Genuine Musical Instruments, which anyone can play, without teacher or practice, and which good musicians can recommend. The price is nothing compared with their intrinsic value. They are equal in every way to a $50 Music Box, so far as the quality of the music is concerned, and also in point of construction, finish, and decoration. This organ is the most simple, perfect, marvelous, instructive, enjoyable, and amusing musical instrument in the world. FOR SUNDAY SCHOOLS, it is just what is wanted. It will play all the sacred music, and as many verses as desired, without stopping to replace the music roller. This great advantage no other instrument has. By this means, a result is attained that was never reached before.

The Concert Roller Organ has a fuller volume of tone, and far more sustaining power than any two pianos. At the same time it is so fully under control, by means of a swell attachment, that the softest passages can be rendered with exquisite delicacy. For evening entertainments, etc., it is most admirable, and when otherwise musicians would have to be engaged, it will save its cost in one night; and is, upon the whole, the most perfect mechanical instrument in design, operation and effect, that has yet been produced.

The case is strongly made of solid black walnut, and is elegantly finished, forming a handsome parlor ornament.

By means of new and automatic machinery, the manufacturers are enabled to produce music rollers in large numbers so that we can offer them to the public at a price not exceeding the average cost of music paper; and a roller will give a very much better performance, besides Outlasting a Thousand Paper Sheets.

There are now ready over Eight Hundred sacred and popular tunes which have been arranged for the Roller Organs. Complete List will be mailed on application.

CONVINCING EVIDENCE

From All Over the Country, as to the Value of Our Proposition:—

"$10 Secures a $480 LOT IN GREATER NEW YORK"

THOUSANDS of the readers of "The Christian Herald" have read with great interest our announcements under the above heading, in which we made some remarkable statements regarding the value of property in New York City. The Rev. Dr. Theo. L. Cuyler, Pastor Emeritus of the Lafayette Ave. Presbyterian Church, Brooklyn, in his interesting address before the Society of old Brooklyn recently, referred to the time when the Astor House in New York was built, and to the fact that the original John Jacob Astor said that he bought property, but not sell. This, as every one knows, is the foundation of the tremendous wealth of the Astor family, and the opportunities for profit in New York real estate are to infinitely greater than they were in the early times, as we shall be glad to prove to any enquirer.

Residence on E. 46th St., Rugby

A REMARKABLE RECORD.

Since our first general advertising appeared last February, we have sold $600,000 worth of Brooklyn property to people in all parts of the world from Alaska to Manila, South Africa and Brazil, besides almost $1,000,000 worth to residents of New York City itself. Those Who Investigated Added to Their Original Purchase. Of the 700 people to whom we sold lots, 360 have visited New York at our expense. One asked for his money back, and got it. 72 persons confirmed their original purchases, and 287 increased their holdings to an aggregate of $200,000; the most marvelous stamp of commendation ever given to a commercial house. A letter to us will give you their names, doubtless some in your own locality. We subjoin just a few out of scores of appreciative letters received from Mail Order Customers.

"Doubled My Purchase the Day I Saw Rugby."

Walker, Iowa, Nov. 20, 1901.
Wood Harmon & Co., New York City.
Gentlemen—I wish to express my entire confidence in "Rugby." I hold in grateful remembrance the kind treatment I received at your office on my recent visit to New York. Your clerks are ladies and gentlemen indeed. At your expense I visited Rugby, and I am free to express my conviction that it is destined to become a magnificent residence portion of Brooklyn. I am led to this belief by its relation to Prospect Park, the building enterprises near by, the easy access to the business parts of New York and Brooklyn, the ideal and uniform surface of the entire site, and the improvements which your firm are making in grading streets and beautifying the property. I doubled my purchase the day I saw Rugby. I observe with great satisfaction your restrictions prohibiting intoxicants and cheap residences. You are at liberty to use this testimonial as you please. Very sincerely yours,
(Rev.) R. M. ACKERMAN,
Pastor M. E. Church.

"More Satisfactory Than Anticipated."

President's Office, Wisconsin Business College, Manitowoc, Wis., Nov. 30, 1901.
Wood Harmon & Co.
Gentlemen—Gratitude expressed is practical Golden Rule action. As you know, I purchased Rugby lots and visited them. I then knew that your advertisement was a plain statement of facts. I found the facts more satisfactory than was anticipated by reading the advertisement.

I was more than pleased with the investment and take this opportunity to express my gratitude that you made such a business proposition possible. I have invested in several building and loan associations, have insured in a number of different insurance companies, have purchased real estate in different desirable localities, but I consider my investment in Rugby the best investment and the best insurance I have ever made. Thanking you for your courteous treatment and trusting I may see my way clear to make further investments with you at an early date, I am, yours truly,
C. F. MOORE.

"Opportunity Exceptionally Good."

Pastor's Study, First Congregational Church, Oberlin, O., November 27, 1901.
Wood Harmon & Co., New York.
Gentlemen—Having availed myself of the opportunity of visiting your property, "Rugby," in which I had previously made some investment, I take pleasure in saying that I was pleased and more than pleased with my purchase. So far as it is possible to forecast the future, I should say that investment in such property in Brooklyn on such terms as you offer cannot fail to be profitable. The comparatively limited area open to occupancy, the favorable location of your property within this area, the high character of the improvements already made and contemplated, must surely make this very desirable residence property within a comparatively short time. Terms of purchase could not well be more favorable than those you propose. For persons of moderate means who desire to invest on the installment plan the opportunity seems to me exceptionally good. Very truly yours, (Rev.) J. W. BRADSHAW.

First Bought 2 Lots, Then 2 More, Then 8 More.

Office Supt. of Public Schools,
Huntingdon, Pa., Nov. 16, 1901.
Wood Harmon & Co., New York.
Gentlemen—Seeing your advertisement, I was interested sufficiently to make inquiry concerning the reliability of the firm. After investigation along this line to my satisfaction, I visited New York and found that the lots were all the firm represented them to be—most beautiful and beautiful as to location and within thirty minutes' ride of City Hall in New York. I at once bought two lots. Returning home, thinking about the lots, after some deliberation I bought two more lots. Having occasion about two months after this to go to New York, I again visited Rugby. But this time I wanted to see the lots and surroundings without an agent, for I feared that with an agent of the firm conditions had been drawn in too glowing colors. But I was charmed with the improvements, and on coming home I invested in eight more lots, making twelve lots in all purchased by me. Wood Harmon & Co. in my estimation are wholly reliable, and purchasing lots of them is a safe and profitable investment. You may use this for publication if you consider it of any value, but I have written it simply to express my honest opinion in regard to your work. Sincerely, KIMBER CLEAVE, Supt. of Public Schools.

"Clean Business Principles."

Rockford, O., November 26, 1901.
To whom it may concern:
In Frank Leslie's Magazine of last May I read Wood Harmon & Co.'s advertisement of their "Rugby" subdivision in Brooklyn. The proposition seemed a good one, but I had my doubts of the whole scheme. For nearly a few days later I met an acquaintance from New York, and mentioned the subject to him; fortunately again, the gentleman had a business acquaintance with Wood Harmon & Co., having bought of them a year or more ago in "Oak Crest." He told me of the responsibility, business methods, and clean business principles, and assured me "the concern was all right; the investment was a good one." I at once forwarded the necessary amount to hold two lots and in June visited New York, the firm sending a man to show me the property and my lots. I was treated nicely, and am very pleased with the investment.

Very respectfully,
W. F. FIKLER

"Solid City Nearly to Rugby."

Office of L. Williams,
Architect and Builder,
Real Estate and Insurance Adjuster,
Ironton, O., Nov. 30, 1901.
Messrs. Wood, Harmon & Co., New York:
Gentlemen—I would like to say a word regarding my opinion of Rugby. I visited the place in September last and found it all and more than I expected. The distance from New York appeared quite short, with a solid city nearly to the limits of Rugby. In fact, I thought so well of the place that I had no son buy another lot. The insurance feature alone quite an item in the proposition. Yours truly,
L. WILLIAMS.

A FREE TRIP TO NEW YORK CITY.

As a guarantee of good faith, we agree with all persons living East of Chicago to pay you in cash the cost of your railroad fare to New York and return, if you visit our property and find one word of this advertisement a misrepresentation; or if case you buy, we will credit cost of the trip to you on your purchase; to those living farther away than Chicago, we will pay that proportion equal to cost of fare to Chicago and return.

Increased from $450 to $1,800 on Seeing Rugby.

Dayton, Ohio, Nov. 17, 1901.
Wood Harmon & Co., New York.
Gentlemen—Just a few words in praise of Rugby and your business methods. I became interested in your property through the recommendation of a friend who had invested in two lots. His enthusiasm and the extreme fairness of your proposition enthused me. I visited Rugby intending to buy a lot for $450. That I was pleased with the property is evidenced by the fact that I bought $1,800 worth, just four times as much as I had intended. I consider this the best and safest investment I know of, for one can buy without noticing the outlay, and at the same time the property is increasing in value at the rate of 30 per cent. per year. I have studied surrounding conditions carefully, and consider Brooklyn the most promising city in the world. You may use my name as reference. Very truly,
DON. C. WESTERFIELD.

"Even More Desirable than Represented."

Patent Office,
Washington, D.C., Nov. 19, 1901.
Wood Harmon & Co., New York, N.Y.:
Gentlemen—I take pleasure in stating that, after visiting Rugby and making a careful investigation of the standing of Wood, Harmon & Co., I bought on behalf of my wife, Linden Boulevard lots 5 and 6, block 4675, at $900 each. I had prior to my visit decided to take two lots at $500 each, and had so instructed you, but, finding the property even more desirable than represented, decided to increase my investment. I was for many years a resident of Brooklyn, and have witnessed the rapid development of outlying sections there, and I regard Rugby as very desirable. My purchase is the best evidence of my confidence in Rugby and in your firm. I am perfectly satisfied in every way with my purchase, and shall be pleased to answer in detail any inquiries with respect to Rugby.

Very truly yours, FREDERICK L. PITTMAN, Assistant Examiner.

"Contract Better Than I Expected."

Harrisburg, Pa., Nov. 29, 1901.
Wood Harmon & Co., New York.
Gentlemen—Yours of recent date to hand, inclosing contracts for Rugby lots. In looking over the contract I find it to be better in fact than I had expected; restrictions in building make values in property as well as other conditions. I bought a lot last May; in September I visited New York and after seeing the park-like condition of Rugby, the location and the possibilities, I concluded to purchase two lots on Linden Boulevard, as I had sold my first lot at 10 per cent. increase three months after I bought it. I would say further that a gentleman who was in New York with me at the time took the two adjoining lots, and since then two other parties have purchased three lots through my recommendation. Allow me to thank you for the courteous treatment received and for the credit of railroad fare so generously allowed.

Yours truly, D. H. FOX.

"I Went, I Saw, I Bought."

223 E. Hanover Street,
Trenton, N. J., Nov. 19, 1901.
Messrs. Wood, Harmon & Co.:
Dear Sirs—My experience with Rugby was simple. I went, I saw, I bought. It required no imagination to see that spirit and energy was transforming your property into an oasis—very different from the wastes usually sold as lots. Recent developments but increase my satisfaction with the investment, and as our transactions were conducted so honorably, I take pleasure in placing my endorsement at your discretion. Very truly,
F. K. HEAZELTON, D.D.S.

"Doubled My Investment On The Spot."

Office of Dr. P. H. Veach, Surgeon Vandalia R.R.,
Staunton, Ind., Nov. 15, 1901.
Wood Harmon & Co.,
Gentlemen—While looking through the advertisement in Munsey's Magazine last spring, my attention was attracted by your Rugby announcement. I read it through and was especially struck by the compelling fairness and sanity of your propositions. I immediately purchased a lot and later another. I visited the property a month ago. I can truthfully say that I was surprised to find such a beautiful location. I have always taken real estate dealers' statements with several grains of salt, but W. H. & Co. do not overstate the facts regarding Rugby. They are not conservative, I think. I doubled my investment on the spot. New York City must grow. Like other natural processes it will move—in the direction of least resistance. Rugby is in this line. Nothing less than a land-submerging earthquake can prevent investments here from turning out very profitably, and earthquakes do not rendezvous on Long Island.

Respectfully yours,
P. H. VEACH.

REMEMBER OUR OFFER:

For $10 down and $6 per month until paid for, we sell you a regular New York City lot, full size, subject to the following guarantees from us: If at the expiration of the year 1902 this $480 lot is not worth $576—or 20 per cent. increase—based on the price at which our corps of salesmen will then be selling similar lots, we will refund all of the money you have paid us with 6 per cent. interest additional. If you should die at any time before payments have been completed, we will give to your heirs a deed of the lot without further cost. If you should lose employment or be sick you will not forfeit the land.

Isn't this evidence sufficiently convincing to warrant your sending the initial payment of $10, or at least writing to us for the full details of this marvellous proposition?

III. Answers must be received at this office three weeks in advance of the date in which they are intended to appear.

IV. The editor reserves the right to condense accepted answers when necessary, and compensation will be based on the matter as printed.

V. Do not write inquiring if your material has been accepted. If it appears on this page, you will know that it has been accepted.

VI. We cannot return any MSS. sent to the Editor of THE MAIL-BAG—not even if stamps accompany them.

VII. Write only on one side of the sheet, and never send on the same sheet anything intended for any other department of the paper. Correspondents answering more than one question should append their name and address to each answer.

VIII. Address all communications intended for this department, Editor The Mail-Bag, The Christian Herald, Bible House, New York.

Readers are invited to forward new questions which they believe would be suitable for discussion in this department.

These Questions will be Answered Jan. 29

1. Name things in common use which are employed as symbols for the Word of God?
2. What restrictions on immigration should be applied to prevent the coming of undesirable immigrants?
3. What was the origin of the term "Star Chamber," as applied to a secret tribunal?
4. What is the simplest way of demonstrating that a beam of light will produce sound?
5. What should be the attitude and practical course of the Christian Church toward the Zionist movement among the Jews, who are now agitating for the restoration of the Hebrew Commonwealth and the redemption of Palestine?

Questions of the Week

1. What is the best authenticated instance of intellectual work being completed in a dream?

The composition of Kubla Khan, by Coleridge, during sleep. He himself is authority for this. While reading in Purchas' Pilgrims the words, "Here the Khan Kubla commanded a palace to be built, and a stately garden thereunto," Coleridge fell into a sleep lasting about three hours. In slumber he composed between 200 and 300 lines, and so distinct was the impression that, upon awakening, he seized his pen, and wrote the fragment Kubla Khan. He was called away, and on his return had forgotten the remaining lines he dreamed. Tartini is said to have composed his famous sonata under the inspiration of a dream. Dr. Macnish tells us of an English clergyman who used to get up at night, write sermons, correct them with interlineations, and retire to bed again, being all the time asleep. Another case, given on good authority, is that of a student who, while asleep, got up to compose a sermon, wrote it, read it over, made corrections in it, and put it away; he also composed music in his sleep. Castelli was found one night, sound asleep, translating from Italian into French, and looking up words in a dictionary. Cabanis often, during dreams, saw clearly into the bearings of political events, which had baffled him when awake.

G. E. KRAUTH.

Many cases are recorded. The following one in "Notes and Queries" (Jan. 14, 1860), seems to me the most authentic: A clergyman, the Rev. J. de Liefde, was the actor, and years afterward published his experience. Mr. J. H. Van Lennep, the writer, testifies to its veracity, as he had often heard the same story from his father, who was student at the university at the time. The circumstances occurred in the Mennonite Seminary at Amsterdam, and in the mathematical department of Prof. Von Swinden. A banking house had submitted to the professor a problem requiring prolix calculation. The famous mathematician had several times tried to solve the problem, but had made an error each time. He then gave the puzzle to ten of his brightest students to solve, J. de Liefde being one of the number. That very evening the young man began working at it, but did not succeed. The second night was also spent in fruitless endeavor. He bent over his figures the third evening, and kept at it until 1:30 A.M., finding that each solution (all were incorrect) took up about three sheets of paper. At this time his last candle had burned out, and he was obliged to retire without the correct solution, although his head was still filled with figures. On awaking in the morning, he found that he would have barely time to get ready for the class. Vexed at heart at being compelled to disappoint his teacher, who wished for the solution that day, he approached his desk. Imagine his surprise at finding there, in his own handwriting, the entire problem solved without a single blunder. He had worked it out in his sleep, and in entire darkness as well, and so succinct was the computation that it took but a single sheet. Prof. Von Swinden was amazed at so simple and concise a solution.

PHILIP F. SCHNEIDER.

2. Why were the children of Israel, during their forty years' wanderings in the wilderness, each a perpetual miracle?

The children of Israel during their wanderings in the wilderness, were each a perpetual miracle (1) inasmuch as the laws of nature were set aside, and instead of deriving their sustenance from the earth (Gen. 3: 17-19), they were fed with bread from heaven (Exod. 16: 4; Ps. 78: 23-25). (2) There was another deviation from the laws of nature, in the fact that their garments and shoes were preserved through the forty years of their pilgrimage (Deut. 29: 5). Your clothes are not waxen old upon you, and thy shoe is not waxen old upon thy foot. (3) Their bodies were free from the usual marks of travel (Deut. 8: 4). Thy raiment waxed not old upon thee, neither did thy foot swell these forty years. (4) They were led by the cloud by day, and the pillar of fire by night (Deut. 1: 33), and (5) they lacked for nothing (2: 7).

Jericho (Josh. 6: 26). More than five hundred years passed, and though the place had become inhabited, no one had ventured to fortify it or set up its gates. Then Hiel—a native of Bethel, that city where the impious calf-worship had so long prevailed—despising the curse, undertook the work (1 Kings 16: 34). He seems to have been instigated by Ahab, who may have wished to make Jericho a frontier garrison. "He laid the foundation thereof in Abiram, his first born"; that is, according to a Hebrew idiom, at the cost of Abiram's life. Compare chap. 2: 23, where Adonijah speaks a word, literally, "in his own life," that is, at the expense of his life. Hiel's first born would seem to have died when he laid the foundation of the walls, and Segub, his youngest, when he set up the gates. Prof. Bush and others think, also, that all his children perished in the interval. Just how they died is not stated, and a certain mystery hangs over the solemn narrative.

4. Would it be possible, or advisable, for the denominations to unite in forming a general trust fund, the proceeds of which should be devoted to the support of aged or invalid clergymen?

No one can doubt that the adoption of some plan of a general trust fund of all denominaand would eliminate the idea of pauperism; charity too prevalent now. F. J. STRAYER

There is no need of an interdenominational trust to accomplish such an object. The sired result would be brought to pass in single generation, if all the churches made rule that a young pastor on beginning first charge must take out a clergyman's annuity policy in some approved company, the annual premiums to be paid by the congregation. I merely throw this out by way of suggestion. It has the merit of simplicity a certainty, whereas the big trust fund would be complex, costly, a new and rich field for sinecurists, and a trouble-breeder generally. Spirituality and business rarely go together satisfactorily. ROBERT MILLARD.

5. If a Christian has pledged his word never to disclose a secret confided to him, is he justified in breaking his pledge, when he finds that to disclose the secret will be of general benefit to an individual or the community?

Often there are pledges and promises of secrecy which should not have been given but when given, should not be lightly broken if at all. But when a Christian finds that disclosing such a secret it will inure to the general benefit of an individual or to a community, he undoubtedly may be justified in breaking his pledge to secrecy. Yet if the person to whom such a pledge has been given is living, or can be easily reached, that person should be apprised of such an intention; dead, then circumstances governing the affair must alone decide what is best to be done. Most pledges are made rashly or inconsiderately, usually out of sympathy or feeling, and mostly without regard of what is really for the best at the time or in the future. Thus, usually, when the time comes that the disclosure of such a secret would become a personal or general benefit, a Christian is justified in the breaking of such a promise or pledge, but in as considerate a manner as possible.

F. J. S.

In the case supposed, I think the danger would lie in too loose a construing of conditions that might be supposed to be "of general benefit to an individual or the community." We must carefully guard honorable confidences between man and man. It would be better, in my judgment, to err in the opposite extreme, and hold the secret inviolate, except in very rare and most urgent circumstances. As a general rule, I think the secret ought to be rigidly kept, except when, by divulging it, some serious calamity might be avoided, and even in that case we must be very sure that no pain or loss will come to those who are parties to the secret. This is an age in which the sense of responsibility needs bracing up rather than slackening.

Miscellaneous Questions

Subscriber, West Saugerties, N. Y. Is it a supposition or a known fact that the moon is the cause of the tides?

It is a well-known fact. One definition of a "tide" is that "it is a rise and fall of the water of the sea produced by the attraction of the sun and moon." The moon attracts every particle of the earth and ocean, and naturally the movements of the waters of the sea and its estuaries bear a relation to those of this body. In the rise and fall twice daily of the tides, the waters are influenced by the revolution of the lunar orb around the earth. It is on days after new and full moon, that the range of tide is at its maximum, and we have what is known as "spring tide." On the days after first and third quarter, it is at its minimum, giving "neap tide." The influence of the moon over the tides is three times that of the sun.

W. M. H., Grandin, N. D. We cannot decide in such matters. It may have been necessary to work on Thanksgiving Day. One might work on that day and still be a good citizen. Ordinarily, however, the day set apart for returning thanks to God for his goodness, should not be a day of labor.

Mrs. D. K., Otsego. Such a supposition would be purely speculative. All that we know of the death of Moses is what the Bible tells us. Josephus, the Jewish historian, adds nothing to the Scripture record, for he simply says, "A cloud stood over him on the sudden and he disappeared."

It is said of the children of Israel that during their wilderness sojourn, neither their clothes nor their shoes waxed old, nor did their foot swell (Deut. 8: 4; 29: 5; Neh. 9: 21). Dr. Clarke indeed thinks the meaning of Moses' language to be simply this, that "God so amply provided for them all the necessities of life, that they never had to wear tattered garments, nor were their feet injured for lack of shoes or sandals." From their own cattle, or from traffic carried on with traveling hordes of Arabs, they might have obtained the necessary materials. If a miracle be meant, it must have been a stupendous one indeed, since it would imply that the clothes of each infant grew with the increase of his body to manhood. Dr. Fausset, however, and many others think, that "the pointed terms which Moses uses, indicate a miraculous interference of their loving guardian." Whether miraculous or not, this unfailing supply of raiment, as well as of food in the desert, was a constant token of God's care most beautiful, most wonderful. A. H.

Joshua pronounced a curse upon the man who should attempt to rebuild the city, for the relief and support of aged and infirm ministers is a possible achievement. This is exactly what is being done along other lines of service, occupation and employment, such as railroads, the government, various municipal organizations, and numerous labor unions and associations. These various funds, however, are usually maintained by and confined to one particular organization or society, and in the case of the churches, almost every denomination now has such a fund for its own use. While there are some difficulties in the way of consolidating the many different church interests even in this one particular direction, the difficulties are not insurmountable. Doubtless this very desirable end could be readily attained. It is demonstrated to be practicable, and could be well administered to the advantage of all the churches concerned and with justice to each special interest involved.

WALTER W. HUBBARD.

We are not near enough to the "Millennium" to be able to realize such a worthy and desirable object. While "the denominations" are constantly getting closer to each other in their work, co-operations, sympathies, etc.; yet the rivalries, jealousies, prejudices and denominational ruts would be complete barriers to the successful carrying out of such a beneficent plan. It would be difficult to formulate a general plan that would be satisfactory to all. It might be barely possible to inaugurate such a scheme, but I doubt its advisability and successful practical working at this time. However, if such a scheme could be utilized on a fair, equitable basis, inter-denominationally, it would mean much for the support of aged or invalid clergymen,

THE PASSING of a FAMOUS CHURCH

THE CHURCH AT THE BROADWAY TABERNACLE, NEW YORK, SELLS ITS HISTORIC HOME BEFORE MOVING UPTOWN

ANY persons in New York and other cities, must feel regret that the venerable church edifice, the name of which is known and loved throughout the land, is at last to be torn down to make room for a twenty-story hotel. Its walls have echoed the voices of missionaries of world-wide fame, and of preachers whose eloquence has thrilled the hearts of thousands. It is associated with the great religious movements of the past half century, and its name and associations are dear to many hearts. But the practical common sense of our time is stronger than sentiment, and so the old church is to go. It is better so. The site is on the square which is soon to become the focus of a vast railroad system, and is consequently of enormous value. Some other site will be more suitable for the church, and the money offered for that it now occupies, will suffice for the erection of a better edifice, and perhaps leave a margin for its endowment.

The history of the church is full of thrilling incidents. It had its origin in a movement resembling that of the Wesleyans in England—a work condemned by conservatives, but blessed of God. In 1829 Charles G. Finney came to preach in the city, invited by Mr. Anson G. Phelps, at whose house he stayed during his sojourn. The wave of religious enthusiasm which followed his services stirred the whole city, and an effort was made to render the stay of such a preacher permanent. The lease of the old Chatham Street Theatre was obtained, and the building was turned into a church. It was dedicated on April 23, 1832, at a meeting held at half-past five in the morning, at which hour nearly two thousand persons were present. Five hundred persons were enrolled in the membership. In 1835, Mr. Finney accepted the Chair of Theology at the new Collegiate Institute of Oberlin, and from that period was able to devote only a portion of his time to the work in New York. It increased, however, and in 1836 a new church was organized as an offshoot from that in the Chatham Street Theatre, and a new building was erected, which was called the Tabernacle, and would hold 2,500 persons.

The anti-slavery agitation was at this time convulsing society and it divided the Tabernacle Church, of which, Mr. Finney's time being fully occupied at Oberlin, Rev. Joel Parker became pastor. But the division continued, the attendance declined, and at last the building was sold, and a new church organized with Rev. E. W. Andrews as pastor. In three years, under Mr. Andrews, the church increased rapidly in numbers and influence. The next pastor was Dr. Joseph P. Thompson, who began his ministry in 1845. The Tabernacle, during these stirring times, became a prominent place for meetings connected with many causes. Gough frequently delivered his orations there. Father Gavaztime been felt by the church, and in 1857 it was decided to sell the Tabernacle and build a new edifice uptown, nearer to the district in which most of its members resided. The site at the junction of Broadway and Sixth Avenue, then far out of town, was purchased for $78,500. The new building was ready for dedication on April 24, 1859. There were then 336 members on the books.

During the dark days of the war, the church took a prominent part in the raising of funds for Christian work in the army, and Dr. Thompson himself served for some time on the Christian Commission. His incessant labors finally broke down his health. In 1870 he was obliged to take a long rest, and in 1871 he was obliged to resign his charge, to the deep sorrow of all his people. The church invited to the pastorate Dr. William M. Taylor, then pastor of a church near Liverpool, England, who was on a visit to this country. Dr. Taylor accepted and began his ministry in April, 1872. From that time until 1892 the church enjoyed uninterrupted prosperity. The membership rose to 1,220, and the contributions to home and foreign work and for the current expenses of the church, to a sum of a million and a quarter dollars. The confidence and love of the church for Dr. Taylor were singularly beautiful, and he on his part reciprocated the affection. It was a sad and sorrowful time when, owing to illness, he was laid aside, and in February, 1895, breathed his last.

The church extended a call to Dr. Henry A. Stimson to fill the vacant pulpit. He accepted, but owing to friction in the management of church affairs, he deemed it wise in the interest of all concerned to tender his resignation, and in April, 1896, the church was again seeking a pastor. Its choice was Dr. Charles E. Jefferson, then pastor of the Congregational Church at Chelsea, Mass. He began his ministry in April, 1898, and is still its beloved and esteemed pastor.

A church so useful, so active in philanthropy and missions, so vigorous in its spiritual life, is a power for good in New York that endears it to citizens of all denominations. In its new sphere, wherever that may be located, it will have the good wishes and prayers of all for a continuation of its prosperity, beneficence and usefulness. For nearly forty-three years in its present edifice, and for twenty-three years in its former home, between Worth and Leonard streets, it has continued on the same lines, casting its influence on the side of public righteousness, and aiding the cause of Christ at home and abroad. Who can tell in the times that are coming how sorely such a power may be needed. May the Tabernacle still continue to flourish and its work go on with success.

JANUARY THOUGHTS

TEXT—Exodus 12: 2:

This month shall be unto you the beginning of months: it shall be the first month of the year to you.

THE last month of the old year has passed out of sight, and the first month of the new year has arrived. The midnight gate last Wednesday opened and January entered. She deserves a better name, for she is called after Janus, the heathen deity, who, they supposed, presided over doors, and so might be expected to preside at the opening of the year. This month, was of old called the wolf-month, because, through the severity of its weather, the hungry wolves came down seeking food and devouring human life. In the missals of the Middle Ages, January was represented as attired in white, suggestive of the snow, and blowing the fingers, as though suffering from the cold, and having a bundle of wood under the arm, suggestive of the warmth that must be kindled.

Yes, January is the opened door of the year, and through that door will come what long processions, some of them bearing palm leaves, and some myrtle, others with garlands of wheat, and others with cypress and mistletoe. They are coming; and nothing can keep them back—the events of a twelvemonth. It will, I think, be one of the greatest years of all time. It will abound with blessing and disaster. National and international controversies of momentous import will be settled. Year of coronation and dethronement. Year that will settle Cuban and Porto Rican and Philippine and South African and Chinese destinies. The tamest year for many a decade past has dug its millions of graves and reared its millions of marriage altars. We can expect greater events in this year than ever before, for the world's population has so vastly increased; there are so many more than in any other year to laugh and weep and triumph and perish. The mightier wheels of mechanism have such wider sweep. The fires are kindled in furnaces, not seven times but seventy times heated. The velocities whirling through the air, and sailing the seas, and tunneling the mountains will make unprecedented demonstration. Would to God that before the now opening year has closed the earth might cease to tremble with the last cannonade and the heavens cease to be lighted up with any more conflagration of homesteads, and the foundries that make swords be turned into blacksmith shops for making plowshares.

The front door of a stupendous year has opened. Before many of you there will be twelve months of opportunity for making the world better or worse, happier or more miserable. Let us pray that it may be a year that will indicate the speedy redemption of the hemisphere. Would to God that this might be the year in which the three great instruments now chiefly used for secular purposes might be put to their mightiest use in the world's evangelization—the telegraph, the telephone, the phonograph! Electricity has such potent tongue, such strong arm, such swift wing, such lightning foot, that it occurs to me that it may be the angel that St. John saw and heard in apocalyptic vision, when he started back and cried out: "I saw another angel flying in the midst of heaven having the everlasting Gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation and kindred and tongue and people." They were tongues of fire that sat on the heads of the disciples at the Pentecost, and why not the world called to God by tongue of electric fire? Prepare your batteries, and make ready to put upon the wires the world-wide message of "whosoever will."

Furthermore, this month of January has the greatest height and depth of cold. The rivers are bound in crystal chains. The fountains that made highest leap in the summer parks now toss not one jet, for every drop would be a frozen tear. The sleds crunch through the hard snow. Warmest attire the wardrobe can afford is put on that we may defend ourselves against the fury of the elements. Hardest of all the months for the poor, let it be the season of greatest generosity on the part of the prosperous. How much a scuttle of coal, or a pair of shoes, or a coat, or a shawl may do in assuagement of suffering between the 1st of January and the 1st of February God only knows. Seated by our warm registers, or wrapped in furs which make us independent of the cutting January blast, let us not forget the fireless hearth and the thin garments and the hacking cough and the rheumatic twinge of those who through destitution find life in winter an agony. Suppose each one of us take under charge one poverty-stricken household, or one disabled man, or one invalided woman. On our way home from such a charity, though the wind may be howling and the night tempestuous, I should not wonder if we could hear a voice that was heard on Galilee, and at the gates of Nain, and by the pool of Bethesda, saying: "Inasmuch as ye did it to them, ye did it to me."

Oh, the might of the cold! The Arctic and Antarctic invading the temperate zone! The victories of the frost!—as when the Thames in 1205 became firm as any bridge, and the inhabitants crossed and recrossed on the ice, and booths and places of temporary amusement were built on the hardened surface; as when many years ago New York harbor was paved with ice so that the people passed on foot to the adjoining islands. But the full story of the cold will never be known. The lips which would have told it were frozen, and the fingers that would have written it were benumbed. Only here and there a fact appears. In 1691 the cold was so terrific that the wolves entered Vienna. In 1468 it was so cold that wine was cut with hatchets and distributed among the soldiers. In 1234 a whole forest was killed by the cold at Ravenna. In 763 the Black Sea was frozen over. As we go further back the frosts are mightier, but as we come further down the frosts lessen. The worst severities have been halted, and the snows have lost their depths, and the thermometers announce less terrific falls of temperature, and the time will come when the year will be one long summer of foliage and bloom. While the world's moral condition will be reformed, the worst climates will be corrected. You could not have a millennium with a January blast.

Behold, also, as it is possible in no other month of the year, the wondrous anatomy of the trees in January! the leaves of the last year all gone and not so much as a bud of a new botanical wardrobe appearing, the trees standing with arms stretched toward heaven, one of the greatest evidences of the wisdom and the power of the Creator. The leaves appear only once, and then die, but these great arms are stretched up toward heaven in silent prayer for scores of years, now mailed with ice, now robed in snow, or bowing to the God of the tempests as he passes in the midnight hurricane. In July the trees stand glorifying the earth; in January they stand defying the winter. Under the same tree the child plays with his toy, and, growing up to manhood, sits under it in sentimental or philosophic mood, and, having passed on to old age, rests himself under its shade. In these January days the trees seem to say, "The leaves that rustled their music in the last summer are dead and gone, but the leaves that will adorn this uncovered brow and these bare arms shall have as much beauty and glory as their predecessors. Only wait. There are beautiful and lovely things to come in my tree life, as there are beautiful and lovely things to come in your life, O human spectator." O, the tree! Only the Almighty and the Infinite could have made one. Gothic architecture was suggested by it. But for the arch of its boughs and the pointing of its branches, the Saint Chapelle, of Paris, and other specimens of Gothic arch would never have been lifted. No wonder the world has taken from it many styles of suggestiveness—the laurel for the victor, the willow for the sorrowing, the aspen for the trembling, the cypress for the burial! But, unlike ourselves, they cannot change their place, and so stand watching all that passes. Some of them are solemn monuments of the centuries. Thank God for trees, their beauty, their shelter, their interlacing branches—not only for the trees in June-time coronation, but in January privation of everything but graceful structure! Let the iconoclastic ax not be lifted against them. "Woodman, spare that tree."

Behold, also, in this January month the increasing daylight. Last month the sun went down at half-past four, but in this month the days are getting longer. The sunrise and the sunset are further apart. Sunlight instead of artificial light, and there is for our dear old battered earth growing light. "The day-spring from on high hath visited us." We shall have more light for the home, more light for the church, more light for the nation, more light for the world,—light of intelligence, light of comfort, light of rescue, light of evangelization, light from the face of God, light from the throne. But, you say the light increases so slowly, each day of this January only one minute longer than its predecessor, the sun setting the first day of January at four o'clock and forty-three minutes, the sun setting the second day of January at four o'clock and forty-four minutes, the third day of this month the sun setting at four o'clock and forty-five minutes, the fourth day of January the sun setting at four o'clock and forty-six minutes. This evening it will set at four o'clock and forty-seven minutes. The day enlarges very little and the reign of sunlight is not much increased; but do not despise the minute of increasing light each day of this January, and do not despise the fact that more light is coming for the church and the world, though it come slowly. As we are now in this season gradually going toward the longest day of next summer, so our world is moving forward toward the long day of emancipation and Christly dominion. It may now in the State and the church and the world be January cold, but we are on the way to July harvests and September orchards.

Do not read your almanac backwards. Do not go out and ask the trees hung with icicles by January storm whether they will ever again blossom in May or leaf in June. We are moving towards the world redemption. The frozen tears will melt, the river of gladness will resume its flow, the crocus will come up at the edge of the snowbank, the morning star will open the door for the day, the armies of the world will "ground arms" all around the world. The January frost will be abolished, and the balm and radiance of divine atmosphere will fill the nations. If you do not see it and hear it for yourself, I think at the utmost your grandchildren will see and hear it. The heaven will take part in the conflict between righteousness and sin, and that will settle it, and settle it aright and settle it forever.

In this very month of January, 1643, two months after a great battle had been fought between the army of the king and the army of Parliament, shepherds and travelers, between twelve and one o'clock at night, heard the battle repeated in the skies—the sound of drums, the clash of arms, the groans of dying men, and then the withdrawal of the scene into complete silence. These shepherds and travelers repeated in the neighboring towns what they heard, and large numbers of people suspecting that all was a deception, went out on the following night, and they heard the same uproar and tumult in the heavens—the two armies in battle. The king, hearing of this seeming combat in the heavens, sent ambassadors to inquire into the mystery. In the night they also heard the conflict, and came back to the king and took solemn oath as to this mysterious occurrence.

Whether those shepherds, and travelers, and ambassadors of the king were in delusion, I cannot say; but this I know—that the forces of God and the forces of Satan are now in combat, the heavens as well as the earth in struggle as to who shall win this world for blessedness or woe; and as the armies of God are mightier than the armies diabolic, we know who will triumph, and we have a right to shout the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ. The King of kings, the Lord of hosts, the God of Joshua and Havelock, leads in the conflict. I have no fear about the tremendous issue. My only fear is that we will not be found in the ranks and fully armed to do our part in this campaign of the eternities.

Again, I remark that the month of January has seen many of the most stupendous events in the world's history, and a rocking of cradles and the digging of graves that have affected nations. In this month American independence was declared, followed by Lexington and Bunker Hill and Monmouth and Valley Forge and Yorktown. January saw the proclamation that abolished American slavery. Though at the time there were two mighty opinions, and they were exactly opposed—those who liked the document and those who disliked it—there is but one opinion now; and if it were put to vote in all the States of the South, Shall slavery be reinstated? there would be an overwhelming vote of No. The pen with which the document was signed, and the inkstand that contained the ink, are relics as sacred and valuable as the original Declaration of Independence, with all its erasures and interlineations. The institution which for seventy or eighty years kept the nation in angry controversy, has disappeared, and nothing is left to fight about. The North and the South today are in as complete accord as ever were flute and cornet in the same orchestra. The North has built its factories on the banks of the Chattahoochee and the Roanoke, and the South has sent many of its ablest attorneys into our Northern court-houses, its most skillful physicians into our sick rooms, its wisest bankers into our exchanges, its most consecrated ministers into our pulpits—all this the result of the proclamation of January 1, 1863.

Furthermore, I notice that January has been honored with the nativity of some of the greatest among the nations. Edmund Burke was born this month, the marvel and glory of the legal world; Fenelon, of the religious world; Benjamin Franklin, of the philosophic world; William H. Prescott, of the historic world; Sir John Moore, of the military world; Robert Burns, of the poetic world; Polycarp, of the martyr world; Peter the Great, of the kingly world; Chrysostom, of the sacred rhetorical world; Daniel Webster, of the statesman world.

In this month, at Hampton Court, 1604, a new translation of the Holy Bible was ordered. There were Bibles of all kinds abroad, some of them translations from Hebrew and Greek by incompetent men, and the Church and the world cried out for a Bible translated

THE SECOND INTERNATIONAL CONGRESS OF ZIONISTS AT BASEL, SWITZERLAND

THE ZIONIST INTERNATIONAL CONGRESS

BASLE, Switzerland, has again been the scene of a great gathering of Hebrews from all parts of the world, the International Conference of Zionists having assembled in that city on December 26th. Delegates were present from all the European countries, and from distant parts of Asia, New Zealand, India, the United States, and South Africa. Dr. Theodore Herzl, of Vienna, founder of the movement, was made President of the Conference, which had over a thousand delegates. Australia was the only country of importance totally unrepresented. In his opening address, Dr. Herzl referred to his audience with the Sultan of Turkey in May last, in which that ruler expressed sympathy with the Zionist movement, declared himself friendly to the Hebrew race, and said he regarded them as desirable colonists.

Dr. Herzl declared that he had unshaken confidence in the movement looking to the national colonization of Palestine.

He believed it would succeed, where all efforts toward colonization on a charitable or benevolent basis would fail.

Max Nordau, the distinguished author and physician, at the second day's session, made an address lamenting the degeneracy of the wealthy Hebrews, and their loss of patriotic interest in the ultimate restoration of the race to its ancient seat. He advocated the abandonment of Jewish emigration westward, "to the sweatshops of London and New York," and urged the use of funds to create a workers' co-operative organization for mutual betterment and to train the poorer class of Hebrews to industrial pursuits. The world at present restricted the Jew in the use of his capacities, derided him, enslaved him, and left his people the poorest on earth. The Jew wanted to work, yet the world denied him, and even refused him the right of living as a human being. He deprecated early marriages among Hebrews. He regarded the Zionist movement as the product of the human man and the claim of the slave to equality, and depicted the position of the Jews, saying that "the whole race was hanging in midair, with no earth beneath its feet, and so suspended, it dreamed in clouds." He urged self-reliance, and predicted that the re-peopling of Palestine would effect an amelioration in the position of Jews.

Our illustration above represents the second Zionist Congress, which met at Basle, in 1898, among the delegates being such well known Hebrews as Professors Gottheil, Wise, and Sarasohn, New York; Bentwich, Gaster, Cohen, de Haas, and Rabinowicz, of London; Nordau and Mamarek, of Paris; Herzl, Schwadron, Schnirer, and Engländer, of Vienna; and leading and influential Hebrews from Riga, Berlin, Wilna, St. Petersburg, Warsaw, Mainz, Bonn, Brussels, Bucharest, Antwerp, Naples, Kiev, and elsewhere.

by a group of the good and the learned. King James disliked the Bibles abroad, and appointed a commission of fifty-four men, afterwards reduced to forty-seven. Those men presented the world with a Bible that held mighty sway among the nations for more than two hundred and fifty years, the revision of the Bible thirty years ago being founded on that revision, which began under King James, of 1604. The old translation, made more than two and a half centuries ago, sustained the martyrs in the fire, illumined the homesteads of many generations, was the book that was read aloud at the embarkation of the forefathers from Delft Haven, cheered the weary voyagers on the Mayflower, comforted them in the wilds of America, was the book on which the first American Congress, as well as the last, took the oath, and with which all the Presidents of the United States have solemnized their entrance into office, is the book that has advanced the world's civilization as no other influence ever could, and which now lies on the table of more homes than any book that was ever printed since Johann Gutenberg borrowed money of Martin Brether and John Faust to complete the art of printing. What a January in the world's history—the January that gave the ages a book like that!

But January, like all the other months of the year, has had its sadnesses and its disasters. During this month died Linnaeus, the botanist of Sweden and the world, who called the roll of the flowers and shrubs and trees, putting them into companies, and calling them by their names, his beautiful statue standing in a park of Stockholm, a rose in bronze held in his right hand. During this month expired Francis Bacon, and Garrick, and Galileo, and Louis VI, and William Pitt, and Francis Jeffrey of the immortal pen, and Disraeli the first, and Edward Everett, and Bruce, and Catiline. In this month died Peter the Great, the man of whom it was written: "He gave a polish to his people, and was himself a savage. He taught them the art of warfare, of which he himself was ignorant. From the sight of a small boat on the river Moskwa he erected a powerful fleet, making himself an expert and active shipwright, sailor, pilot and commander. He changed the manners, customs and laws of the Russians, and lives in their memory as the father of his country."

According to my text, "This month shall be unto you

the beginning of months: it shall be the first month of the year to you." Through it, make preparation for the other eleven months. What you are in January you will probably be in all the other months of the year. Prepare for them neither by apprehension, nor too sanguine anticipation. Apprehension of misfortune will only deplete your body and gloom your soul, and unfit you for any trouble that may come. On the other hand, if you expect too much, disappointment will be yours. Cultivate faith in God and the feeling that he will do for you that which is best, and you will be ready for either sunshine or shadow. The other eleven months of the year ~~will~~ will not all be made up of gladness or of grief. The cup that is all made up of sweetness is insipid. You need a few drops of the sour. Ask God rightly to mingle the acid and the saccharine.

Between these just opened gates of the year and the closing of those gates, there will be many times when you will want God. You will have questions to decide which will need supernatural impulse. There may be illnesses of the body, or perplexities of mind, or spiritual exhaustions to be healed and comforted and strengthened. During the remaining ~~twenty-six~~ days of this month, lay in a supply of faith and hope and courage for all the days of the eleven months. Start right, and you will be apt to keep right. Before the ship captain gets out of the New York narrows he makes up his mind what sea-route he will take. While you are in the narrows of this month, make up your mind which way you will sail, and unroll your chart, and set your compass, and have the lifeboats well placed on the davits, and be ready for smooth voyage all the way across, or the swoop of a Caribbean whirlwind.

What you fear will probably not happen. There is a member of your family about whose health you are worried. There is something in the cough or the pallor or the irregular heartbeat or the shortness of breath that makes you apprehensive of decease. No, that frail one will outlive you. Or, you are fearful that your business will collapse. No, that rival firm in your line of business will go into bankruptcy and leave the field clear for you. You fear defamation or that the adder of slander will spit on you its poison. No, you will live in honor after your assailant has died in disgrace. Fear no one but yourself. Have your tongue and hand and ear and eye and foot under proper control, and there are not enough enemies on earth or demons in the pit to do you permanent damage. Do not let another moment of this hour of the new year pass till, by a complete surrender of your heart and life to God through the atonement of Christ, you are panoplied for whatever comes, whether it be a skirmish or a Chalons. Employ this month usefully, and there is a strong probability that you will employ the rest of the year usefully.

Now that the train of months has started, let it pass, January followed by February, with its longer days; and March, with its fierce winds; and April, with its sudden showers; and May, with its blossoming orchards; and June, with its carnival of flowers; and July, with its harvests; and August, with its sweltering heats; and September, with its drifting leaves; and October, with its frosts; and November, with its Thanksgiving scenes; and December, with its Christian hilarities. March on, O battalion of the months, in the regiments of the years and the brigades of the centuries! March on, and join the months and years and centuries already passed until all the rivers of time have emptied into the ocean of eternity; but none of all the host ought to render higher thanks to God, or take larger comfort, or make more magnificent resolve than this the first month of the new year.

But what fleet foot have the months and years! People lightly talk about how they kill time. Alas! it dies soon enough without killing. And the longer we live the swifter it goes. William C. Bryant said an old friend of his declared that the going of time is like the drumming of the partridge or muffled grouse in the woods, falling slow and distinct at first, and then following each other more and more rapidly, till they end at last in a whirring sound. But Doctor Young, speaking of the value of time, startlingly exclaimed, "Ask death-beds!"

Dr. Talmage wishes us to say that the article in our issue of December 25, entitled: "The Joys of Christmas," was not written by himself, but by Rev. Dr. Easton, of Washington. By mistake, Dr. Talmage's name was attached to it.

WHERE COUNTRY BOYS FIND WELCOME

The Hartford Y. M. C. A. and its Record of Christian Work--A Model Up-to-date Organization

WHEREVER the talismanic letters "Y.M.C.A." greet a young man in a strange city, he knows that he will find a warm welcome and good fellowship, for the Association spirit induces the kindest feelings. In Paris, when they held the first Y.M.C.A. World's Conference, the leaders of religious activities for young men defined their work by the declaration that "the Young Men's Christian Associations seek to unite those young men who, regarding Jesus as their Saviour, according to the Holy Scriptures, desire to be his disciples in their doctrine and in their life, and to associate their efforts for the extension of his Kingdom among young men."

The officers of the Y. M. C. A. of Hartford, Conn., believe that young men need a thorough training to successfully compete for life's honorable prizes. They have provided for 1902 a night school for men, prudential work for boys, a glee club, camera club, gymnasium, class work, a concert course, a lecture course, a literary society, social evening classes, religious meetings for men, religious meetings for boys and an attractive Bible study course. A short trolley ride from the banks of the Connecticut River brings us to the handsome and roomy Y. M. C. A. building. It is almost under the shadow of the dome of the Capitol building, and the park across Mill River affords recreation grounds and rest for the young men in summer. Its facilities for physical culture are the best in point of modern equipment and in large and well-ventilated rooms. The building was erected at a cost of $165,000, and was paid for largely by the generosity of leading citizens. It affords splendid meeting rooms for social and religious gatherings. Mr. Charles A. Jewell, Treasurer of the Jewell Belting Company, is President of the Association, and by his self-denying labors has done much to make the organization an object of high regard in the city. Mr. Jewell loves young men; this regard is fully reciprocated. Any young man of good moral character over seventeen years of age is eligible for membership.

One of the special features of the work is for boys. One entire story is devoted to them, and they have free access to the gymnasium at certain hours of the day. Mr. C. E. Pomeroy is director of the Boys' Department, and divides them into a Junior Section, for boys from ten to fourteen years; an Intermediate Section, for boys from fourteen to seventeen years of age, and an employed boys section for those who work during the day, and who are from twelve to seventeen years of age. Athletics, basket-ball, entertainments and special indus-moral themes are given in connection with the Bible study. Great good has resulted from these classes.

As a leader in the work for young men, the trustee secured the services of a man imbued with love for evangelism and the Church—Mr. Noel H. Jacks. He has brought to his work a rich experience of God's dealings with men. He was born in a little mining camp in Gibsonville, Calif. in 1863. So remote was he from Christian influences that he had not seen a Bible been in a Sunday School, or heard a sermon, till he was twelve years of age. A home missionary, establishing a Western Sunday School, spoke to him, and led him to the Cross. He drifted to San Francisco, and came under the gracious influence of Evangelist D. L. Moody in 1880-1881. He traveled with Mr. Moody, and was his trusted helper in his Northwest campaign, adopting the evangelist's methods and spirit. In 1887, he was Assistant Secretary of the Y. M. C. A. in San Francisco. In 1890, he was called to Hartford, having previously been General Secretary at Portland, Ore., and Oakland, Calif. He is earnest, evangelical and alert for new methods of helping young men, and is not afraid to try experiments for and with them. He plans widely and wisely, and has behind him the evangelized pastors and well-to-do citizens in meeting the needs of his 1,230 enrolled young men and boys.

The Hartford Young Men's Christian Association has been a haven of refuge and a real friend to very many young men. To leave home, and to begin life in a great city is a trying time in the history of a country lad, and hundreds of this class have cause to bless the hour they entered the halls of this busy and efficient Christian organization W. Royal Philanthropists

How the Good Prince Ludwig Ferdinand of Bavaria, and Princess Maria, his wife, Help the Sick and Poor

A NOBLEMAN worthy of his title, not only because of his high station and illustrious descent, but because of his services in the sacred cause of humanity, is His Royal Highness, Prince Ludwig Ferdinand of Bavaria. The Prince, an accomplished physician and surgeon, spends his time treating the poor free of charge. Last year he ministered to over four thousand indigent patients.

Each day of his life, save when official duties interdict, the royal doctor leaves his beautiful home at nine A.M., and drives to the city, where he performs operations on various poverty-stricken unfortunates in the different hospitals; repairing afterward to his Munich palace, in which he maintains a sort of private hospital, several rooms being fitted up as offices and wards. Here he receives patients until three o'clock, frequently when the pressure is great he is unable to get away before five and even six. Few physicians work harder or have longer hours. Lately, Prince Ludwig has been experimenting with systems of curing tuberculosis. Consumption is very prevalent in Bavaria. In order to curtail the ravages and prevent the spread of this disease through the kingdom, he has just installed in his free hospital a system of treatment which he is watching himself and from which he hopes for good results.

His beneficence does not stop at medical attendance on the afflicted poor. He is quick to respond to calls for financial aid. In hundreds of instances he has used his influence to secure work for the unemployed, and he has softened the agonies of many a sick bed by liberal gifts, which assured a dying father or husband that loved ones left behind would be properly cared for. Naturally, his unselfish life has endeared the Prince to the peasantry. They regard him as the incarnation of exalted human virtues; and as his carriage rolls by, the hats of even the roughest and the most depraved men are instantly raised with deferential respect and affection. The Prince is the eldest son of the late Prince Adelbert of Bavaria, and the Infanta Amalia of Spain. He was born in the royal palace at Madrid in 1859.

PRINCE LUDWIG FERDINAND

Coming of a line of ancestors, many of whom had won distinction in the field of science, the Prince had from his earliest youth a determination to excel in medicine and surgery, for which he had unmistakable talent. Recognizing that there is no royal road to learning, he entered college, placed himself on a level with the humblest student, prosecuted his studies with the greatest eagerness and industry, and graduated with distinguished honors. The royal physician won new laurels when he wrote his now famous work, The Anatomy of the Tongue, which is recognized as an authority by the entire medical profession of Europe.

Then began his ministration to the poor. From the first, he made it a rule to be impartial, recognizing neither race nor creed. The poor of all nations, foreign as well as his own, are welcome to his services. The fact that he chooses for his patients only the poor and obscure—the skill of whose physician is not so likely to be noised abroad as it would be with persons of wealth and consequence—has had the effect of retarding the growth of his professional reputation; nevertheless, he has come to be recognized as one of the first and ablest physicians of Europe; and so it is that penniless beggars are now privileged to have the services of an eminent specialist, whose fees, were he a regular practising physician, would place him beyond the reach of all but the most wealthy. The Princess Maria is in hearty sympathy with the work of her husband. In the course of a work such as his, there are many instances constantly arising which demand a woman's gentle tact, her delicate gifts of tenderness and consolation. It is in such cases that the Princess shows herself to be the fitting help-meet of her noble husband.

CHRISTMAS AT THE BOWERY MISSION

By SUPERINTENDENT J. G. HALLIMOND

THERE are two aspects to Christmas in the Bowery—the one of cheer, the other of sorrow. In that world-famous thoroughfare, where the forces of sin surge back and forth as nowhere else in the whole world, there are all seasons of the year, but especially in winter, crowds of homeless and destitute. These unfortunates have never been more numerous than during the past twelve months. And though, at this Christmas time, we knew there were thousands and thousands of needy families in this great city who could look for help from Christian hands, we of the Bowery Mission, felt it our peculiar duty to minister to the men of our own special class—men without home, or work, or friends.

To do this within the twenty-four hours of December 25th was a sheer impossibility, so we had to commence at the hour of Christmas Eve. The proprietor of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, with his usual liberality, approved our plans, and told us to "go ahead," although we had scarcely dared to hope that he would allow us to draw upon him so largely for the Christmas benefactions at the Mission. So the tables were erected in the main hall capable of seating 250 men at a time.

Promptly at one o'clock, December 24th, the doors were opened, and in five minutes every seat was occupied by men to whom tickets had been distributed during the meetings of the few previous evenings. "What a sight it was!" There were men there who evidently had not tasted food for many hours, and the look of their hollow eyes spoke of suffering and woe. To have a meal at all meant unspoken happiness; to have such a meal was unutterable ecstasy! Turkey, vegetables, bread, pie, coffee. This scene was repeated at the hours of three, five, seven, and nine; whilst at ten o'clock the workers, the men who, for twelve hours, had been unceasing in their efforts to help and gladden their ragged and downcast brethren, together with the stragglers who had been put out from the former tables, partook of the good things. In all, 1,250 dinners were served.

Very few of the Mission workers or converts went home or to bed, for at three o'clock on Christmas morning the doors of the basement were thrown open, and from that hour until eight, breakfasts of hot coffee and rolls were served to men. It will be difficult for readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD to realize that so many men were walking the streets all night, or seeking shelter in hallways, or empty wagons, but in these five hours of a blessed Christmas morning, five thousand such breakfasts were served. Had those of your readers who have contributed to the Christmas Fund been able to see the effect of their benefactions at this morning breakfast, what a rich return such a gift would have been for their investment. This class of poor we have "always with us," the policemen, who helped us so assiduously, said they had never witnessed such a scene upon the Bowery.

Promptly at the hour of eight the breakfast closed. The men's respite and our converts' meeting was on hand. Across the main hall was placed a table, upon which lay an assortment of articles of wearing apparel of the most necessary kind. Underwear, shirts, shoes, socks, etc. Gathered around were eager men upon whose faces shone the light that never fails. Tears stood in the eyes of some; sad memories hovered in the minds of others. The feast was a success, and the men were only too ready to accept of the gifts and the food.

There was a great deal of the Bowery Mission, and the men were only too ready to accept of the gifts and the food. The feast was a success, and the men were only too ready to accept of the gifts and the food.

Mrs. Bird, with her increasing years, and the fact that she is a widow, is a great help to the Mission. She is a very kind and generous person, and she has been a great help to the Mission.

This year the crowd of children was greater than ever. Hundreds, thousands were of necessity turned away. Hours before the time of opening, they began to congregate at the doors. The kindly policemen were at their wits' ends. What a scene of eager enthusiasm it was when the festivities commenced! patriotic hymns were sung, kindly counsel was given, every child received a gift from the great Christmas tree.

The second part came at seven P.M., when the "boys" of the Bowery Mission, together with the men, were entertained. Large red stockings dangled from the tree, and when the proper time came, were taken down and handed to the most regular attenders. Smaller stockings were forthcoming for others. There were no blanks. Then a luncheon of turkey sandwiches, coffee and pie was served to every boy and man in the hall. Loving counsel was spoken to every one, and the feast was a success.

The Bowery Mission is a national—almost international institution. Boys and men come here from every State and city in the Union and from every country under the sun. Conversions—real, bona fide conversions—occur here in greater number than perhaps in connection with any other institution that has come into existence in the Christian Era.

A GREAT FEAST FOR THE POOR

NEW YORK'S biggest Christmas dinner was held in Madison Square Garden. The Salvation Army was host, and 3,000 poverty-stricken men, women and children the guests. The great auditorium was gay and hospitable with Christmas greens and Christmas greetings. Long tables, stretching almost half the length of the place, groaned under their burden of good things, which disappeared as if by magic under the sharp appetites of that hungry company, many of whom had not known the blessing of a square meal for a long and weary time. Two hundred Salvation Army lads and lassies were the waiters, and they seemed to have as much joy serving the people as the people had in being served—and that is saying much.

Prosperous men and women—all of whom had doubtless contributed to the feast—sat in the boxes as lookers-on; a number of distinguished guests were present, among them General Sickles and President Miles O'Brien, of the School Board. Members of New York's fashionable circles, on their way to Christmas festivities, dropped in to show their interest in the poorer half who were having their merrymaking of the year. Mrs. Stuyvesant Fish and Mrs. Herman Delrichs, with numberless social duties and pleasures awaiting them, found time for this. Everybody was particularly interested in the table where a band of newsboys, full of youthful spirits and frolic, were having a notably good time.

When the dinner was over and the hungry multitude fed, lights were lowered and the stereopticon entertainment began. First, there was flashed on the screen the words of our national hymn; the Army Band began to play, and that mighty company of the poor took up the glorious words and made the building ring. Moving pictures, illustrating the life of Christ, were then thrown upon the screen.

A feature of the evening was a letter from Miss Helen Gould, in response to one of congratulations which Commander Booth-Tucker had sent her in the name of the many thousands about the Army's tables. It said: "Allow me to express my cordial thanks for the kind message of greeting of those who are at the Christmas dinner of the Salvation Army to-day. Please convey to them also my best wishes for their welfare and happiness."

Earlier in the day four thousand baskets had been given out, each containing a turkey dinner for five per-making it possible for the Army, under Commander Booth-Tucker's excellent arrangements, to bring happiness and Christmas cheer to thousands of the homes of poverty, where otherwise the "day of days," which means so much to the whole Christian world, will have been one of unrelieved misery.

sons. Perhaps the most interesting feature of the night was the happy Christmas night that Commander Booth-Tucker and his wife, and the officers, lads and lassies who had helped them fill the larders of 23,000 of the city's poor.

Feeding Homeless Thousands

By the NEW YORK HERALD

MORE than twelve hundred men, poor and homeless, many having been out of employment for a long time, enjoyed a Christmas feast yesterday at the Bowery Mission, No. 55 Bowery, that diminished the number of the homeless thousands with rapidity. Owing to the limited space at the Mission, it was impossible to accommodate the large gathering at one time. Accordingly, a series of dinners, five in number, was arranged, providing for two hundred men at each sitting. The first dinner was served at one o'clock, followed by four others at intervals of two hours, admission tickets of different colors designating the proper time for each holder to arrive. In this way the crowd was easily managed, all departing with a cheerful countenance and a "full dinner pail." The good things consisted of roast turkey, vegetables, cakes, pies and hot coffee.

This annual dinner was looked forward to with keen pleasure by hundreds of men in the Bowery, whose one-time fancy for the saloon is largely responsible for their unfortunate condition of to-day. The work of the Bowery Mission has resulted in the salvation of many men from the clutches of the saloon.

A Church that Daily Grew, and Why * The Early Christian Church

ACTS 2: 14-47

By Dr. and Mrs. Wilbur F. Crafts

GOLDEN TEXT: "THE LORD ADDED TO THE CHURCH DAILY SUCH AS SHOULD BE SAVED." ACTS 2: 47.

THE churches of to-day have more beautiful meeting houses and more elaborate ecclesiastical machinery and music, than the Early Church, which held its simple sacraments "from house to house"; and yet its spirituality, brotherliness and generosity may still be held up for emulation to many of the churches of to-day. But let us not say "Back to Christ." Rather let the watchword be, "On with Christ." As God tolerated in the Church founded at Sinai some things he no longer "winked at" when he re-organized the Church at Pentecost, so he demands more and different "acts" from his Church in lands of liberty and education to-day than under the old regime of despotism and slavery. The churches have been more eager to imitate the outward "acts" of that early Church than its spirit. Let us ask how we should differ from, as well as how we should resemble the new-born Church.

The Lesson Story

Let us think of a half dozen pictures of the scenes that cluster about the birthday of the Christian Church—the first three by way of review. In our first picture we see Jesus rising from the Mount of Ascension, while his disciples, one hundred and twenty in all, are looking up to heaven as they have never looked up before. They had previously been absorbed in things seen. Like Moses they were now to "endure as seeing the invisible." In the second picture we behold those same disciples in the large guest-room of one of their homes on their knees, while tongues of fire hover above their ecstatic faces. In the third picture we see them preaching in the streets of Jerusalem in many tongues, to wondering groups dressed in the costumes of many nations. On many faces of the hearers we see an expression that suggests the explanation that is on their lips: "These men are full of new wine." This false charge prompts the great sermon of Peter, which is the first picture in the lesson of to-day. We see him, with the eleven other apostles standing about him, preaching from the steps of some building to a throng that fills the streets on every side, declaring that Jesus, whom they had crucified, is the promised Messiah and Lord of all. The fifth picture is of the inquiry meeting that followed the sermon, right there in the streets. The murderers of Christ, convicted by spiritual, scriptural, fearless preaching, are crying out, "Brethren, what shall we do?" And Peter is tenderly assuring them that if they repent they shall not only be forgiven, but also filled with the Spirit, "for," he says, "the promise is unto you and to your children"—the very children are to have tongues of fire to tell the story of the Cross, a promise still belonging to the children if only they will believe and receive. The sixth picture shows the new-born Church in several scenes. At the left we see three thousand entering the church by baptism, while at the extreme right of the picture we see the other sacrament, simply administered in a cottage meeting. Upon the sacramental table men are pouring their money, to be used in common as everyone may need. Not in word and gift and sacrament only, but in miracles of healing the Divine power overflows. All is simple, spontaneous, spiritual. In every face within is holy "fear" and "gladness," and at the open door new converts are pressing in—not perfected saints, but "such as were being saved," hastening to this holy hospital of the Church that they might complete their own salvation and unite in efforts to save others. Not once a year, but daily came seekers after God to that Early Church, to find him in his people, and reveal him in turn to others.

Illustration and Application

A church building should never be called a "Church." The building is but the meeting-house, the tabernacle, the temple. The Church is made of living stones, built upon the corner-stone of Christ, and the foundation of apostles and prophets. What were the chief stones of this spiritual house, as seen in the opening chapters of Acts?

First, the Early Church was ever uplooking to the ascended Christ, who was to come again in many Pentecosts, and at last in his glorious appearing. The Churches of to-day are too much absorbed in the prevailing materialism of money-making and sensuous enjoyment.

Many of us will not look much to heaven till God takes away the things and persons that hold our gaze to earth. Second, the Early Church was filled with spiritual enthusiasm—hearts and tongues both on fire. There are such Churches to-day, but, alas, there are others that "live at a poor dying rate," where the doxology is sung only by a few, and by them more as a dirge than an outbreak of real thanksgiving. Instead of being a blessed orb of fire, like the sun, they are as cold as the burned out moon. Scolding will not create warmth, at least not of a holy kind. But every spirit-filled heart will be a radiator to lessen the chill. Let every soul that longs for fire, kindle his own soul with the promise of power.

Ye are God's remembrances;
Rest not, give to him no rest.
Bring his promise in your prayers,
Till with power your souls are blest.

Let every one who would right what is wrong in the Church, remember that Moses had no success in righting wrongs in Egypt until he went in the strength of God.

Third, that Early Church had fearless preaching, which was also spiritual and scriptural. When Peter preached the sermon which to-day's lesson begins, he had in his audience many who had been in the mob that cried to Pilate when he sought to release Christ: "Crucify him." Many a preacher, many a teacher, who hurls his condemnations, chiefly at the absent, with the motto, "present company excepted," ever on his timid lips, needs to behold Peter in this scene, where he said of Christ: "Him ye by the hand of lawless men did crucify and slay." The preacher and teacher should remember, what Peter verified, that the conscience of the wicked is on the side of the man who rebukes their sins in loving fidelity. This brings us to the fourth stone of that Early Church, convicted converts. How many come into the Church to-day who never felt themselves sinners! They have done wrong, they admit, but they have learned to lay it on their "heredity" and environment. Even the prisoners in our reformatories know and gladly accept the theory that they stole and killed because the bones of their heads had a certain measurement. While to-day there is an unprecedented demand for "personal liberty," there is also an unprecedented lack of personal responsibility. The employee, who defrauds, lays it on his employer, and the employer on his competitor. We need to write in letters of fire on every conscience: "Every man shall give account of himself to God." The men Peter addressed, were not allowed to lay the death of Christ, as modern Jews do, on the Romans. Peter laid the crime at their doors, and they repented in deep conviction. Thus, was a deep, strong foundation laid for that first Christian Church, in a profound conviction of the awful sin of reject-brotherhoods were born of the Church, but why have many of them gone apart by themselves? In whatever Church has progressed, in brotherhood certainly many need to ponder Tertullian's picture of the Early Church, reproduce it, if not in the letter, in the spirit at least, says:

"There is no buying or selling of any sort in the things of God. Though we have our treasure-chest, it is not made of purchase money, as of a religion that has price. On the monthly day, if he likes, each person in a small donation, but only if it be his pleasure, and only if he be able; for there is compulsion, all is voluntary. These gifts are, as it were, piety's deposit fund. For they are not taken thence, as spent in feasts and drinking-bouts and eating-houses, but support and bury poor people, to supply the wants of boys and girls destitute of means and parents, and of old persons confined now to the house, and such as have suffered shipwreck; and if there happen to be any in the mines, or banished to the islands, or shut up in prisons for nothing but their fidelity to the cause of God's Church, they become nurslings of their confession. But it is mainly in the deed of a love so noble that lead many to put a brand upon 'See,' they say, 'how they love one another,' for themselves are animated by mutual hatred. . . . One in mind a soul, we do not hesitate to share our earthly goods, one with another."

It was this Christian love, so apparent even to the heathen that caused Gibbon to put it as one of the causes of the rapid growth of Christianity.

The eighth living stone that we and ever should be in the Church was generosity, already described in the above sketch. The fact that no other church of New Testament times had common purse seems to be a valuable argument against making communism a necessary article of Christian faith. But surely, the doctrine that one's property is not his own, but only a trust held for God and man in stewardship is an essential doctrine of Christianity. We must not make imitation of the "spirit" rather than the letter a pretense to cover a generosity less even than the title of the Jewish Church "Liberty" to give less than the Jew would certainly be unworthy of the name of "Christian liberty." But it is ever the spirit back of the gift that gives it life, and great love may even noble even an ill-chosen gift.

A poor Arab going through the desert, found a spring of sparkling water. Accustomed to brackish water, a draught from this sweet well in the wilderness seemed to his simple mind, a fit present for the caliph. So he filled his leather bottle, and, after a weary tramp laid his humble gift at his sovereign's feet. The monarch called for a cup, and drank freely, and then, with a smile, thanked the Arab, and presented him with a reward. The courtiers pressed eagerly around for a draught of the wonderful water which was regarded as worthy of such a princely acknowledgment. To their surprise, the caliph forbade them to touch a drop. After the simple-hearted giver had left the royal presence with a new spring of joy welling up in his heart, the monarch explained his motive for prohibition: "During his long journey, the water in his leathern bottle had become impure and distasteful; but it was an offering of love, and as such I accepted it with pleasure. I feared, however, that if I allowed another to taste it, he would not conceal his disgust. Therefore, it was, that I forbade you to partake, lest the heart of the poor man should be wounded."

So in gifts to God and man the spirit is more than the gift, but such a spirit as that which animated the Early Church will make us count every man a brother, which will sometimes prompt us not to give alms lest we pauperize his manhood, but rather to give, as Peter did, a helping hand to set him on his feet in self-help and self-respect.

Another living stone of that Early Church was courage. Peter, the natural coward, became like John Knox, who never feared the face of man. And so with the others who ran away in Gethsemane when Christ was arrested—all became heroic in becoming spiritual. We may well suspect a so-called spirituality that prompts us to run away, like Roman Catholic monks or Protestant mystics, from the battles of life, remembering that in that first Pentecost the timid disciples added to their faith, courage. The characteristic words in the early chapters of Acts are, "Accused," "accusers," off against which we find "accord" and "added." These four words tell the story of a united church growing in spite of persecution.

There is yet another living stone that the Early Church was to have inbuilt later, the missionary spirit.

And now let us illustrate in a modern incident, the self-forgetting spirit of Christ that filled that Early Church with a love stronger than death. When the torpedo boat Cobra was destroyed, a common sailor, bravely battling the waves, reached the small boat in which many of his comrades had taken refuge—the only way of escape. He saw it was already dangerously crowded. Another man on board and all might be swamped. "Never mind, mates," he said, "there is no room for me." And so the hero died. In such acts, not in overreaching our fellows, is the true wealth of our race.

"DID EAT THEIR MEAT WITH GLADNESS AND SINGleness OF HEART"

ing Christ—a sin greater to-day than then, since nineteen Christian centuries have proclaimed him the Son of God with power.

After one of the Moody and Sankey meetings, a young woman remained in deep anxiety. She sought light in vain at that morning inquiry meeting, and again in the afternoon. In the evening, a preacher visited her, and set before her many promises of pardon to the penitent. "Why can you not lay hold on these promises?" he asked. "I try to do so," she replied; "but something always keeps me." "What makes you so anxious?" he asked. Slowly, she answered: "It must be God." "And why does he make you so anxious?" "It must be for my good—to lead me to Christ." "When does he wish to bring you to Christ?" "He says Now." "Well, then, if you believe, as you say you do, that God is willing to save you, and that it is he who has convinced you of your sin, and that he invites you now, are you, on your part, willing now?" "I am; I will." And so the greatest decision of a human life was made.

The fifth of the living stones of that Early Church was daily growth. Under faithful preaching, conversions occurred daily, and in a few days after Pentecost the Church had grown from three thousand to five thousand. The Church to-day also should be, not like those plants that yield but once a year, much less like those orchards that bear well only once in two years; but rather, like the tree of life, that "yielded her fruit every month, and the leaves were for the healing of the nations." If any on the outside are finding fault with the Church as unfruitful, let them add fruit to it by joining. Better increase the sap within, if you really wish to better it, than remain as an axe, wounding it on the outside. Pruning it surely needs, but it should be the pruning of friends; and what it needs most is a stronger life, and you can enrich that if your own soul is spirit-filled.

The sixth living stone in the Church was, and ever should be, brotherhood. The Church should be everywhere in reality the "household of faith." In that case there would not be more fraternities than churches in all our cities. These

Venezuela's Plight

WITH troubles at home and complications abroad, President Castro, of Venezuela, has a difficult problem to solve. A revolution of a formidable character threatens him with deposition, though recently he has won victories over the insurgents which temporarily improve his position. He is fully aware that the conservative government of his neighbor, Colombia, sympathizes with his enemy, and he suspects that it is aiding the rebels. In his resentment, he has shown so much animosity against Colombia that the relations between the two countries are on the verge of war. Meanwhile, difficulties have developed with Germany which threaten to end in hostilities. The German Government has sent four warships to the Caribbean Sea, evidently with the design of enforcing its claims on Venezuela. President Castro and his party, who know little about the might of European powers, are making preparation to resist a German attack, so that there is a possibility of a however, that Germany will now insist on a settlement and will exact harder terms the longer it is delayed. If Castro will accept advice from our Government, it will probably be that which Christ uttered to disputants: Agree with thine adversary quickly, when thou art at strife with him (Matt. 5: 25).

Genealogies Lost

Two Russian ladies now in New York are instituting a search for some valuable manuscript volumes of Russian genealogy, which have mysteriously disappeared from their hotel. They are large volumes, with big bronze seals, and contain memoranda of ancient and modern families. The ladies were in New York in 1895, and had the books with them. They were hastily recalled to Europe, and the volumes, being cumbersome and not then esteemed specially valuable, they were left behind at the hotel, where the ladies reserved an option on their apartments. Events occurring during their stay in Europe have made the books indispensable to them, and they came back to New York to get them. But the hotel passed under new management during their absence and the books have disappeared. A careful search has been made of the public libraries of the city and of the stock of every dealer in second-hand books, but no trace of them has been discovered. It is reported that the books are needed to prove a title of nobility and the succession to large estates. It is strange that so little care should have been taken of them, but the one has been found, and the other is retiring from business after accumulating a fortune, and has been appointed by some persons, who were anxious to succeed him. Various times were suggested for the sale, and finally he has accepted one of eighty thousand dollars. The fact that in one year after acquiring a seat on the exchange, one operator cleared a million dollars, shows that the price reported to have been paid for the volume should be extravagant. Doubtless the operator had no idea of the value his investment would reach in the comparatively short time of forty-two years. It will be so with many when death has changed the aspect of all worldly concerns. The privilege, which is offered freely to all, and is being urged on the careless and the indifferent by the messengers of Christ, will then prove to have been worth more than all the world besides.

Be not grieved that day will come for him that has been great in heaven (Luke 6: 23).

A New Light

Experiments are being made in Denver with a new dynamo, the inventors of which expect it to work a revolution in railroad travel, by lighting cars with electricity and providing them with electric fans. The dynamo is attached to the axles of car wheels, and the revolution of the wheels generates electricity. The current passes into a storage battery, and from there through a regulator, which keeps the lights always at conflict. The German claims are based on a guarantee on the part of the Venezuelan Government that certain German banks should receive seven per cent. on money advanced to construct the Grand Railroad of Venezuela, which runs 110 miles from Caracas, the capital, to Valencia. The sum advanced was sixteen million dollars, and as the running expenses of the road exhausted the receipts, the Government was called upon to make good its guarantee, which it has failed to do. President Castro's explanation of his refusal to pay, is that the actual cost of constructing the railroad was not more than half the amount charged; that large sums were spent in bribes, and that the German contractors realized large fortunes by the concession. An attempt was made in 1895 to patch up the trouble by raising a loan of ten millions in Germany. Castro asserts, however, that the banks which floated the loan charged a commission of two millions for their services and used the remainder to recoup themselves for their share of the Venezuelan debt. Germany stands by its bond, and it is expected that she will seize a Venezuela port and hold it until sufficient money has been collected in customs duties to discharge the debt due from Venezuela to the German banks. It is reported that Germany has assured our Government that a permanent occupation is not contemplated, otherwise, under the Monroe Doctrine, we would have the right to interfere for the protection of Venezuela, as President Cleveland did, when that country had a dispute with England. Our Government has sent several warships to the scene of the trouble, however, so that our rights shall not be contravened. The dispute is not ours, but our Government will see that, in whatever way it may be settled, it shall not be by the acquisition of territory by Germany. It is very clear, ladies probably were not aware how important they might become. Happily, the Christian's title to his sonship and inheritance can never thus be imperilled.

The Lord knoweth the days of the night, and their inheritance shall be forever (Ps. 37: 18).

A Patient's Offer

A citizen of Chicago has made a ghastly offer to his physicians. He is in extreme poverty, and has been told that he has not long to live. He has therefore made the proposal, that they provide him with the necessities of life in return for the privilege of using him for purposes of demonstration after death. Physicians have told him that he could not hope to live longer than three months, and he is of the opinion that a contract bartering his body for a little food and a place to sleep would not run many weeks. He has pawned his last article of value to get money to pay for a week's board. He now wants to pawn his body. He is suffering from Bright's disease. He appears to be physically unfit to perform any work and objects to being placed in the incurable ward of a hospital. It is sad that any man should be driven to straits so dire, but his bargain, shocking as it is, is not so disastrous as that which every man makes who sacrifices his soul for wealth or pleasure.

Do not know what to do, but rather fear Him who is able to destroy both body and soul (Matt. 10: 28).

A Valuable Franchise

A bargain was made last week for a seat on the New York Stock Exchange, which shows an unprecedented appreciation of values. The seat was acquired originally the same brilliancy. It is said that it will be affected in no way by dirt, heat or cold, and that it will not appreciably reduce the speed of the cars, as the resistance it offers is comparatively slight. A good light will be produced, even when the cars are running so slowly as five miles an hour. As the appliance is supplied independently to each car, there is no inconvenience from switching, no chance of wires becoming disconnected, and no fluttering or diminution of power. If the new light fulfils the promises of the inventors it will come into general use, for it is precisely the kind of light that is in demand. It would be well if travelers on the journey of life would avail themselves of the light which, like this of the Denver inventors, comes from progress on their way. Too many people forget that God assures those who walk in his ways of the light that they need.

Those who walk in his ways shall shine upon thy ways (Job 22: 28).

China's Gratitude for Famine Aid....

OUR ENVOY IN SHANSI'S CAPITAL

The Last Stage of his Journey Begun

THE fourth letter received from THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Famine Fund Commissioner is given below. It describes his cordial reception by the officials and natives, gives an accurate presentation of the present condition of a part of China rarely reached by white travelers, and tells of the splendid results accomplished by the Famine Fund.

TAI YUEN, PROVINCE OF SHANSI, Oct. 27, 1901.

Across the sun-baked plains of Chili, past terraces of budding millet and corn, past crumbling temples, across rivers and through mountain-passes, we have traveled for the last ten days to this ancient capital of remote Shansi. All the way, food, lodging, and transportation have been provided by the mandarins of the towns through which we passed, on orders issued by Prince Ching, in Peking. All the way we have been protected by an armed escort of the newly-organized Shansi police. Everywhere, as the representative of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Famine Fund, I have been received with the utmost courtesy, and outspoken expressions of gratitude from the Chinese officials, and at times my progress has taken on almost the form of an ovation.

Under the police system of Shansi, the route from Ting-jo to Tai-Yuen, the railroad terminus, is divided into eight stages of a day's journey each. Just as the sun was setting at each day's close, the sergeant of police would turn his pony's head into a gateway on some village street. The rest of the cavalcade would follow, to find at the rear of a courtyard lodging for the night, and several servants awaiting the arrival of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD commissioner. A few minutes later would arrive the red card of the mandarin, and a feast of Chinese food with his compliments.

Nothing could be more polite than the treatment accorded me by the mandarins. If I wanted an extra pony for the day's stage, I always received it. If donkeys had to be substituted for the heavy lumbering cart over the mountain roads, all I had to do was to ask for them, and I found them waiting in the courtyard at daybreak the next morning. The traveler across North China must inevitably become an adept in mandarin "good form." It is a complicated system of etiquette, so absolutely the reverse of Occidental customs, that one has to guard himself carefully in order not to make embarrassing mistakes. When the traveler calls on a mandarin, he must send his servant ahead with his card, and then wait at the gates of the official residence until they are opened, with slamming and shouting. The mandarin stands at his doorway waiting to receive his guest, and escorts him to a chair at the left of a table. Two cups of tea are followed by a little feast, which must be eaten before the object of the visit can be discussed. When the call is returned, the process is reversed. The stranger in the village goes no further than the doorway to meet the mandarin, but sends his servants to help him alight from his sedan chair. Once seated on opposite sides of the little table, it is the height of rudeness for the foreign host to stand up or change his position for one moment, until the mandarin rises to leave.

Chinamen of the upper class never touch each other, consequently handshaking is tabooed. It is condoned in foreigners as one of the idiosyncrasies of barbarians; but the proper thing is the "tseoih," which consists in clasping your hands in front of you and making a short, jerky bow. To accomplish this gesture with grace and dignity requires long practice.

At only very few of the stations were we compelled to spend the night at the regular village inns. We were usually lodged in the "kung kwan," or house set apart in every town for a Chinese official on his travels. The "kung kwans" are always clean and comfortable enough, with the exception of the beds, which are apparently built with a view to the especial discomfort of the sleeper. The bed is nothing more nor less than a solid brick wall, about three feet high and four feet wide, extending across the entire side of the room. No westward, across the plain of Chili. For more than five miles the road leads through a sort of ravine, some places more than thirty feet below the level of the plain. The sunken road is the result of ages of travel. Centuries of wagon ruts in the same path had worn to its present depth. When the Chili road was on the same level as the plain, the world was young.

There is a remarkable uniformity in Chili villages. At the entrance to almost every one is the corn mill. A flat stone, about three feet in diameter, is supported on three posts. Through the center is an upright wooden spindle, around which revolves a heavy stone roller. The mill is usually operated by a woman who spreads the corn on the flat stone and then walks around it, pushing the roller as she goes. Her cramped feet make her hobble painfully as she walks, and must add greatly to the difficulty of her task; but she looks perfectly content and smiles at the passers-by.

Hwuyluh marks the entrance to the mountains, and is also the gateway to the iron mines of the Empire. All day long a continuous procession of men and boys, carrying piles of pans and kettles, pours down the winding road into Hwuyluh, whence they are shipped by mule and camel to the remotest corners of China. The kettles are all of one pattern and size, which has prevailed in this land for thousands of years; but they are all beautifully made and are excellent specimens of the molder's craft. There is enough of both mechanical skill and raw materials latent in China to make her the great manufacturing country of Asia when the awakening comes. Mingling with the iron carriers were droves of donkeys laden with anthracite coal. It was hewn in big, square lumps, three of which constituted a load. In any country where a day's wage was more than a few cents, this crude method of transportation would make the cost of coal prohibitive, yet these same donkeys carried lumps which are sold in Peking and the northern cities for about six and a half American dollars per ton.

At Gu Kwang, a half day's ride beyond Hwuyluh, is a stone gateway, which marks the boundary line between Chili and Shansi. A new stone tablet by the roadside informs the traveler that this was the furthest point reached by foreign troops in the "recent war." As far as Gu Kwang, French and German punitive expeditions have to some extent accustomed the Chinaman to the foreigner; but beyond, he is a strange and unknown being, whose clothes and complexion are a source of curiosity and comment. Once through the passes of the Shansi Mountains, the traveler is in a land to which few Caucasians ever penetrate.

At Tsing-shing, the next station, the lumbering cart is exchanged for six donkeys, to whose pack saddles the baggage must be strapped for the next three days in going through the mountains.

The presiding genius of Tsing-shing is a jolly Mandarin, who assured me that when "the emperor returns to Peking," China will turn over a new leaf and import foreign teachers, from whom she will learn "the European fashion."

As one progresses further toward Tai Yuen, the weather becomes bitterly cold. The hot brazen skies of Chili are left behind. Instead is a bitter wind and a frost which covers the grass and trees. The Shansi idea of a stove is a few blazing coals in a pan which fill the room with gas; so that the Western traveler can only wrap himself up in his sheepskins, and forget that there are such things as cheerful hearthstones on the other side of the world.

matter how poor the house may be; no matter if the floor be of mud and the walls of clay, the bed must always be of brick. On top of the brick wall, the wealthy Chinaman wraps himself in a quilt, which folds over him in something the shape of an envelope; but

By the roadside near one of the villages was an object lesson in the ignorant superstition which is so interwoven with Chinese Buddhism. Pasted to the trunk of a huge tree were a number of prayers written on red paper. They were all from persons who were suffering from illness or bodily infirmity, and were all addressed to the spirit who was supposed to haunt the tree, begging him to heal them.

At the town of Shou-yang, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD missionary was met by an old official and fifteen Chinese soldiers, each carrying the colors of the different regiments stationed at that prefecture. The procession was preceded by two heralds, making an American election-night noise on two brass horns. They kept up a persistent rattling all the time I was eating my steamed soup and ham at the Kung Hwan, and then escorted me on my way as far as the city gate, when the official made a graceful little speech in which he thanked "the American paper" for not having hatred towards Chinamen. Shou-yang was a boxer hotbed. It was from here that Mr. Piggott, an English missionary, was taken, handcuffed, with his wife and children, into Tai Yuen to be murdered. As I review the odd procession, it seemed evident to me that the inhabitants of Shou-yang realize now that they committed a great crime and have no mercy to expect at the hands of foreigners. That a foreign newspaper should aid the starving ones of their country by sending bread instead of bullets, was the sort of return which they did not expect but for which they wished to express their gratitude.

For more than fifty miles beyond Shou-yang the villages are strangely dilapidated. Stone walls are crumbling and tiled roofs are falling to pieces. The inhabitants are clad in tatters and have the appearance of beggars. By the mandarins I was told the reason. A collection of tumble-down walls by a Shansi roadside means that the opium habit has a village in its grip. Although this awful vice claims thousands of victims every year all over the empire, the province of Shansi is perhaps the greatest sufferer. Its peculiarity here is that the habit overwhelms whole communities. Into a peaceful contented village, a supply of opium will be brought, and all of the inhabitants will begin smoking it simultaneously. The motive at first is the charm of a new sensation, to break the monotony of village life.

Soon, however, the habit becomes permanent, and the village is doomed. Men, women and children alike are slaves of the imported drug. They eat little food, neglect their work, become slovenly in their habits and practically devote their entire time to opium smoking. The end is the death of the majority of the villagers, if not directly from the drug, from the exposure and neglect which follow in its wake. In every large city in Shansi there are several private hospitals and retreats for the cure of the opium habit. Overhead, in front of many of the Chinese drug-stores, are signs announcing that "opium remedies are sold here." The new governor of the province has recently issued an order that any mandarin who is addicted to the vile opium habit shall be degraded from his rank.

The last fifty miles is over a sandy plateau, dotted with mud-walled towns and villages; then through a gate in a massive wall, and the traveler is in the capital of Shansi. Tai Yuen was founded in the Chou Chi dynasty, about 500 B. C. Its population is estimated at 40,000, although anything like an accurate census is impossible under Chinese methods. Its walls and gates, with great wooden structures over them, are similar to those in Peking. As in all Chinese cities, the streets are go far," says the Governor, "towards cementing the friendship between the two countries." The proclamation is all the more remarkable, because only a year and a half ago forty-three Protestant and Romanist missionaries and their families were put to death in front of the very same yamen where the Governor resides.

After the fall of Peking, the allies demanded a new regime in Tai-yuen, which the Chinese have carried out. The former Christian-hating Governor was ordered to be beheaded, although no one knows positively whether or not the sentence was ever actually carried out.

All of the subordinate officials were removed from office, and many of them were exiled. Their places were filled by men who were free from the least taint of Boxer sentiments. The present Governor, Tsen, while a very conservative man, is suppressing with an iron hand any anti-foreign ebullitions. The head of the "Yang Wu Chu," or foreign office, is a very progressive Chinaman, named Shen. He was educated at Cambridge University, and speaks English fluently. In many ways Shen, the Taotai, is a remarkable man. On his shoulders has devolved the difficult task of settling the missionary indemnity claims. He has performed it in a spirit of genuine sorrow for the crimes his countrymen have committed, and he has shown a real friendliness for Christians, which has endangered his popularity with some of the ultra-conservatives, who still cherish the Chinese dislike of foreigners. Shen and I had a long talk about the Famine Fund. His expressions of gratitude and surprise at the readiness of Americans to forgive would fill several columns of your paper. When his secretary called on me later, he said: "When we Chinamen think of last year, and then of what Americans are doing for us now, we want to hide our faces for shame."

The only Protestant missionary now in Tai-yuen is Dr. E. B. Edwards, whose guest I am. He has been the chief administrator of the Famine Fund for the province of Shansi. Within a radius of a hundred miles from Tai Yuen, there has been comparatively little suffering, although the price of wheat is higher to-day than it has been for years. It is in the southern villages near the Shensi border that want and hunger have had their greatest harvests. Last spring, Governor Tsen loaned forty thousand taels in small amounts to the southern farmers, whose fields had dried up, in order to tide them over till the next crop. But the recently harvested crop has been no better than the two previous ones. The villagers have no money for food, and, in addition, have their debt to the Governor to pay. Dr. Edwards says that the suffering this winter in the lower part of the province cannot fail to be intense. To meet the emergency, he is turning to the Famine Fund for help. The rest is being distributed by missionaries and native Christians, whom I expect to meet on my sixteen days' journey to Singan, which begins to-morrow.

simply dusty lanes between rows of one-story houses. Yet Tai Yuen is one of the most important places in North China. The roads to Mongolia, on the north, and Kansu, on the west, radiate from it. It is the headquarters of the intricate Chinese banking system of Shansi, and is the market for all the products of the province. On many of the walls one sees to-day a proclamation from the Governor. It is a eulogy of "a paper called THE CHRISTIAN HERALD," and the generosity of Americans, in sending money into starving

THE NEW YEAR

ALREADY we are so used to the Twentieth Century, that the old nineteenth seems remote, and as we rush into nineteen hundred and two, at the furious pace that is now the fashion, we cannot pause for many handshakes; we simply wave our hands, and, as our automobiles fly past, shout our happy new year's to our equally hurried friends. One must keep up with the procession, and laggards and stragglers must drop from the ranks. Yet, there are many who keep the balance even; dear, thoughtful women, who sit by the hearth in quiet country homes, blessedly distant from city rush and bustle; scholarly men, who are busy with their pens and books, and a host of people who spend their lives in daily toil that is well done and never slighted. The old year slips out, the new year glides in. Looking back over life, we realize that it has been made up of moments, hours and days. If we have improved our time, and have made the most of our opportunities, we are not despondent, albeit we are aware of silver hair where once our heads were brown, and though the strength is less than in our buoyant youth.

A remarkable feature of our present epoch is, that growing old does not now mean growing feeble, or laying aside the duties and responsibilities of earlier life. People, who are in the midst of affairs, remain young at heart, and are equal to their day. People, who a generation or more ago asked immunity from care when they approached a certain age, scorn to seek a concession on that score. But for the fact that a fixed period has been set for the retirement of officers from active service in the Army and the Navy, it is doubtful whether, of their own accord, veterans would step aside and make room for their juniors. The same thing may be said with confidence of the teachers in our public schools. Most of us, if well and interested, prefer to keep at work, no matter to what mark our birthdays may foot up.

When the new year has been ushered in, and the happy greetings have all been exchanged, we are then fairly into the stress of winter. Two cold months stretch before us; months, however, of especial joy and gladness around the fireside. The family circle draws closer together, there is fun in the long evenings, neighbors have their social gatherings, and the church means much in the life of its communicants, for this is the especial season of aggressive work for the Master. Let the storms rage, there are love and peace at home, there is honest friendship in the world, and the disciples are more than ever wont to sit at the feet of Jesus and listen for his lightest word.

May the new year bring only blessing to every reader. Let us forget old grudges and have nothing to do with old feuds; let us be kind, helpful, patient, and compassionate; let us live for others, and not for self; for Jesus first, for his flock next, and so speed onward to heaven in 1902.

Here's a Happy New Year to the ones we love best, To the old folks by the hearth, and the babies in the nest. May God bless and keep his own, and the days go smiling by, Whether cloud or sunshine o'er us, make the tent-roof of the sky.

The Morals of the Young

There is a good man in this land who, for more than thirty years, at great danger to himself, and under a constant fire of reproach and contumely, has set himself to guard the morals of the young. Mr. Anthony Comstock has found that to many an innocent boy and girl temptations are sent in the form of corrupt literature, and that the devil, who ever goes about seeking whom he may devour, has a special delight in seeking the coming generation out and ruining them body and soul. We owe a debt of gratitude to Mr. Comstock, and fathers and mothers and all good citizens owe it to their homes and their children, to jealously exclude from the doorway whatever is impure, atheistic or vile. We are hoping for the dawn of a day when there shall be direct Bible teaching in our public schools, so that morality there may be supported and strengthened by religion. God speed that day.

—FLORENCE EMILIE. By no means call your son Jabez, Ichabod, or Hiram, because these are family names. Modern taste does not approve of them, and you say you prefer Sidney, Theodore, or Harold; surely a young mother may choose for herself in this matter.

—HOUSEKEEPER. Thanks for your answer about stiffening black wash goods, which is, that five cents' worth of gum arabic dissolved in a coffee-cup of warm water and worked into the garment is satisfactory. Other friends recommend the purchase of "mourning starch," but I wanted a home-made recipe.

—A CHRISTIAN. If the majority of the people in your church dress very plainly, it is in good taste for you to do the same. Church is not the right place for the display of costly dress. A rich woman can afford to dress cheaply on occasion if she can thus save the feelings of others. Besides, there are social opportunities for her to wear her good clothes. There is no sin in wearing pins and rings at proper times, but one should not allow herself to be vain of these adornments.

Baby Mine

Softly sleep, baby mine, stars are in the sky,
Brightly wake, baby mine, here's another day.

Every-day Etiquette—I.

THERE are many good people who affect to despise manners as of slight importance. They say "What does it matter about politeness if one's heart is right; why put on a garb of conventionality, is not sincerity better than show?" The friends fail to perceive the fallacy in their statement, the fatal flaw in their presentation of the case. Courtesy is essential if we are to have agreeable intercourse with one another in the household, in society, and in the larger world beyond our immediate home and to which we are bound by a thousand slender, and visible, yet strong and deathless ties. Courtesy is convenience, is defense against embarrassment, is armor of proof against the assaults of ill-temper in ourselves and others. Politeness is founded upon good feeling and good sense. Its root meaning takes us back to beginning of cities, for the world dates from the first encampment of men, with common interests and common sympathies, in a municipality, as contrasted with tent or nomadic or separate life. Urbane has the same far cry in its sound, to the first dwelling of men in commonwealth. The urbane, the polite person, is one who can defer; who can stand aside for the old, or the weak, or the children; who can wait his turn; who can cease to clamor for his own way and concede privileges to his acquaintances and relatives. There is no conflict between tact and sincerity. A truthful man or woman may be as polite and well-mannered as a boor. Affectation is never "good form." One of the essentials of good-breeding is entire candor, unmixed with brusqueness, for candor should never wound the feelings of the most sensitive.

Little by little, to serve the need of society, ways of doing simple things have come into fashion. The visiting card, for example, is nothing but a bit of pasteboard engraved or inscribed with a name. But when people are engaged and cannot accept an invitation, a card, if sent at the right time, is their proxy, and saves them from being rude and looking awkward; it satisfies the demands of society. The etiquette of cards is not elaborate, although it is formal. Even if you, dear sir or madam, may feel above being bothered about anything ceremonious, your son's wife, your daughter, your young cousins, and nieces and nephews are of a different mind on the subject. They like to know the proprieties of the visiting card, and in this, they are right. We should aim to be up-to-date in such matters, not behind the times. Table manners, too, have their rules. So has correspondence its requirements. The well-bred person is never clumsy, nor shy, nor at a disadvantage, for his manners fit him with the ease of an old shoe, or a glove that sets smoothly on the hand. In future papers, the peculiarities of etiquette will be studied practically and simply in this series.

Counting the Cost

In home management there is immense wisdom in counting the cost, before we indulge in too many luxuries. Parents who can deny their children nothing; sybarites who can never say no to themselves; careless housewives, who do not practice frugality, are apt to come to shipwreck, through their remissness in not counting the cost. Far better to wear a shabby coat or a faded gown than to be hampered and handicapped by the expense of a new one, which cannot readily be paid for.

Far better eat plain fare than purchase delicacies which unduly tax the pocket-book. Far better let the beloved ones sometimes wait for a pleasure than procure it at risk to the health of an overworked father and mother. Before an important step, wisdom dictates that one count the cost.

OUR COMPLETE COURSE IN SHORTHAND

ISAAC PITMAN'S SYSTEM.
Based by permission on the Twentieth Century Revision

LESSON I.—Directions to the Student

The system of shorthand presented in the following lessons was invented by Isaac Pitman, in 1837, and was given the name of Phonography (a term derived from two Greek words, meaning "sound writing") because it affords the means of accurately recording the sounds of spoken language. For a brief sketch of the inventor's life, see THE CHRISTIAN HERALD of December 25th. From the outset, the student should remember that he is learning to write by SOUND; that each character represents one definite sound and no other; and that the ordinary spelling—with its many irregularities and inconsistencies—as exhibited in printing and in longhand writing, is not to be followed, or imitated.

When he has mastered the signification of the phonographic signs, the student should use those which represent the equivalent sounds in forming the characters for the words he desires to write.

At the outset the student should not attempt to write rapidly. It is of the utmost importance that he should train his hand to write all the signs employed in the system with accuracy and neatness, before he endeavors to write with speed. If he accustoms himself to this in the earlier portion of his studies, he will never have occasion to lament the illegibility of his writing even, at the proper time, he practices for speed.

The student should thoroughly master the explanations and rules which precede the respective exercises, and write out the illustrative words, afterwards working the exercises. As the secret of success in shorthand is PRACTICE, it is advisable that the various exercises should be written and re-written until they can be done with perfect accuracy. The perusal of some of the numerous progressive reading lessons and books in printed shorthand will also be found helpful to the student in forming a correct style of writing.

The Isaac Pitman system is fully explained in the following lessons, and can be acquired almost at any rate of ordinary capacity with its presentation in simple form. It is an application to study. The student is permitted out, that complete system of the shorthand of the art of shorthand will only be made if a certain portion of time is regularly devoted to the study every day. Study at irregular intervals of time is of little value, but an hour, or a longer period, devoted daily to the task, will, in a comparatively short time, permit a complete knowledge of the system being gained, while assiduous practice will bring speed.

6. For writing out the exercises, a pencil and double-ruled note-book should be used. An Isaac Pitman Reporting Pencil No. 1, and a Phonographic Exercise Book, ruled with double lines, are specially recommended. Knowing how necessary it is for the student to have good tools with which to work, we have made special arrangements with Isaac Pitman & Sons, to furnish any of these articles at reduced rates, to all who intend to take THE CHRISTIAN HERALD and Home. They will send, post-paid, to any part of the United States, Canada, Mexico, Cuba, Porto Rico, Hawaii or the Philippines, six superior quality pencils, and three Phonographic Exercise Books, containing 104 pages each, on receipt of fifty cents. One dozen pencils, and six Exercise Books will be sent post-paid, on receipt of one dollar. The paper in the Exercise Books is specially ruled, and is of a quality suitable for pen or pencil. Orders for books and pencils should be addressed to Isaac Pitman & Sons, 33 Union Square, New York.

7. In order to secure the greatest freedom of movement in writing, the student should let the middle of the forearm rest on the edge of the desk. The student should have the Exercise Book parallel with the edge of the desk or table. Small writing is preferable to large, and one-sixth of an inch will be found a good standard for the consonant strokes. The shorthand characters accompanying these lessons are purposely reduced in size for the sake of condensation. The foregoing table should be learned thoroughly as the first lesson.

A WILD TOWN TAMED BY MUSIC

A Western Mining Camp Incident in Real Life

By MRS. THEODORE SUTRO

It happened out in Nevada, at the Comstock Mines.

Perhaps you have heard of the Sutro Tunnel. This tunnel pierces the Comstock Mines, which were the richest in the world at one time, and the little town at the mouth of the tunnel bears our family name. At one time, my husband was President of the Comstock Tunnel Company, and we lived for a short time in Nevada. All the people in town were employed by the Tunnel Company, or were in some way tributary to it, and as the Miner's Union insists that each working man must receive not less than four dollars each day, there were no poor people living there, and the proprietors of the two liquor stores in town received a large part of all the money earned. Mark Twain lived very near this town at one time, and he must have heard the originals of many of his stories here.

But the children—what was done to entertain or amuse them while their fathers were at work, or at the taverns? Nothing whatever; like "Topsy," in Uncle Tom's Cabin, they "just grewed up;" and the boys were such turbulent scamps that no male school-teacher could be kept in the town of Sutro. It was my fortune, while I was stopping there, to live with the school-mistress, in the house of the superintendent of the mines. For more than two weeks I heard of the dreadful things that scholars did; at first, they made me laugh; but after while I felt that such a state of things should not exist, and so I asked the teacher (Miss H—) what she was going to civilize these children.

"Oh! a stick is all they will obey," she replied.

"Have you ever tried music?" I asked.

She scorned the idea, so I asked her permission to address the children and see what could be done. I put on my best riding habit, mounted a Western broncho, and rode down to the schoolhouse. When I arrived, I think I was more frightened than I have ever been since in addressing an audience, for it was the first time (except once, when I was about ten years old) that I had ever spoken upon a platform. Oh, yes, I know it seems easy, but the first attempt is always a little difficult. How those girls and boys stared at me! I was a great curiosity, I know. When I asked how many of them liked music, only two raised their hands. Then I told them about Patti and Campanini, and that these great singers received five thousand dollars a night for singing, and then, when I said, "How many of you would like to make five thousand dollars a night?" all hands were raised. So I amused these children, and then I invited them all to come that evening to the "mansion," as the home of the superintendent was called.

Although most of the children were born in the town, not any of them, or but very few, had ever seen the inside of that home; and when I told Mrs. Thomas, the wife of the superintendent, what I had done, her displeasure knew no bounds. O, how annoyed she was! She said I was doing a great wrong, in giving these children ideas they could never carry out—ideas that would only bring them unhappiness.

What a change there was a little later on! The boys and girls came that evening. It was a scene for Mark Twain, and I only wish that I had his pen to describe their entrance into the parlor. They did not all arrive at one time, and one boy, the son of a washerwoman, put his head into the parlor, looked around the room, and then wanted to go home.

After they had all arrived, I played a piece called "Full Speed," on the piano, and one of the boys said, "Phew! Look at her fingers go," and then they all laughed, and when my husband sang, their enthusiasm was great and they forgot themselves, and became more at ease than when they first entered. Then I taught them to sing "The Mill," and "Touch Not the Cup," in order that the words of these songs could be sung in their homes and influence the tavern frequenters; and after some refreshments they left, after being invited to come again the next evening, and so we had good times for some weeks. I discovered some excellent voices. One boy had a grand voice, but he always looked as if he had just come out of the mine, he was so dirty and unkempt; and as I wanted him to wash himself cleaner, I persuaded him to learn the song, "Old Black Joe," and blackened his face and neck with burnt cork. This produced the desired effect; he had never been so clean as after that performance.

As the schoolhouse needed some important additions, I suggested that an entertainment be given by the children to raise the money; but in order to excite interest in this plan I arranged to give a first entertainment at the "Mansion," and invited all the parents. Most of the audience had to buy clothes for the occasion; you know they had money there. Such a lot of shoes as were purchased the day of the entertainment, and new dresses and boys suits! Why, it revived the trade of the two nearest towns, Dayton and Virginia City, and some of the merchants said they had not done so much business in years. Well, the children sang in chorus and in solos, and I played the piano and the parents applauded, and the evening was passed just as cheerfully.

Next morning some one said: "If you had known the people better, a great many of the grown people could not have come," and then (in a hushed tone): "Mr. and Mrs. Meehan borrowed Mrs. Savage's little girl, and Mrs. Croly borrowed—"

"But why did they have to borrow little girls?"

"Why, to get in!" Well, I was puzzled.

"Why, don't you know you said the children were to invite their parents, and so the people who didn't have any children would have had to remain at home."

The entertainment in the Town Hall was given a few weeks later, assisted by the wife of the superintendent, and the miners subscribed $250 to repair the schoolhouse.

About one year after, I returned to that town and was invited to the school. After making a complimentary address, the children removed a screen from a corner of the room, and there, to my surprise, was a fine organ. The teacher had learned to play a few songs, and the school opened with music every morning, and of course in good order. Later on, singing societies were started, a music teacher was supported in the town, and now they have a band! The saloon-keeper did not like the idea of the young men being kept away, and generously (?) offered a large room above the saloon in which the band could rehearse; but this offer was declined.

It is now some years since music was introduced into this town, and many of the young women are singing the songs I taught them as the first music their babies hear—the dearest song in the world—a mother's lullaby.

THE SPIRITUAL CAMPAIGN OF 1902

..The Outcome of a 12,000 Mi
Gospel Tour..

By JOHN WILLIS BAER

EVER since my return from a two months' campaign in the Central Western States, I have been impressed with the thought that while the Church is splendidly equipped, and is moving forward, God expects it to make greater progress in this new year which has so auspiciously opened. Now and then I hear or read of one who, sitting under his juniper tree, sends out sad tales of woe, and pictures of dismal failure for the Church of Christ. I have only to say to such an one, that while his may be a truthful story from his viewpoint, the viewpoint is bounded by a narrow circumference. I know of no better remedy for such an one, than to ask him to widen his horizon. If he is fair and open-minded, he will, from the wider outlook, find that the Church of Christ, while far from what it ought to be, is indeed marshaling a mighty host, and that it is moving ever onward and upward. I believe I have a right to remind my friends, the readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, that one who moves about from one end of the land to the other, as I do, has an opportunity to study the Church and its problems which others do not. This last trip of over twelve thousand miles carried me into eleven States, where I visited sixteen different cities, and remember that I was on no other business than the King's, and therefore came in close contact with the Church through conventions, meetings, and conferences. I have returned, grateful to God for what I saw and heard, and with fingers tingling with enthusiasm, I write to urge THE CHRISTIAN HERALD readers to take courage and go forward in the Lord's service. The future was never so bright, the opportunity was never greater, and God is the same to-day that he was in days of old, and he is ready to trust us with his power when we are ready and competent to receive it.

The Universal Need

I say again that we are well organized, and I praise God for that. I believe in organization, and however much good may have been done without it, I believe ever so much more has been brought about with it, providing the organization has been of the kind that God could use, and was amenable to his will. The universal need, however, is not more organization in order that the Church may go further forward. Understand me thoroughly; organization is needed in many places, but organization is not the universal need. Nor does the Church, speaking generally, need more methods of work. We have methods galore, and you can find them on the right hand and on the left hand. Believe me, I saw some pastors and churches that could well afford to appropriate for themselves some of the many modern methods of work that have become commonplace, and which God has blessed, but I say again, the universal need is not more methods.

The real need as I saw it, in both the up-to-date Church, with an aggressive pastor, and the don't-believe-in-methods Church, with a lackadaisical pastor, was not more method but more motive. A deeper desire on the part of the pastors, church officers and individual members of the Church, for a work of grace in their own hearts and in the Church, with all of its subordinate departments. The fact is, we are not dead in earnest about extending God's Kingdom at home or abroad. If we are, we have largely disguised the fact. I must admit that I did find a lack of real longing for the Kingdom of God to come into the individual heart, into the home, into the Church, into the community. Remember, I am not a fault-finder, nor am I writing with a sensorious spirit. That's not my nature. I am only reminding you, as I do myself of the fact, that if we conducted our secular business in manner as slipshod as we do our churches and God's work, it would not be long before our business would have to be reorganized.

How many of us are really crying out to God for power and for work? Work! How many of us are ambitious to be working for God? Actually doing his errands, attempting with his leadership to enlarge the membership of our Church? "O, that is the minister's business," you say. Yes, and your business and my business, or should be. What are we actually doing to commend the Church to others? How enthusiastic are we in giving personal invitations to non-church members to attend the regular and special services of the Church? Come, now, how much do you really work for God? I know of nothing more difficult, but if the Church is to succeed, and it is, it will have the largest success when the rank and file of the entire Church is actually working for God.

Copyright, 1901, by Purdy.

JOHN WILLIS BAER

Begin to Work

In the words of Andrew Murray, let me say right here, "If this is to come, we must remember two things. The one is that it can only come by beginning to work. Those who have not had their attention specially directed to it cannot realize how great the temptation is to make work a matter of thought and prayer and purpose, without its really being done." Now I want my reader to get the truth bursting from the next clause, which I put in italics. "It is easier to hear than to think, easier to think than to speak, easier to act than to act." Is not that true? Does not your past make you plead guilty to the charge implied? "We may accept and admire God's will, and in our prayer plead our willingness to do, and yet not actually do. Let us such measure of grace as we have, and much pray more, take up our calling as God's working men, and do good hard work for him. Doing is the best teacher. I want to know how to do a thing, begin to do it."

It is the motive power that will bring things to pass that is most needed in the Church to-day. O, what glorious progress we could have this new year if the whole Church, pulpit and pew, would become saturated with the spirit of working for God. It is the strenuous religious life on that is going to count for the most in heaven. The Church is waiting for some new fad, or organization, or method, and will wait in vain. Let the pastor and people on their knees before God, wait only for power, and the Church actually move out on old lines, and the day it is done will mark the time of new progress.

The Church, in the opening days of this year, has been serving the week of prayer. It is well, and many a Church is compelled by the spirit of God to continue the one week into two or three, at the same time let the people arise from the slough of apathy, and in God's might actually begin things to pass. Our consecration must be more complete, and our purposes, deepened as they are in meetings, must be crystallized into actions, or we will be a great army marching.

We Must Evangelize or Fossilize

Very properly at this time, I believe that we should cultivate the evangelistic spirit; that every sermon, every prayer meeting talk, every special meeting, every social, every communion meeting, every Sunday School session, should be filled with a longing for the souls of men. Praise God for the many who are stepping across the line into the Church, but let us not cease our cry to God or our work for him until multitudes shall be clamoring for entrance to the Kingdom. Let us make it the passion of our church life and our individual service to thank God for the evidence on every side of wise and consecrated ministers of the Gospel, men who live to preach; who would willingly die that others might live forever. We want more just such pastors, who stand before their communities and say, "Woe is me if I do not preach the Gospel." The Gospel—the plain, simple Gospel story, God never fails to honor and bless. Let us rally around these consecrated men of God, and encourage them to preach Christ, and no theory about Christ. To get their commission and message from the Word of God, and to present the truth as it is written in the Bible without fear or favor; to picture sin as it is and not to overlook its consequences. God give us here to stand in the pulpit and show that "Sin is a separating, imprisoning power which shuts the soul off from the purifying breath of the Divine Spirit, and leaves it in a dungeon, breathing the same air over and over again until it is smothered. Sin is selfish, envious, a hateful power, which takes the very life out of love, and makes it impotent for good; a vain dream never to be realized, a beautiful, ineffectual ghost. With messengers aflame with the Spirit of God, smite sin and to convict sinners, and to show them that by the way of the Cross lies pardon, peace, joy and life everlasting. The Church will move forward with an irresistible momentum that shall sweep all evil before it, and make clean our homes, our communities, and our lives."

Mine is a hopeful outlook. I can see no other, and please God, the day is not far distant when our hope and our prayer shall be answered. May God help you and help me in this new year to make new progress for him on old lines.

An Artist in Tombstones

MISS ALICE RIGG, of Windsor, Canada, has opened up a new profession to women. She is an engraver of tombstones, and, so far as the writer knows, is the first of her sex to follow this calling. It was thro' interest in her father's work that this young woman came to adopt it as her own. When she was a little girl in short skirts and pinafores, she loved to watch him wielding his chisel and mallet, and bringing "words and pictures and poems" out of insensate stone. With the object in view of some day being his assistant, she made a serious study of the sculptor's and engraver's art. The work of a monument artist is not so simple as the uninitiated think. It takes a true eye, a firm wrist, well developed muscle, and the talent of a sculptor to wield the mallet and chisel successfully. Miss Rigg is not an ordinary carver of marble. Her designs are original and beautiful and bespeak thought and knowledge. She is very businesslike too. When she receives an order, she first carefully examines the material with which she is to work, and then sketches a design in charcoal, which she submits to her customer. If any alterations are necessary, she makes them as suggested, and when the whole is pronounced satisfactory, she returns to her workshop, dons her work-apron and commences to hammer and cut the rough marble. Rapidly, things of form and beauty grow under her skillful blows. Steady and true falls the mallet on the chisel and thick and fast the chips fly, until graceful letters, an artistic conventional design, a wreath of delicate flowers, or an angel form stands out in bold relief against the white or gray background. It is said by some that she has raised the work of a tombstone engraver to a place among the fine arts, and has shown men many years older and more experienced in the work than herself, possibilities in the art hitherto undreamed of by them.

She did not have altogether an easy time winning her way in the business world in this new and untrod field for women, but indomitable energy and perseverance brought her success. She is now acknowledged as the most successful carver on marble in the city of Windsor.

To make the stones, however simple they may be, which mark the resting places of the beloved dead, monuments of beauty, speaking comfort and hope to the passer-by, might well be called a pious task. Noble "sermons in stone" have thus been written with chisel and mallet.

Close of a Life of Service

IT was a sorrowful company that gathered in Wesley Church, Springfield, Mass., recently, to attend the obsequies of that untiring and devoted worker in Christ's cause, Mr. H. B. Gibbud. They came from many cities to pay a tribute of respect to his memory, for his labors had brought him in contact with Christian workers scattered over a wide area. He had assisted them, encouraged them, and had worked with them as a brother, and one and another testified to the ardent love and indefatigable energy he displayed in all his spheres of labor. He was only forty-four years of age when he died, yet in that comparatively short period he had accomplished more than many men in a life of the allotted span.

Mr. Gibbud began his Christian activity in Brooklyn, N. Y., soon after his conversion, by gathering a class of children out of the slums into a Mission Sunday School. Though only twenty years of age, he showed that faculty which distinguished him to the last for winning the confidence of people who were not only strangers to him, but strangers to Christ. His genial, affable manner appealed to them, and soon after his first word he was urging them to know Christ, and assuring them that there was no happiness like that of the Christian life. He used to go down to the lowest slums about the docks in Brooklyn, and speak at the street corners, and afterwards join himself to anyone in his audience who had paid attention to him and try to deepen the impression that had been made. Later, he went to New York and began work in the notorious Baxter street. Then he joined Mr. Crittenden in organizing the Florence Mission in Bleeker street. In 1887, he went to Syracuse, N. Y., where he established the Rescue Mission and inaugurated the work of the Gospel Wagon, Gospel Boat and the work among the hop-pickers in which he always took a deep interest.

Later, he became Instructor of The Workers' Training Class in the Bible Normal College and made Springfield his home. He was continually devising new means of reaching the masses and enlisting new laborers. It is estimated that by one scheme alone—that of the Substitute Band—he succeeded in providing support for 1,040 native laborers in India and Africa. His indefatigable efforts were continued in defiance of the warnings of physicians. He could not and would not rest, and to the last he continued in active service.

So his sun went down while it was yet noon, but only to rise in that better land where there are many who owe their salvation to him, and where he will see the results of his loving labors.

THE LATE H. B. GIBBUD

once only in the memory of the present postmaster had he received a letter.

His manner on this occasion had not differed a whit from its usual slow gentleness. He pocketed the letter without apparent surprise or interest, climbed into his shabby wagon and drove away. It was then that Mr. Al Parsons, the postmaster and proprietor of the general store, in one corner of which he conducted the leisurely business of the Government, perceived the single token of agitation displayed by Ol' Mose. "He's fergot his coffee!" he exclaimed.

Mr. Armitage displayed no undue haste to acquaint himself with the contents of the legal-looking envelope, which he had bestowed in his most inaccessible pocket. He drove briskly until he had reached the confines of the village and had left the last house behind him. Left to himself on the stony road, Ol' Mose plunged his hand into his pocket and drew out the letter. He stared at it long and earnestly, then bestowed it, still unopened, in another and more remote pocket, shaking his head with a pucker of his frosty brows.

"I don't like the feel of it," he remarked aloud. "Strange how dumb paper becomes saturated with thought like a sponge. But if there is only one substance—" Then he drove rapidly down the long slope, plunging into a belt of dark woods at its foot, to emerge on another hilly steep, rougher and stonier than the first. At the top of the hill the mare stood still, greeting with a joyous whinny the grizzled collier, who rushed out with tumultuous barking to welcome his master.

It was quite dark by the time Moses Armitage made his way from the barn through the pungent tangle of mayweed to his own gate. The collier ran confidently ahead; then paused with a doubtful growl under the shelter of the porch. The keen eyes of the master had already detected a small, huddled shape, lying prone against the door. He stooped, and laid a large, investigating hand upon it; something soft, and heaving with warm life it was. The quick spurt of a lighted match revealed it—a sleeping child with rosy cheek pillowed upon brown dimpled hands.

It was characteristic of the man that he manifested no surprise at this unexpected sight. A humorous smile played about his bearded lips as he cautiously made his way past the sleeper into the dark room beyond. "Another message from the world," he murmured, as he kindled a light; "you needn't draw in your head like a box-turtle, you old hermit, you!"

Then he tiptoed back to the door, and with a warning word to the collier, who was poking a cold curious nose into the face of the sleeper, he lifted the child and laid him carefully upon a cushioned settle. The little bare limbs stretched themselves luxuriously, a sigh of content breathed from the parted lips; then the curly head turned away from the disquieting light, and the small shoulders once more heaved with the long, regular breathing of unbroken slumber.

The child opened his eyes upon white walls flooded with the pink light of morning, shot through with golden gleams, and seemingly taking its rise in a lovely greenish shadow whence it crept in tiny ripples inch by inch toward the ceiling. The small body still tranced in sleep lay motionless, the while unwinking eyes lulled the half awakened brain with the unimagined splendor.

After a little he began to remember vaguely—a dream perhaps? His lids drooped with the effort to recall the vanished pictures. The sombre room, the black shape heaped with ghostly flowers; the meadow sweet with riotous red clover; the fluting of the love-sick larks, the yellow-haired child, the small stout figure of the old woman, all trooped confusedly past him. A narrow road filled with hard, round stones where he bruised his naked feet, and wept large tears next lengthened interminably before him, merging at last with night, with solemn, winking stars, and a cold wind moaning sadly in black tree-tops. Then the familiar outline of a barn—a house, against whose closed door he huddled, and forgot the rest.

Betwixt the cold darkness and the pink dawn, stretched the long white bridge of sleep; Immanuel, having traversed that bridge, found himself in a new country. Realizing the fact, with a start, he sat up and looked about him at the wide expanse of an unknown bed; then growing bolder, he let himself cautiously down to a painted floor, and trotted noiselessly toward an open door. Here he paused to peep out. He beheld a window through which sunshine streamed in an unbroken flood, and just beyond its yellow square a table spread with a white cloth. Upon the table were a number of objects which instantly riveted the explorer's pleased attention; there was a bowl filled with milk, a plate containing several thick slices of brown bread, and a honeycomb in a pink saucer. In the centre of the table a great, handled dish of blue and white held masses of wild roses.

The child crept nearer to this inviting table by slow degrees, casting bright eyes of inquiry at the paneled cupboard, whose glass doors revealed other curious dishes of blue and white; at the great empty arm-chair, standing in the full blaze of the sunshine; at the deep leathern couch, with its single pillow of vivid scarlet; at the moon-faced clock, ticking solemnly in its long carved case; at the rows upon rows of books, which filled the spaces above the mantel, over and beneath the windows and between the doors from floor to ceiling.

Having approached near enough to catch the honest smell of the brown bread mingled with the sweet creamy odor of the new milk, and the subtler fragrance of honey and wild roses, the small adventurer drew a long breath. Then he reached out a cautious forefinger and touched the white cloth. A silver spoon presented its handle in convenient proximity; Immanuel seized it; his eyes sparkled. He was suddenly sure that here was his breakfast spread out before him. He also remembered the object of his journey. As he tranquilly ate the bread and milk he fixed expectant eyes on the open door.

He had finished the last drop of milk in the bowl, when "Ol' Mose" Armitage, who had been watching the scene with keenest satisfaction from the cover afforded by the lilacs, slowly crossed the narrow strip of green grass and stood in the doorway. His tall, broad figure cast a huge shadow across the yellow floor; his ruddy face beamed through the cloudy masses of snow-white hair and beard like another morningsun; his deep eyes full of dancing light questioned the brown eyes lifted to meet them.

Immanuel laid down his spoon, his innocent face shining with satisfaction, but he did not speak.

Ol' Mose stepped across the threshold and sat down in the armchair; he held out his hand. Obedient to the tacit command the child came and stood at his knee. He looked up into the penetrating eyes which were bent upon his face and smiled his bewitching smile.

"Where did you come from, my child?" "I came a long way, my father," answered Immanuel, in his sweet, clear voice. As he spoke, his little brown hand stole into the man's broad palm.

"But how did you come?" "I walked—all the way. It was a long, long way. I cried in the dark. But I'm glad now." He evidenced the sincerity of his words by a joyous little trill of laughter.

"Can you tell me what your name is, little one?"

"My name is Manuel; don't you remember?"

"Manuel—Immanuel, which is it?"

"Immanuel," said the boy delightedly. "It's your name, too, munny says."

"Ah?" said Ol' Mose interrogatively. "When did mother tell you that?"

"A long time ago, more'n a year, I guess. But she did tell me," asserted the child.

"Where is mother, my boy?" "She's at the fun'ral. I cried; I don't like fun'ral, do you?" "No."

Immanuel felt himself suddenly lifted in strong arms. He leaned back against the broad breast happily. "I love you," he murmured in the sweetest of child voices. "I shall stay with you always."

"But how about mother, little one; wouldn't you like to see her?" asked the man.

"Is my mother here?" said the child, looking up with sparkling eyes. "Oh, yes, let us find her. She is so beautiful; I love her too. But you love me more'n mother does, more'n munny does, more'n anybody else! You found me in the dark, didn't you?"

"I found you asleep—right out here on the porch." Ol' Mose set the child on his feet and led him to the door. "Right here," he repeated. "I brought you in and put you in my bed."

To Canonize a Martyr

HOW the Pope will feel about a proposal that has been made to the Greek Church may be imagined. It is a request by two hundred Czechs to make a saint of John Huss, who was burned at Constance in the year 1415.

JOHN HUSS

Huss was a native of Bohemia, an earnest and eloquent preacher, who, having become a convert to the teaching of Wycliffe, the English reformer, denounced the errors and corruption of the Romish Church. The Pope was exasperated and laid an interdict upon him, but Huss was protected by his king and continued preaching. He was summoned before the Council of Constance to answer charges of heresy, and the Emperor Sigismund granted him a safe conduct. The council declared him guilty, and, in spite of his safe conduct, he was burned at the stake. It is generally believed that M. Pobiedonostzeff, the Procurator of the Greek Church, favors the proposal to canonize Huss. Should he consent and the necessary formalities be observed, the strange spectacle will be witnessed of the Eastern Church declaring the sainthood of a man whom the Western Church burned as a heretic. The breach between the two churches will thus be made wider than ever.

Rijutei's Strange Dream

THE CAREER OF A KOREAN WHO BECAME A FAMOUS CHRISTIAN TEACHER

IN the year 1881, a Korean embassy came to Japan. The head of the embassy was Pak Yung Hio, who had married the former king's daughter. One of the ambassadors was instructed to ascertain what there was in Japan that would be valuable to the farming industry in Korea. He was directed by the Japanese officials to a Mr. Tsuda Sen, who had given great attention to the subject of agriculture and was regarded as the highest authority on that subject. Mr. Tsuda was an earnest Christian; and when he had concluded his information in regard to fruits and grains that might be valuable, he added, "There is one thing that is of more importance to Korea than anything else, and that is the Christian religion." The Korean replied in great surprise, "Why, I thought Christianity was a great evil and to be dreaded." Pointing to a scroll hanging upon the wall on which was inscribed, in Chinese, a copy of the Sermon on the Mount, Mr. Tsuda said, "There is a sample of what the teachings of Christ are. Read it and see for yourself."

The man read it carefully and exclaimed, "I approve of that. It is certainly good." Mr. Tsuda then offered to present him with the scroll, but he replied, "When I left Korea we were cautioned to have nothing to do with the dreadful Christian religion; and, as its teachings are forbidden in my country, it would cost me my life to take back such a present as this." After he returned, he told a friend of his, named Rijutei, what he had seen in Japan, and especially about the scroll and its exalted teachings. Rijutei was a noted scholar and court historian. At one time he saved the Queen from assassination by carrying her on his back to a place of refuge; and, on that account, he was a favorite at court.

About this time the Japanese government sent to Korea for a teacher who would come to Tokio and teach the Korean language in the Imperial University. When Rijutei heard of this he asked that he might be appointed, and he was accordingly sent. Before leaving he made careful inquiry where he could find the man who had the scroll, and procured a letter of introduction to him. On reaching Tokio, he sought for Mr. Tsuda and eagerly read the wonderful teachings of Him who spake as never man spake; and, like his friend, was struck with their superior wisdom and adaptation to human need. He was deeply impressed with the superiority of these words over anything he had ever read or heard; and one night he had a remarkable dream, that fixed upon him the conviction that in Christ was God's revelation to man. In the dream, he saw a man with a basket, containing some lation of the Scriptures into the Korean language. In this way, a Chino-Korean edition of the whole New Testament was prepared and a translation of two of the Gospels; one of which, and the New Testament, were published in Japan, and were used at the beginning of Christian work in Korea. By the efforts of Rijutei two young Korean students, who came to Japan, became Christians. The conduct of these young men made such an impression on the person who had them in charge that he was convinced of the truth and value of Christianity, and afterwards helped to secure its introduction into that country.

A LITTLE THING

Changes the Home Feeling.

Coffee blots out the sunshine from many a home by making the mother, or some other member of the household, dyspeptic, nervous and irritable. There are thousands of cases where the proof is absolutely undeniable. Here is one.

Mrs. C. K. Larzelere, Antigo, Wis., says: "I was taught to drink coffee at an early age, and also at an early age I became a victim to headaches, and as I grew to womanhood these headaches became a part of me, as I was scarcely ever free from one."

About five years ago a friend urged me to try Postum Food Coffee. I made the trial and the result was so satisfactory that we have used it ever since.

My husband and little daughter were subject to nervous attacks, but they have both been entirely free from them since we began using Postum instead of coffee. I no longer have any headaches, and my health is perfect.

If some of these nervous, tired, irritable women would only leave off coffee absolutely and try Postum Food Coffee, they would find a wonderful change in their life. It would then be filled with sunshine and happiness rather than weariness and discontent. And think what an effect it would have on the family, for the mood of the mother is largely responsible for the temper of the children."

BIRTH OF THE CHURCH

Composed of People Born Again of the Holy Spirit

BY MRS. M. BAXTER

WHAT was the real beginning of the Church of Christ? The Church is "his body, the fulness of him that filleth all in all" (Eph. 1: 23). How, then, did we become members of his body? The life of every member of "the Church which is his body" is a life out of death, a real newness of life which comes by the being born from above or born of the Spirit (John 3: 5, margin). As we truly take our place as meriting the death which our Lord died for us, and by faith identify ourselves with him who bore our sins, as he identified himself with us in bearing them, the Spirit of God imparts to us his new life—newness of life—which is the only life of his body.

God the Holy Spirit, who had taken possession of the disciples on the day of Pentecost, spoke through Peter of the death and resurrection of his Lord and Saviour. Having quoted the prophecy of Joel, he made an appeal which was brought home by Divine power to the hearts and consciences of the great mass of people who were gathered together to see and hear what had happened. A mighty movement took place in that promiscuous throng. Jealousy, prejudice, vanished. The Holy Ghost had convicted of sin (John 16: 8), and his arrows had entered into the soul. The great company was "pricked to the heart;" there was a general surrender. The persecutors and would-be teachers took the place of inquirers, and great and small, old and young, asked of the unlearned and ignorant followers of the Crucified, "Men and brethren, what shall we do?"

And Peter had a ready answer, for he was the mouthpiece of the Holy Ghost: "Repent ye, and be baptized, everyone of you, in the name of Jesus Christ." Treat yourselves as you have treated your Lord; condemn yourselves as you have condemned him; crucify yourselves, deny yourselves, by identifying yourselves with him; sink your shameful name of blasphemer and persecutor in his name who offers you, through his death, remission of your sins, "and ye shall receive" what we have received, "the gift of the Holy Ghost. For to you is the promise, and to your children, and to all that are afar off, even as many as the Lord our God shall call unto him." It was a tremendous crisis; it meant much to these souls. How would the priests and elders look on them—those men who had compassed the death of the Lord Jesus? How could they join such a despised company as the hundred and twenty? In the power of the Spirit of God, Peter spoke in the light of God, and of eternity, and appealed to them with boldness; "Save yourselves from this crooked generation."

At the moment of decision, before they finally believed, these souls must understand the issue, they must choose between Christ and their own generation; they must cease to be popular; they must be not of the world, as he was not of the world. But what was all this if they could only be right with God, if they could really know, acknowledge, and serve God's Messiah! It was losing all, indeed; a miserable, unworthy all; but it was also gaining all. For time it was to be shame, persecution, and death, for eternity, life and glory. Oh, this moment of decision, when a soul passes from death unto life, how solemn, how all-important is it! How heaven and hell look on when there are the birth throes of a soul born unto eternal life!

"Then they that received his Word were baptized;" the outward sign answered to the mighty, inward reality which made them new creatures in Christ Jesus. "To as many as received him, to them gave he the right to become children of God, even to them who believe on his name; which were born, not of blood, nor of the will of the flesh, nor of the will of man, but of God" (John 1: 12, 13). Born of God into the life of God! What a change from the old striving and struggling of a powerless nature to do the will of God in the law, with a miserable consciousness of being incapable of fulfilling its requirements! They received the Word, they were baptized by the Spirit into one body, as well as being baptized externally by water into the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost; so that all men might know to whom they belonged; and they received the gift of the Holy Ghost. "There were added unto them about three thousand souls;" and the Church of Christ was born of men and women born again, and filled with the Holy Ghost.

These were new creatures, and could not but lead a new life: "Old things had passed away, and all things were become new" (II. Cor. 5: 17) in these God-filled lives. "They continued steadfastly in the apostles' doctrine and fellowship, and in breaking of bread, and of prayers." The life of prayer and fellowship, oneness and communion with God, and oneness and communion with each other, stamped them as unlike other men. They did not need to testify about their own experience; men saw the change: "fear came upon every soul, and many wonders and signs were done by the apostles." It was but that which the Lord Jesus had led them to expect, that signs and wonders should follow them that believe (Mark 16: 17-20). That which God had desired in his people of old, that they should be a peculiar people unto him, had become a fact in this infant church, but not by the effort to obey a law which was outside of them; it was the mighty power of a new law within their being: the law of "the Spirit of life, which is in Christ Jesus" (Romans 8: 2).

The Consecrated Blacksmith

IT is good to know of the faithful servants of God who have not grown weary in well-doing, but whose years have served to bring them closer to the Master.

Ezra Botsford was born in Berlin, Conn., in 1809, and has been living "the larger life" for more than seventy-five years. He was a blacksmith by trade, and in many ways is a reminder of Elihu Burritt, "the learned blacksmith," whom he counted among his warm friends, entertaining him in his home. Like Burritt, Mr. Botsford is self-educated, and while the sparks were flying from his anvil, his mind was busy with larger and more important themes.

He was an important factor in the great revival which swept over Lewis County, N. Y., in the early 30's, and many a man, now settled far in the West, owes his start in the new life to some faithful word from the village blacksmith. His work among the young men of his day can hardly be estimated. Many a wayward boy has been reclaimed from the downward course through his influence. The old Presbyterian Church at Martinsburg has sent out thirty-five ministers, not a few of whom owe their inspiration to him. For nearly forty years he was Superintendent of the Sunday School, and has been a good example of the faithful elder. At ninety-three, while his physical sight is nearly gone, his spiritual vision is undimmed, and his mind has scarcely lost anything of its force and vigor.

Now this aged saint is waiting patiently the meeting with his Lord.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Dec. 25, 1901.

Dear Mr. Klopsch, Proprietor Christian Herald

I have received the "marvelous premium," and can truly say that the pictures are all that you claim for them. In this connection, permit me to further say that I regard THE CHRISTIAN HERALD as one of the greatest educators in this progressive age. No man, woman or child can regularly read its pages without becoming kinder, wiser, and every way better.

Dr. Talmage acted wisely when he ceased to confine his powers to a single congregation, and became the world's preacher through the columns of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD.

Yours in the bonds of Christian fellowship.

SURRENDERED

To Hot Biscuits and Warm Pie.

Bombarding a stomach with hot biscuits and warm pie, plenty of butter, bacon, greasy potatoes, and a few other choice delicacies will finally cause the fortifications to give way. Then how to build back on good food is worth knowing.

A man in Factoryville, Pa. attacked his stomach in about this way and says: "The sign of surrender was plain in my white, colorless face. At that time every article of food distressed me, and heart-burn kept me in continued misery. I liked all sorts of breakfast foods but they did not agree with me. Of course, much of the food that I ate contained nourishment but my stomach could not get the nourishment out. I tried pepsin and other aids to digestion which worked for a time and then gave out."

Finally I reasoned, when in an extremity, that if the stomach could not digest the food why not take some food that was already digested like Grape-Nuts. So I started in on Grape-Nuts and the new food won my palate straight away and agreed with me beautifully.

The heavy, oppressive feeling disappeared and I became thoroughly impressed with the new food and began to improve at once. Little by little my strength came back and slowly and surely I gained my lost weight. The wasted tissues and muscles built up, and to-day I am well, buoyant and strong.

I unreservedly give the chief credit to Grape-Nuts which met me in a crisis and brought me over the dark period of despondency. Nothing else did it for nothing else could be endured.

Please withhold my name." Name can be given upon application to the Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

Where Do You Live?

It makes no difference whether you live in the odorous atmosphere of a city, or on a dust-covered plain; in the dry altitude of the mountains, or the moist air of the sea coast; in the frigid zone of the north, or the torrid heat of the tropics, you can get your biscuit, crackers and wafers perfectly fresh in the In-er-seal Patent Package. The only method known for preserving the flavor and crispness of delicate baking until it reaches the table.

When you order Soda, Milk, Graham Oatmeal and Butter Thin Biscuit, Vanilla Wafers and Ginger Snaps, don't forget to ask for the kind that come in the In-er-seal Patent Package. Look for the trademark design on the end of each package.

CALEB

HOOSING A HARD THING*

Human Effort Necessary to Success in Spiritual Struggle

TYPICAL of the rewards of the Christian, was the gift to the aged warrior of Israel. He had been faithful and true, at a time when all hearts were failing through fear. He had not made light of difficulties, but he regarded them in relation to the power to overcome them, and great and formidable as they were, he was confident that with the strength God was giving his people, the difficulties might be surmounted. After seeing the Land of Promise and the power of the people who occupied it, he said: "Let us go up at once and possess it: for we are well able to overcome." That was a spirit that God loved to see—a spirit that did not minimize obstacles, but relied on his power to vanquish them. So Caleb was to be rewarded. In dividing the land, a specially valuable section was to be allotted to him and his family. But there was a peculiarity about this section, which is worth considering. It was still in the possession of the most formidable tribes of the enemy. Therefore, before Caleb could own it, he must drive out its present holders. The gift involved a terrible struggle. Though it was given to him as a right, he must fight before he could enter on his right. All that the gift amounted to, was that if he won the victory, he should enjoy the fruits of it. He might sit idly in his tent, and, looking out at the mountain, have told the passer-by that all that section belonged of right to him, though he did not own a foot of it. He did that, his property would be of no worth to him. Yet many Christians do so with regard to God's promises to them. They do not take possession of them.

Listening to the prayers that are often made in public, one would think that the persons offering them desired nothing so much as freedom from sin and higher spiritual attainment. They plead the promises and beg God to fulfil them in their experience. That is quite right, but it should be followed, more frequently than it is, by effort. The story is familiar of the man who found a mountain in his path, and, kneeling down at the foot, prayed that God would carry him over it. He pleaded long, and then sat down, expecting that by a miracle he would be lifted on the other side. But no miracle was worked, and he knelt down and prayed more earnestly. Still there was no miracle, and he prayed the third time, almost reproaching God for not giving him his desire. Then he heard a voice directing him to climb. He was sure that he had not the strength to climb so high a mountain, but in obedience to the voice he set out. To his amazement, he found that the mountain was not as steep as he had supposed, and that his strength was greater than he thought. It was increased as he went higher, and, at the end of his journey, he knelt down again to thank God, and the voice answered him that all his prayers would be answered that way, not by miracle, but by imparting divine strength to him when his own was failing. There are many who need to learn the lesson of that fable. God will not dispense with human power. He is able to do without our puny efforts, but he chooses to use them. Christ was able to feed the five thousand by the exercise of his divine power, but he asked how many loaves they had and bade his disciples bring them to him. The power that multiplied them could have fed the people without them, but he preferred to use the means. So it is with all achievements; God will work through us, not without us. A man is so bound by the chains of evil habit that he desponds of ever getting free. The moment temptation assails him, he falls. He hears that God will deliver him in answer to prayer, so he prays. But when temptation comes, and he falls, as usual, he thinks God has not answered his prayer. He is answered when he resists the temptation with the new strength that is placed at his disposal. He may feel that it is useless to strive, having so often been defeated; but if he will realize that the conditions are changed, and that now there is hope of success, because he will be helped, he will find the victory easy. It is futile, as he knows by experience, to struggle alone; but what may he not hope for with God aiding him? "I can do all things," said Paul, and one would have called such an assertion a vain boast, if he had not added the explanation: "Through Christ who strengtheneth me." All the Christian's triumphs are won in this way. They are not won without his own effort, but through the power of God blessing his effort. It is conceivable that the world might be saved by the exercise of Almighty Power, but it will never come in that way. God chooses to use the preaching of the Gospel by men to work out the regeneration. As if to prove that it is by his supreme power that the blessing comes, he often uses the most inadequate means. Preaching that seems so poor and feeble that we wonder how people can listen to it; men so ignorant and uncultured as to incur the contempt of the theologians—are blessed to a degree unattained by eloquence or learning and accomplish results that others do not achieve. The weakest and most humble may thus hope for success, if they will only strive in dependence on the promised strength.

5. Do not write inquiring if your material has been accepted. If it appears on this page, you will know that it has been accepted.
6. We cannot return any MSS. sent to the Editor of THE MAIL-BAG—not even if stamps accompany them.
7. Write only on one side of the sheet, and never send on the same sheet anything intended for any other department of the paper. Correspondents answering more than one question should append their name and address to each answer.
8. Address all communications intended for this department, Editor The Mail-Bag, The Christian Herald, Bible House, New York.

Readers are invited to forward new questions which they believe would be suitable for discussion in this department.

These Questions will be Answered Feb. 12

1. Is it in accord with civilization or justice that the brutish who imprisoned Miss Stone should be permitted wholly to escape punishment? Ought a pledge, given under stress and intimidation, to such outlaws, to be honored as though given voluntarily?
2. What is the true meaning or definition of the phrase "poor in spirit," as it occurs in the Beatitudes?
3. What kind of preaching is best suited to the spiritual needs of the average congregation, as being adapted to the development of sturdy Christian character?
4. Having delivered Cuba from the yoke of Spain, ought we to see that she has an honest and good government or ought we to let her manage her own affairs without our interference?
5. To what extent if any is the study of prophecy discredited or disapproved by predictions based on the movements of the planets, of approaching calamities or the end of this dispensation?

Questions of the Week

1. Is Memory or Imagination the greater gift, and which is the more valuable to man?

Each is more valuable in conjunction with the normal exercise of the other. But the real outcome of their exercise will furnish a comparison, and give conclusions of value. In making such a comparison the preponderance is on the side of imagination. Memory is the recording faculty, and, at the same time, the faculty by which resources are made quickly available. It is mainly the faculty employed in the most primitive discipline of the mind. Imagination is more original, inventive and resourceful. It is creative and more far-reaching in its exercise and in the results of its activity. It is progressive and conquering. An illustration in point is furnished by the history of a nation in which memory is much cultivated and imagination almost wanting—China, the most unimaginative and at the same time most unprogressive of countries. In their systems of education, memory is highly developed—imagination hardly at all. Perhaps no better example of imagination dominant, can be found than our own active, energetic America, where marvelous inventions, the product of trained imaginations, multiply on all sides. C. B. ATKINSON.

Man, deprived of memory, would possess less intelligence than the brute beast; and the beast, deprived of memory, could not sustain the relation to man which it now sustains, as it would be then unteachable. The attainment of all knowledge is dependent upon that faculty of the mind called memory, and to deprive man of it would be to blot out the past in history and in the sciences and arts. All the attainments of man during the past centuries would have been an impossibility without memory, and he could only have lived in the actual present. Imagination itself could hardly exist independently of memory, as without memory man would live only in the present—a life of the five senses only, void of experience, incapable of prophesy or planning. Imagination, like memory, applies to that which is absent, and its exercise calls for play of faculties which are partly, if not wholly, products of memory. Man could exist without imagination; he could not exist without memory. T. MANBY.

2. In what sense, if any, can the collection-box be regarded as an index of the spiritual condition of a church?

It is undoubtedly true, that, to a discriminating observer who knows the financial condition of a church, the collection-box is a very accurate index of the spiritual condition of the church. That is true, because liberality is a grace which abounds or abates as love is warm or cold. It is the very opposite of selfishness, and the absence of selfishness, is a very fair index of the extent and vitality of the grace in the human heart. A reviving and quickening of faith and love—what is properly called a revival of religion—results in an increase in the religious contributions of the people. That fact has been often observed by those who are in the best position to judge, the ministers and officers of the churches. C. B. A.

As a general rule, the higher the grade of spiritual life the more liberal the contributions. But we are plainly taught (Mark 12: 41-44), that liberality is relative, not absolute. It sometimes happens on account of changed conditions, financial reverses, ill-health, old age, that a person will be forced to reduce, or even suspend his contributions, and at the same time be making much spiritual progress. These are exceptional cases, and do not disprove the rule, but they do prove that it is unwise, and unjust also, to make the contribution-box a standard of spirituality in an ing services, can tell you more about the dress of those present, than they can about the sermon. Even many pastors pander to the throng, and often lose sight of the spiritual need of their congregation.

CHARLES F. COOPER.

A sweeping assertion one way or the other would be rash. It is impossible to make up an average in spiritual matters. In some sections of the country and in some parts of the world, the Church is becoming more spiritual. In others it is less so. Again, in some denominations there is improvement, but in others there is a falling away. I cannot think that, as some contend, a sure test anywhere is the amount of money raised for missions and church work. It deserves to be taken into account, because in many instances it shows that Christ's people are denying themselves that they may give to his cause; but in other cases, in which men, who are engaged in wicked businesses, give as a kind of sop to their conscience, or to curry favor with the church element in society, of course, it affords no indication of spirituality. I would prefer to take the daily life of the people as an indication. I doubt if there are so many houses now as there used to be in

Certainly. There is no place so fitting. The holding of the church social in the church building (1) refutes the notion of any sanctity inherent in the material structure which the church worships. It is easy to make a fetish or an idol out of the house of worship. The sanctuary is to be revered but not worshiped. 2. Tends to secure larger and more representative gathering those whom the social ought to help. There is a natural reluctance about going to the residence of one with whom there is no personal acquaintance, while the church building is common ground. 3. Opens an easy door through which the non-church-goer may be brought into relation with the church. One who would not go to a sermon may come to a supper; but once inside the church building it will be easier to persuade him to come again, and for another purpose. 4. Emphasizes the true purpose of a church social; sociability for sociability's sake, but sociability for the sake of the church and its work. 5. Acts as a check upon undue levity and questionable forms of amusement. Liberty less likely to degenerate into license in the church building than in a public hall or private residence. 6. Sounds a much needed note, that religion is not antagonistic to pure innocent enjoyment, and that the church is the rightful centre of the social life of the community. J. K. W.

Miscellaneous Questions

It is wonderful how many letters of heart appreciation of the Art Portfolio have been received from readers of this journal. Not few of these are in verse. A reader in Connecticut writes:

The Art Portfolio is received—
A royal gift 'tis, too,
I'll gladly show to all my friends
The premiums sent by you.

Another, writing from Long Island, N. Y. sends this among other verses:

The twelve would decorate a room,
And please your friends when they did come.

But to quote from all would fill many columns of THE MAIL-BAG.

Mrs. D. W., Norwalk, O. 1. What is our Indian population? 2. Where are the Indians located? 3. Have they schools? 4. Are they allowed to vote?

1. According to the report for 1900 of our Commissioner of Indian Affairs, there are in the United States 297,905 Indians, of whom 95,679 wear citizens' dress, and 31,923 a mixture of other clothing; 42,597 can read, and 53,314 can carry on an ordinary conversation in English. 2. They are scattered about through the different States and Territories: on reservations or at school under control of Indian office (not taxed or taxable) there are 133,382. Arizona, California, with about 17,000 each, Montana about 10,000, New Mexico and South Dakota, with about 20,000 each, appear to lead in the number of Indian residents. 3. The Government School at Hampton furnishes fine educational opportunities for Indians; there are schools provided besides this, we believe. There are also a number of mission schools. 4. In New Mexico, Nevada and Washington Territory, Indians are not allowed to vote. In Maine and Minnesota, "Indians not taxed or taxable," are excluded from voting. In Michigan and South Dakota, "Indians with tribal relations" are excluded. In the other States, the qualifications are the same for the Indian as for the whites.

R. H. B., Phoenix, Ariz. If all Christian parents would devote as much time and energy to the conversion of their own children as they do for the heathen, would there not probably be many more saved at last?

To use such an argument as an excuse for neglecting our duty to the heathen is both illogical and unsound. It is a first duty on the part of parents to lead their children to Christ. It is equally obligatory on all Christians to unite in obedience to Christ's command to preach the Gospel to all nations.

O. S. Fell, Swarthmore, Pa. (a reader of this journal), sends some instructive rhymes on THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, in which he says:

Comes fifty-two times in the year,
Homes and hearts to joyously cheer.

Claro B. R., Elk Lake, Pa. Most people would very likely say that loss of sight was infinitely worse than loss of hearing; although the deaf may take the opposite view.

Rev. John Kinsley Ford, Grace M. E. Church, South Jacksonville, makes appeal for food and clothing, shoes, bedding, comforts, sheets, etc., for the poor who were rendered homeless by the Jacksonville fire.

3. A very young person asks: "Is a Christian boy or girl supposed to live the same quiet life that an old Christian lives?" How should he be answered?

Most decidedly, no. The Christian life runs not opposite to, but parallel with the natural life. It does not make the child old, though it does help to keep the old man young. In childhood and youth the Christian life should exhibit the characteristics of that period. It should be buoyant, joyous, hopeful, active, irrepressible, needing not restraint, only direction. These qualities are fully as desirable as are the calm peace, the holy joy, the unflinching trust of those who, having finished their work, sit in the twilight awaiting the summons. The secret of a happy life is to keep the heart young, and this is pre-eminently the privilege of the Christian. Innocent amusements, judicious recreation should be provided, as far as possible, for the young, and they should not be avoided by the old. OMEGA.

4. Is the Christian Church growing more or less spiritual?

It is a lamentable fact, nevertheless true, that the Church of to-day is less spiritual than the less pretentious Church of fifty years ago. People went to church then for the real good they could do for themselves and others. There was little pains taken to have a dress or hat of the latest pattern. The dress was plain, yet neat and cleanly. If one member could not afford as costly clothes as another, he felt no humiliation in attending services, for it would not be noticed. They were there for a spiritual blessing. To-day it is quite different with the upper and middle classes of society. The poorer people seldom go, because they cannot afford better dress. Many members of church to-day, after attend-which there is family prayer, and that is a bad sign. Then, too, members of the church may be found at euchre parties, in the theatre and ball room to a greater extent than formerly, which is another bad sign. On the other hand, there is far less drinking of intoxicating liquor among both ministers and members than formerly. There is more Bible study and greater effort to relieve the poor, the sick and the suffering than at any previous period of the church. This shows a desire to live the Christ life, which is very encouraging. Another good sign is the more kindly and brotherly feeling between the denominations, which augurs well for future work. It shows, too, that there is more of Christ's spirit in the heart, and that people are realizing that he who loves Christ should love his brother also. On the whole, in spite of some discouraging facts, there is, I am convinced, ground for hope and encouragement. EDWARD WRIGHT.

5. Waiving the question of the desirability of church socials, should a social for the benefit of the church be held in the church building?

Some things may serve well for social entertainment, but they edify not. If there is a place on earth into which we go for edification it is the church. There, in our "strenuous life" is the calm hour,—the breathing-spell in the race of life,—the rest hour for prayer, meditation, thanksgiving, and praise. With all our care, even in the house of God, we still have to wage a battle within for that complete possession of soul from worldly distractions that will enable us to worship in spirit and in truth. This battle will be much harder to win, if the church building is sometimes given up to use for social fairs or other incongruous levity; for the remembrance of these things is strongest in the place of enactment, and there they will have their strongest distracting power. Better "take these things hence." J. T. CRABTREE.

JAPAN'S GREATEST ORPHANAGE

By TORAJI MAKINO, a Graduate of Doshisha College

At the east end of the town of Okayama, ninety miles west of Kobe, on the line of the San-Yo Railway, stands the Okayama Orphanage, the first and greatest orphan asylum in Japan. Founded four years ago by a young Japanese Christian, it already has sheltered five hundred and fifty orphans, and its work for humanity has greatly impressed the Japanese people. The founder of the asylum, Mr. Juji Ishii, belongs to a murai or "gentry" class family. He was born in 1865, and grew up a daring, robust boy. At the age of seventeen years, he entered the Government Medical School, at Okayama, where he was converted to Christianity. Two woman and two children, whose destitution appealed so strongly to his sympathies that he took one of the children to his boarding-house, where he fed and cared for him. Having yielded once to the deep call of humanity, he found no heart to refuse when the cry for help came to him again. Two more orphans he took to his home within a few weeks,

During the first two years after the Orphanage was founded, in which time the number of inmates grew to be sixty, the only support which Mr. Ishii could rely upon came from Christians. Mr. and Mrs. Ishii often spent sleepless nights praying and talking about their beloved little ones, when they unexpectedly had received some new orphans in the Asylum, and had unhesitatingly given up their own bed-clothes to provide for the helpless waifs.

While the conducting of the orphanage always has been strictly within Christian lines, from the start, it also rigidly has kept its own independence, though sometimes it has cost dear to do so. It is to be remembered that only one per-years later, in 1884, moved by the famous "Appeal for the Christian Education in Japan," by President Neesima, of Doshisha College, which he chanced to read in a Christian periodical, Mr. Ishii started a Poor Boys' School in his native town during his summer vacation. In the year 1886, George Muller, Superintendent of the British Orphanage Asylum, in England, visited Japan, where his discourse on the power of prayer, and "The Life of Trust" strongly impressed the young convert. In the following spring, 1887, in a suburb of Okayama, Mr. Ishii met a poor when, finding themselves straitened for room, he and his wife, with the three newly-found children, moved into the old Buddhist temple, which they could rent cheaply.

In this ancient seat of worship he organized The Orphan Educational Society. He was cordially helped by the local Christians. From the beginning, the founder had to invent original plans and devices to meet the needs of his institution. His greatest trouble was lack of money. By the others, Mr. Ishii was taken for a hypocrite, a so-called "rice-Christian," while some Christians, even, looked on him as a fanatic, because he did not ask protection or patronage from anybody. In his work he has relied entirely upon the personal sympathy of the Christians and the help of the Heavenly Father. CHRISTIAN COURTESY

TEXT—I. Peter 3: 8:
"BE COURTEOUS"

IN an age when bluntness has been canonized as a virtue, it may be useful to extol one of the most beautiful of all the royal family of graces—courtesy. It is graciousness, deference to the wishes of others, good manners, affability, willingness to deny ourselves somewhat for the advantage of others, urbanity. But what is the use of my defining the grace of courtesy when we all know so well what it is. The botanist might say some very interesting things about a rose, and the chemist might discourse about water or light, but without ever seeing a botanist or a chemist we know what a rose is, and what water and light are. Do not take our time in telling us what courtesy is; only show us how we may get more of it and avoid what are its counterfeits. Mark you, it cannot be put on or dramatized successfully for a long while. We may be full of bows and genuflections and smiles and complimentary phrase, and have nothing of genuine courtesy either in our make-up or in our demeanor. A backwoodsman who never saw a drawing-room, or a dancing master, or a caterer, or a fold of drapery, may, with his big soul and hard hand and awkward salutation, exercise the grace, while one born under richest upholstery, and educated in foreign schools, and bothered to know which of ten garments he will take from a royal wardrobe, may be as barren of the spirit of courtesy as the great Sahara desert is of green meadows and tossing fountains.

Christian courtesy is born in the heart by the power of the Holy Ghost, who has transformed and illumined and glorified one's nature. Mark you, I am speaking of the highest kind of courtesy, which is Christian courtesy. Something like it, ordinary politeness, may grow up with us under the direction of intelligent and watchful parentage, but I am not speaking of that which is merely agreeableness of conversation and behavior. All that may be a matter of tutelage and fine surrounding, and show itself in lifting the hat to passers-by, and in a graceful way of asking about your health, and sending the right kind of acceptance when you can go, and the right kind of regrets when you cannot go, and understanding all the laws of preference at table and parlor door, all of which is well. I am speaking of a principle of courtesy so implanted in one's nature that his suavity of conversation and manner shall be the outburst of what he feels for the happiness and welfare of others—a principle that will work in the next world as well as in this, and will be as appropriate in the mansions of heaven as in earthly dwelling places.

Courtesy Without Principle

Now, you know as well as I do that some of the most undesirable people have been seeming incarnations of courtesy. In our early American history there arose a man of wonderful talent, an impersonation of all that can charm drawing-rooms and cultivated circles. Aged men who knew him in their youth, have told me that he was the most irresistible man they ever met—his voice silvery, his smile bewitching, his glove immaculate, his eye piercing, his high forehead wreathed in curls, his attire a fascination. He became Vice-President of the United States, and within one vote of being President. Men threw away their fortunes to help him in his political aspirations and to forward him in a conspiracy to overthrow the government of the United States, he trying to do in America what Napoleon at that very time was trying to do in Europe—establish a throne for himself. But he was immoral and corrupt. He was the serpent that wound its way into many a domestic paradise. He shot to death one of the greatest of Americans—Alexander Hamilton. The world found out long before he left it that the offender I speak of was an embodiment of dissoluteness and base ambition. He was the best illustration that I know of, of the fact that a man may have the appearance of courtesy while within he is all wrong.

Absalom, a Bible character, was a specimen of a man of polish outside and of rottenness inside. Beautiful, brilliant, and with such wealth of hair that when it was cut in each December, as a matter of pride he had it weighed, and it weighed two hundred shekels. He captured all who came near him. But, oh, what a heart he had—full of treachery and unfilial spirit and baseness. He was as bad as he was alluring and charming.

In the famous Athenian Alcibiades history discourses of the same splendor of manner covering utter depravity. Noble pedigree, transcendent abilities, radiant personality, eloquent tongue, triumphant warrior, victor at Olympic games, but a debauchee and an impersonation of all the vices. Alas, that all up and down history, and clear on into our day, there are so many of what Christ called "wolves in sheep's clothing,"—"white-washed sepulchres, full of dead men's bones and all un-cleanness." Gilded abominations, walking lazarettos, attired in vermilion and gold. Perdition hanging out the banners of heaven. As far as possible are they removed from all genuine courtesy.

I like what John Wesley said to a man when their carriages met on the road. The ruffian, knowing Mr. Wesley and disliking him, did not turn out, but kept the middle of the road. Mr. Wesley cheerfully gave the man all the road, himself riding into the ditch. As they passed each other the ruffian said: "I never turn out for fools," and Mr. Wesley said, "I always do." I like the reproof which a Chinaman in San Francisco gave an American. The American pushed him off the sidewalk until he fell into the mud. The Chinaman, on rising, began to brush off the mud, and said to the American: "You Christian; me heathen. Good-by." A stranger entered a church in one of the cities and was allowed to stand a long while, although there was plenty of room. No one offered a seat. The stranger after a while said to one of the brethren: "What church is this?" The answer was, "Christ's church, sir." "Is he in?" said the stranger. The officer of the church understood what was meant, and gave him a seat. We want more courtesy in the churches, more courtesy in places of business, more courtesy in our homes.

Courtesy in the Home

But heart courtesy must precede hand and head and foot courtesy. Cultivation of it should begin in the father's house. You often notice that brothers and sisters are often gruff and snappy, and say things and do things that they would not have the outside world know about. Rough things are sometimes said in households which ought never to be said at all,—teasing and recrimination and fault-finding and harsh criticisms, which will have their echo thirty and forty and fifty years afterward. In the sleet driven by that east wind no sweet flowers of kindness and geniality will grow. Let children hear their parents picking at each other, and those children will be found picking at each other, and far down the road of life will be seen the same disposition to pick at others. Better than this habit of picking at children, which so many parents indulge in, would be one good, healthy application of the rod. Better a shower that lasts a few minutes than the cold drizzle of many days. We never get over our first home, however many homes we may have afterward.

Let us all cultivate this grace of Christian courtesy by indulging in the habit of praise instead of the habit of blame. There are evils in the world that we must denounce; but never let us allow the opportunity of applauding good deeds pass unimproved. The old theory was that you must never praise people lest we make them vain. No danger of that. Before any of us get through with life we will have enough mean and ignoble and depreciating and lying things said about us to keep us humble. God approvingly recognizes a system of rewards as well as of punishments. When you hear a good sermon, stop after the benediction and tell the pastor, though you never saw him before that day, "Your sermon did me good." When a mechanic does a good piece of work, tell him it is well done. When a physician brings you out of a perilous illness, stop him in the street and say, "Doctor, you saved my life." When you hear of a business man, in some heavy stress of financial weather, helping frailer craft into the harbor, go into his counting room and say: "I hear you have been helping your fellow business man to outride the tempest of a panic, and I came in to thank you for the good advice you gave, and to let you know that all good citizens appreciate what you have been doing." Go down the street to-morrow and thank somebody. There are hundreds of people who never get thanked at all. Plenty of severe criticism, plenty of fault-finding, plenty of misinterpretation, plenty of depreciation; but as to gratitude—that is a market in which the supply does not equal the demand.

Uncharitableness

In the cultivation of this habit of Christian courtesy, let us abstain from joining in the work of defamation. Every little while society takes after a man, and it must have a victim. If you had a roll of all the public men of this generation, or of any generation, who have been denounced and despoiled of their good name, it would take you a long while to call the roll. It is a bad streak in human nature that there are so many who prefer to believe evil instead of good concerning any one under discussion. If a good motive and a bad motive have been possible in the case in hand, one man will believe the conduct was inspired by a good motive, and ten men will believe it was inspired by a bad motive. The more faults a man has of his own, the more willing is he to ascribe faults to others.

What a curse of cynics and pessimists afflicts our time, afflicts all time! There are those who praise no one until he is dead. Now that he is clear under ground, and a heavy stone is on the top of him, there is no possibility of his ever coming up again as a rival. Some of the epitaphs on tombstones are so fulsome that on resurrection day a man rising may, if he reads the epitaph, for the moment think he got into the wrong grave. Speak well one of another, and if you find yourself in circles disposed to slander and abuse, be for the time as dumb as the Sphinx which, though only a few yards away from the over-shadowing Pyramid of Egypt has not with its lips of stone spoken one word in thousands of years.

The Value of a Benediction

There are two sides to every man's character—a good side and an evil side. The good see only the good, and the evil only the evil, and the probability is that a medium opinion is the right opinion. Most of the people whom I know are doing about as well as they can under the circumstances. When I see people who are worse than I am, I conclude that if I had had the same bad influences around me all my life that they have had, I would probably have been worse than they now are. The work of reform is the most important work, but many of the reformers, dwelling on one evil, see nothing but evil, and they get so used to anathema they forget the usefulness once in a while of a benediction. They get so accustomed to excoriating public men that they do not realize that never since John Hancock in boldest chirography signed the Declaration of Independence, never since Columbus picked up the floating land flowers that showed him he was coming near some new country, have there been so many noble and splendid and Christian men in high places in this country as now. You could go into the President's Cabinet, or the United States Senate, or the House of Representatives, in this city and find plenty of men capable of holding an old-fashioned Methodist prayer-meeting—plenty of Senators and Representatives and Cabinet officers to start the tune and kneel with the penitents at the altar. In all these places there are men who could, without looking at the Book, recite the sublime words, as did Gladstone during vacation at Hawarden: "I believe in God, the Father Almighty, Maker of heaven and earth, and in Jesus Christ," and from the Senate and House of Representatives and the Presidential Cabinet, and from the surrounding offices and committee-rooms, if they could hear, would come many voices responding, Amen, and amen.

Christian courtesy I especially commend to those who have subordinates. Almost every person has some one under him. How do you treat that clerk, that servant, that assistant, that employee? Do you accost him in brusque terms and roughly command him to do that which you might kindly ask him to do? The last words that the Duke of Wellington uttered were: "If you please." That conqueror, in what was in some respects the greatest battle ever fought, in his last hours, asked by his servant if he would take some tea, replied: "If you please," his last words an expression of courtesy. Beautiful characteristic in any class. The day laborers in Sweden, passing each other, take off their hats in reverence. There is in any circle. As complete a gentleman as ever lived was he who was unhorsed on the road to Damascus and beheaded on the road to Ostia—Paul, the apostle. I know that he might be so characterized by the way he apologized to Ananias, the high priest. I know it from the way he complimented Felix as a judge, and from the way he greets the king: "I thank myself, King Agrippa, because I shall answer for myself this day before thee touching all the things whereof I am accused of the Jews; especially because I know thee to be expert in all customs and questions which are among the Jews." I know that Paul was a gentleman from the way he opened his sermon on Mars Hill, not insulting his audience, as King James' translation implies, but saying: "Ye men of Athens, I perceive that in all things ye are very devout." I know he was a gentleman from the fact that when he, with others of a shipwreck, on the Island of Melita visited the governor of the island, he was most impressed with the courtesy shown them, and reported that visit in these words: "In the same quarters were possessions of the chief man of the island, whose name was Publius; who received us, and lodged us three days courteously." And then see those words of advice which he gives: "Bear ye one another's burdens." "In honor preferring one another." "Honor all men." What a mighty means of usefulness is courtesy. The lack of

A Camp-Meeting on Mount Lebanon

AS a place of refuge from the fierce heats of summer, Mount Lebanon is such a boon to Syria as are the Catskills or Adirondacks to New York. Especially are the low-lying seaboard towns of Beyrout, Tyre and Joppa dependent on the health-giving breezes of the Lebanon. People from all parts of Palestine, and many even from Egypt, come summer here. There are, however, strangely enough, very few places that profess to be summer resorts, but among them, Brumana, Beil Merai, Bawfar and Ain Zehalta, may be reckoned best. People who do not find a refuge in these places, where hotels and provision for visitors are to be had, bring tents or booths and camp wherever fancy leads them. Many beautiful sites are everywhere available, in full view of the serene and azure waters of the Mediterranean on the west, and the glistening everlasting snows of Sumin on the east. As our own home is a stone mansion in the village of Shweir, three thousand feet above sea level, we ordinarily need no change; but two of our children, not recovering quickly from fever, the doctor recommended that we should camp out for their benefit. So we set our brains to work on the problem of outdoor accommodation. The hills were certainly roomy enough and they a spacious pavilion. Some Beyrout friends had settled the problem for themselves and had already erected a pine-arbor near a little spring at the foot of a knoll, and wrongly recommended us to follow their example. So we ordered a booth to be made, after the fashion of the tabernacles the Israelites were wont to erect on the occasion of their great Feast of Tabernacles. A piece of ground twelve feet square was levelled and a framework erected, resembling a large cage, the walls and roof of which were composed of pine branches. As soon as it was completed we sent up a load of beds, mats and other necessities with the muleteer, under the direction of Dr. Howie and the four children, my "help" and I electing to tarry behind and conclude certain little necessary tasks preparatory to the closing of the house. The sun had set when we started for our new abode. Up the mountain we hiked, our hands full of small furnishings. On the top of the hill, shut off from the village behind us, the calm, that seemed to have settled down on all the land and sea, filled us with a wonderful sense of repose. Although the sun had disappeared below the horizon some minutes before we came in view of the sea, the sky just above the water line was a marvelous study in color. All the crimsons and yellows blending beautifully up into the blue, made the firmament appear like a huge tent fringed with all the colors of the rainbow and surmounted by the brilliant evening star, which hung overhead like a jewel in solitary splendor in a setting of deepest blue. Groups of pines stood out in the foreground against the softly changing tints of the mellow usually appeared when we saw it under daylight conditions. Far below between us and the Mediterranean was another broad white sea, meeting mountains and filling gullies, changing constantly, as it were, a most familiar landscape into a strange country.

We looked, and looked again, in the gathering twilight, and at last realized that the "white sea" was the "clouds." Poetic moods underwent a change when, on arriving in camp, we found, instead of mats put down and beds arranged, everything dumped on the ground in front of the booth and the pioneers "waiting for mamma." The atmosphere here is so clear that sound carries to almost inconceivable distances and in the distance can be seen with a distinctness almost incredible. We can readily distinguish the breakers on the shore ten miles distant as the crow flies. The salubrity of the air is astonishing, and improvement in our little ones was manifest from the first day. We are told that it is "impossible to catch cold up here."

Our principal line of business was, of course, our village; a muleteer going twice a week to Beyrout (twenty miles distant) bringing some things. But for the "foreign friends" already mentioned, there was another family with a booth a few yards to our right.

Since we found ourselves beyond the reach of church influences, we determined to have a church of our own. Miss Canada Howie was accordingly despatched to summon every member of our little colony to service in the "saloon," as we call a certain open booth, consisting of four posts supporting a pine roof. At the appointed time we had a good congregation. The services were conducted by my husband, Rev. Ghosn-al-Howie. Our singing was accompanied by music on a "stringed instrument" called "kanun." Sunday is regarded in this country as more or less simply a holiday, and many people drive to Marharta (our camping ground) from Bekfayia and other places to picnic in the neighboring grove and drink the waters of Ain-el-Bistan (the fountain of the gardens); people from our own village patronize the gardens also, and these always "come a step further," to see how we are getting on. It happened on our first Sunday that we were literally thronged with visitors, who were accommodated with seats of heather and wild lavender in "Pine Hall." There is opportunity here for good camp-meeting work—for an "Ocean Grove" or a "Northfield" on sacred, historic Mt. Lebanon.

sky. Although the firmament above was clear, we soon began to notice that the landscape of mountains and ravines between us and the sea was not as it

It brings to many a dead failure, while before those who possess it in large quantity all the doors of opportunity are open. You can tell that urbanity does not come from study of books of etiquette, although such books have their use, but from a mind full of thoughtfulness for others and a heart in sympathy with the conditions of others. If those conditions be prosperous, a gladness for the success; or if the conditions be depressing, a sorrow for the unfavorable circumstances. Ah! this world needs lighting up. To those of us who are prosperous, it is no credit that we are in a state of good cheer; but in the lives of ninety-nine out of a hundred there is a pathetic side, a taking off, a deficit, an anxiety, a trouble. By a genial look, by a kind word, by a helpful action we may lift a little the burden and partly clear the way for the stumbling foot. O, what a glorious art it is to say the right word in the right way at the right time!

How reprehensible the behavior of those who pride themselves on the opposite quality and have a genius for saying disagreeable things, using sarcasm and retort not for lawful purposes, but to sting and humiliate and hurt. "Didn't I take him down?" "Didn't I make him wince?" That is the spirit of the devil, while the opposite is the spirit of Christ.

Many years ago two men entered the largest locomotive workshops in Philadelphia. They were treated in a very indifferent way, and were allowed to depart without any show of courtesy. They went into other shops, and no especial attention was given them. After a while the two men entered a smaller shop, and the overseer took great pains in showing them everything, and how they wrought and on what plan the shops were run. The two visitors were agents of the Czar of Russia, and those shops were transferred to St. Petersburg, and that polite man that bestowed such attention was called to build the locomotives for all the railroads of Russia, and had fortune after fortune roll in upon him. Courtesy is a mighty force in temporal things as well as in spiritual things.

Let us start each year, each month, each day with the question, What can I do to make others happy? On our way to office or store or shop or rail-train, let us be alert for heaven-descended opportunities. There is a man perplexed about how to pay his notes in the bank: tell

The time must come when the world will acknowledge international courtesy. Now courtesy between nations is chiefly made of rhetorical greeting, but as soon as there is a difference of interest their ministers plenipotentiary are called home, and the guns of the forts are put in position and the army and navy get ready. Why not a courtesy between nations that will defer to each other, and surrender a little rather than have prolonged acrimony, ending in great slaughter? Room for all nations of the earth and all styles of government. What the world wants is less armament and more courtesy; less of the spirit of destruction and more of the spirit of amity. This century has opened with too many armies in the field and too many men-of-war on the ocean. Before the century closes may the last cavalry horse be hitched to the plough, and the last warship become a merchantman.

But we are not in official position, and therefore must leave to others the cause of international amity. What we want to cultivate is good will to those with whom we come in contact day by day. May we all be charged and surcharged with that courtesy. We may strengthen this grace by coming to a higher appreciation of what a man is, of what a woman is. We cannot expect perfection, but in almost everyone there is something good and worthy of courtesy. If they are clear down they are trying to rise. If they have gone astray, they want to get back. He is an immortal being whom you are confronting; he is a being made in the image of God; he will outlive the planetary system; he will live as long as the Almighty lives. Started, he will never stop. Your Christian courtesy may be his eternal rescue. To the young let me say, sow courtesy and you will reap courtesy; sow hostilities and you will reap hostilities. Get your heart so right that it will make the tones of your voice persuasive, and your salutations on the street, and your greetings at the door of home and church and hall a blessing to all, and the kindly influences you throw upon them will rebound upon your own heart and life. While you are making them happier, you will make yourself happier.

If others lack courtesy, that is no reason why you should lack it. Respond to rudeness by utmost affability. Because some one else is a boor is no reason why you should be a boor. But how few show urbanity when badly treated! Human nature says, "An eye for an eye, a tooth for a tooth, retort for retort, slander for slander, maltreatment for maltreatment." But there have been those you and I have known who amid assault and caricature and injustice have maintained the loveliness of blossom-week in springtime. Nothing but divine grace in the heart can keep such equilibrium. That is not human nature until it is transformed by supernatural influences. To put it on the lowest ground, you cannot afford to be revengeful and malignant. Hatred and high indignation are stages of unhealth. They enlarge the spleen; they weaken the nerves; they attack the brain. Rage in a man is one form of apoplexy. Every time you get mad you damage your body and mind and soul, and you have not such a surplus of vigor and energy that you can afford to sacrifice them.

So I applaud Christian courtesy. I would put it upon the throne of every heart in all the world. The beauty of it is that you may extend it to others, and have just as much of it—yea, more of it—left in your own heart and life. It is like the miracle of the loaves and fishes, which, by being divided, were multiplied, until twelve baskets were filled with the remnants. It is like a torch with which fifty lamps may be lighted, and yet the torch remain as bright as before.

But this grace will not come to its coronal until it reaches the heavenly sphere. What a world that must be where selfishness and jealousy and pride and acerbities of temper have never entered, and never will enter! No struggle for precedence. But all the inhabitants happy, and rejoicing in the happiness of others. If I never get to any other delightful place, I want to get to that place. What a realm to live in forever! All worshipping the same God; all saved by the same Christ; all experiencing the same emotions; all ascending the same heights of love and exaltation; all celebrating the victories. Courtesy there easy, because there will be no faults to overlook, no apologies to make, no mistakes to correct, no disagreeableness to overcome, no wrongs to right. In all the ages to come not a fraction or a subterfuge. A perfect soul in a perfect heaven. In that realm, world without end, it will never be necessary to repeat the words of my text, words that now need oft repetition: "Be courteous."

A GOSPEL TOUR AROUND THE GLOBE

Rev. R. A. Torrey and the Singing Evangelist, Charles Alexander, Set Out on a Remarkable Journey

OVER a year ago, Professor R. A. Torrey, the principal of the Moody Bible Institute, Chicago, received an invitation from the chairman of the Australasian Evangelical Alliance, to undertake a spiritual campaign under the auspices of that organization. This invitation was, to some extent, the renewal of a call to the late evangelist Dwight L. Moody, three years ago, from a very large number of Christian workers in Australia, but which it was then impossible to accept.

Professor Torrey regards the renewed invitation as a missionary call, and his acceptance is both the fulfillment of a sacred duty and the gratification of a long cherished desire to make a missionary tour of the globe, in connection with the great work of which Dwight L. Moody was the founder. Dr. and Mrs. Torrey sailed from San Francisco the last week in December, expecting to reach Yokohama about the middle of January. A short stay will be made in Japan, where it is expected Professor Torrey will visit some of the leading missions. China will be reached in February, and a month devoted to visiting mission stations in the interior, and to participation in spiritual work generally. On March 16 they will sail for Australia. Three months or more will be spent in that country and New Zealand. It is expected that Professor Torrey will hold Bible Institutes of three or four weeks' duration at several of the larger Australian centres, giving the same kind of instruction in Bible doctrine and practical Christian work that is given at the Moody Institute in Chicago.

In September, the travelers, according to present plans, will be in India. Next the Holy Land will be visited, and then will begin the return journey. In December next they will be in Great Britain, and, if God wills, both will be back in Chicago early in January 1903.

Professor Torrey has always been extremely popular with the trustees and students at the Moody Institute. He has exerted a remarkable influence over the students, and there are hundreds who feel that he has been the means of directing them to careers of honor and usefulness in God's service. A few days before his departure, a crowded farewell meeting was held in the Moody Church, at which Mr. A. P. Fitt presided. Mr. T. H. Revell, Vice-President of the Board of Trustees, spoke on behalf of the Institute and its present and former students, bidding Dr. Torrey God-speed on his long journey. Mr. W. R. Newell also made an address. Chairman Fitt spoke of President Torrey's larger ministry through his writings, which have been translated into many foreign languages. Mr. W. R. Moody, who was unable to attend, sent a telegram of cheer and farewell, in which he paid high tribute to Dr. Torrey, and spoke of his great work at Northfield and Mount Hermon. The Rev. G. H. Williams, representing the Congregational Ministers Union of Chicago, spoke in behalf of the church at large. He related some interesting reminiscences of the late Mr. Moody. He recalled the selection of Dr. Torrey, by Mr. Moody, twelve years ago, upon his recommendation, as Superintendent of the Chicago Institute, a choice which had never been regretted. Amid all the changes elsewhere Dr. Torrey had clung to the old Gospel truths, and the blessing of God had rested upon his labors.

Professor Torrey replied to all these tributes in a short address, in the course of which he said:—

I do not think there has been a Sunday, or in fact a day in the week, in all these eight years that some soul has not been born again in this building. Is it not glorious? But it is nothing to what ought to have been done, and if you and I had been as faithful as we ought to have been in personal work—visitation in the home of the rich and the poor, visitation in the hotel and boarding-houses, visitation in the saloons if you and I had been as faithful as we ought to have been, instead of thousands there would have been tens of thousands.

He went abroad backed up by the prayers of 3,000 souls, and a man so fortified bound to accomplish something for God. While absent he desired their prayers every day. He believed the time had come for God to bless the Word in a general revival of religion throughout the world, and all should have a share in it. The new year should be a great year of prayer and soul winning.

Before the departure of Dr. and Mrs. Torrey they were presented with some valuable gifts and received many other tokens of kindness. Professor Torrey was born at Hoboken, N. J., in 1856, and was graduated at Yale in 1878. His connection with Mr. Moody dates from that year. He was ordained to a Congregational pastorate at Garrettsville, O., in 1878, and afterward, in 1883, became pastor of the Open Door Church in Minneapolis, and three years later Superintendent of the City Mission there. In 1889 he was appointed Superintendent of the Moody Institute in Chicago, and assumed the pastoral charge of the Chicago Avenue Church in 1894. He is in the prime of life, a vigorous and tireless spiritual worker, and may be truthfully described as one who is dominated by "the divine passion" for soul-winning, his whole life being consecrated to that object. On his long tour abroad he is accompanied by Mr. Charles Alexander, the well-known gospel singer, whose power and charm as a soloist at religious gatherings have led him to be compared to Bliss, Phillips, and Sankey. Mr. Alexander was trained at the Moody Institute, and has now been in active Christian work about seven years, being associated during the greater part of that time with evangelist M. B. Williams, in revivals in Iowa, Kansas and other western states. He has had great success as an organizer and leader of large choirs, and his glorious gift of song has been made instrumental in bringing many into the Kingdom.

Answered Prayers

Mrs. P. C. Parkinson, Watertown, N. Y., writes:

I have been a reader of your paper and "Answered Prayers." God has answered my prayer. Please sign my name in full.

M. E. V., Baltimore, Md., writes:

For ten years I have been a widow, with three daughters to care for, and not only has the dear Lord been the God of the widow and the father of the fatherless, answering my prayers for myself and my own, but he has answered my special prayers for others many times in a most wonderful manner.

S. E. R., Greenfield, Ia., writes:

I wish to state in your columns that God has answered many prayers for me. One that I asked, for the glory of God's name, was that our little church might be blessed, and a minister found to supply us every Sabbath, till our own pastor was recovered from his sickness and able to come again. My petition was heard.

A. M. H., Youngstown, O., writes:

A recent answer to earnest prayer came in the form of a letter from a very dear friend from whom I had not heard for eight months, and I feel very grateful to God for this, and hope my acknowledgment may help some others troubled as I was. It was the "Answered Prayer" column which encouraged me to pray.

M. H., Brunswick, Ga., writes:

Twelve months ago a dark cloud overshadowed our home, but I prayed as I never had before, that God would help us, and overrule everything for our good. We suffered much, but I never doubted that God had heard me, and now sorrow has been turned to joy, and my prayer has been answered just as I wished.

S. A. F., Hamilton, N. Y., writes:

This has been a year of wonderful manifestations of God's help in many unexpected ways. When my heart yearned to do some work for the Master and ill-health prevented, he brought to pass the very things that needed to be done, and the work was accomplished "not by might, nor by power, but by my Spirit," saith the Lord. He has given much more than I asked or even thought could be. So, often when the way seems hopeless, he gives me some "glad and sweet surprise," to show me he is with me, to help, to strengthen, to encourage me in my work.

Called Higher

Mrs. E. A. Dinehart, Jamestown, N. Dak., writes: "I feel as though I must write a few words to inform you of the death of my dear old father, Robert Cowley, who for so many years has been a devoted reader of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. He had read your paper for so long, and talked so much about it and Dr. Talmage that the paper seemed more like a dear friend than anything else. Father was eighty-nine years and nine months and four days old when God called him home."

"I have been a reader of your paper since 1893," writes Mrs. W. J. Porter, Corso, Mo., "though not a subscriber. My dear mother, Mrs. M. A. Huntsman was. But she has gone to receive the reward of the righteous. After a long life of useful service—she was eighty-seven—she went peacefully to rest—like a tired child on its mother's breast. For over sixty years she had lived in one community, and was much beloved by a large circle of friends and acquaintances. When only fourteen, she had given her heart to God and joined his Church on earth. She grew in faith and good works, being strong to do and suffer for the Master. She was sympathetic, attentive to the sick, helpful in counsel. All who came in touch with her life were made better thereby. She is missed by many."

Mrs. Carrie Locker, Birmingham, Ky., writes: "I want some mention made of my little boy's passing away to 'The Better Land' in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, because he loved it so much. He used to be so fond of looking at the pretty pictures in it; and he particularly liked to see the portrait of Dr. Talmage, for whom he knew he was named. His papa named him Thomas De Witt, because we liked Dr. Talmage's sermons and THE CHRISTIAN HERALD so well. We prayed God he might grow up to do great good in the world, but it pleased Our Father to call the child to heaven. We thank him for lending his treasure to us. He gave us this bright, brown-eyed boy, July 16, 1898, to become the light and joy of our home with his sunny smiles and pretty ways and lisping words; and Nov. 24, 1900, summoned our baby to the Heavenly Mansion, there to be our angel, awaiting our coming."

In the death of Mrs. Maria Schomp, another member of the great CHRISTIAN HERALD family has passed away. She died September 22, at her home, in Centerville, N. J., aged eighty-nine years. She had been for many years an appreciative subscriber to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, reading it regularly herself from cover to cover, and then sending it to friends; she delighted, too, in sending the paper to "shut-ins." Her faith in God was unbounded. After the death of her husband, about three years ago, she lived, by her own preference, alone in her home, unafraid of harm, and confident of the Master's protection. Until within a few days of her triumphant death, she performed all her household work with neatness and dispatch. She early learned to love and serve the Lord; she was a charter member of the Methodist Church in the village where she lived. One son and three daughters survive her.

Mayor Seth Low, and the Campaign Against Vice in New York -- A Triumph for Purity

But it is perhaps more as the sturdy, successful Christian merchant, and the upright, honest and fearless citizen, that the people of New York love and respect Seth Low, than as the distinguished head of a university and the man honored by many colleges. His choice as the leader of the popular movement in the recent mayoralty campaign was a tribute to his personal character, rather than to his scholarly qualities. He was selected as the type of a practical type of the conscientious public servant—a man in whose hands the affairs of the great municipality would not suffer. As a preliminary to entering the contest, he sold outright his stock interests in various corporations, in order that, as Mayor, he might be free to act for the city's best interests.

COLUMBIA COLLEGE, NEW YORK

interests in dealing with corporations generally, and that there might be no ground for a charge of bias. All parties—and especially the best elements in those parties—knew that Seth Low's administration would bring to New York relief from many evils and abuses that were making the city's name an international synonym for vice and corruption. Gamblers uncontrolled; the vile "cadet" system unchecked; the lack of public schools; the awful growth of the social evil: fraud and wholesale defalcation in official circles, high and low; a degraded local civil service; unclean streets; the saloons rampant; a demoralized police—these and a thousand other abuses had combined to produce local conditions that were well nigh intolerable. The campaign that followed the popular revolt against misrule has attracted attention on both sides of the Atlantic, and even the leading journals of Europe unite in regarding the result as a signal triumph for public morals.

I am about to return to Jerusalem. I could do more for the lepers if I had the means. If any people in the world need the comfort of the Gospel and the ministry of Christian kindness, it is they. Letters from any one interested in this work will be answered if addressed to me at the Sherman street, Passaic, N. J.

The Old Gospel Light-House

DURING the year just closed, the Bowery Mission has rounded the most remarkable twelvemonths of rescue work in its entire history. In the twenty-two years since it was founded as a shelter and Gospel refuge for the homeless men and boys of the great metropolis, it has never had so many destitute and forlorn ones besieging its doors as during 1901. In the Mission Hall 60,000 have assembled during the year, to hear the divine message of invitation and consolation, and its converts in that time are numbered by hundreds. Some of the scenes enacted at these gatherings, and many of the stories of moral shipwreck and bitter repentance, would awaken sympathy in the hardest heart. All ages, from young manhood to gray hairs, are represented there, but all alike have "sown the wind, and reaped the whirlwind." And the old Mission, like the stanch life-boat on the waves of the stormy sea, reaches out to the poor, hapless souls, struggling on to doom, and with hands of helpfulness and love, brings them back to safety and new hope.

It is characteristic of the work of the Bowery Mission, that it knows no distinction of age, nationality, creed, or previous condition. It only knows that these poor fellow-beings are struggling in the rapids, and its sole aim is to reach them ere it is altogether too late. It may be some father who has gone wrong, forgetting home, wife and children in his sin; or some poor lad, misled by evil companions, who has been suddenly whelmed in the vicious vortex of the wicked city,— "somebody's boy," from a pure, country home in a far-off State, whose praying mother is wondering why her son is silent so long, little knowing of his danger. Perhaps it is some one happily saved from a prison, or even rescued on the brink of suicide. Such cases are all too common. These despairing ones, once brought within the warm shelter of the Mission and their immediate wants assuaged, are led to Him who knows and sympathizes with all our infirmities, and whose days here on earth were largely spent in succoring the helpless, feeding the hungry, and lifting up fallen nature.

This, it may be said, is the simplest and most elementary form of Christianity. Yet it is the only kind that can be applied in such conditions. Sympathy and kindness have a potential influence on the human heart. Our practical sympathy with the sufferers in India and China was made the means, under divine blessing, of bringing multitudes to Christ; and so, here, within our own gates, our sympathy and kindness to these fallen men and youths of the Bowery have already been instrumental in bringing many into the Christian life. Let us thank God for the souls that have had their rebirth in the old Bowery Mission!

We wish every reader of the great CHRISTIAN HERALD family to have a share in this grand rescue and soul-winning work. They have done noble service for Christ and humanity in many fields, but in none more needy or deserving than this. We invite them now to make a united movement to extend the work of the Bowery Mission. If every reader, having the cause of these poor, homeless wanderers at heart, would send us his or her name and address, with a pledge of one dollar a year and no more, a glorious impulse would be given to the Mission's activities. Will you, dear reader, set up a lamp on the old Gospel Light-house? Your consecrated dollar will do it. Will you raise a beacon that may guide to safety and happiness some poor storm-battered, sin-sick fellow-being? Here is your opportunity for such service. Would you win a soul from the very depths? That is precisely what the spiritual function of the Bowery Mission is, and you are asked to help it.

Send in your name and your pledge for the new year—one dollar and no more—and let us enroll you among the Bowery Mission's patrons. Such a gift, small though it may seem, may be productive of the richest blessing of the year.

Guarded Graves

IN various parts of the land, it is found necessary to have armed sentinels at sepulchres. Whether a man have lived a life good or bad, the disturbance of his dust is an atrocity for which no imaginable punishment seems sufficient, and by severer laws than any yet enacted, and by quickest spring of arrest let the business of the resurrectionist be made perilous. Alas! for the wickedness abroad in all directions. Is it not almost time for this world to cry out for God? It has swung off from him, and will be no better until it has swung back. I am hoping that some mighty regenerative force may move upon the nations. Why not this year? God could, if he would, in one day shake the two hemispheres of their abominations, and lift them into the paradisaic. Perhaps he may; perhaps he may not. But I am sure that you and I can do a little toward hastening the consummation, by prayer, by holiness of life, by cheering others, who in turn will cheer us. The work will be accelerated, and the day roll on when we shall all be millionaires, not with the riches that we may have to drop at one stroke of apoplexy, but with the eternal dividends that God will declare to those who have been faithful unto death. And though our graves should be so humble that they will never tempt a resurrectionist, our heavenly mansion will be so bright that God and angels and the spirits of just men made perfect will not be ashamed to be our perpetual guests. Oh, the billowy bloom of that hillside! Oh, the warm and aromatic breath of that summer!

Medical Heroics

SEVERAL of our American cities are under a scourge. Hundreds have died, and all Canada and the United States have been threatened with loathsome, eruptive disease, simply because a class of ignorant and superstitious people have refused vaccination. At such a time, those who decline this preventive deserve expatriation or imprisonment. The law ought not to allow the prejudices of one class of people to endanger the lives of all other classes. The reason that this disease has not already prostrated our American cities is because the merciful discovery of Dr. Edward Jenner, an English physician, has been so generally applied to our people. What that good doctor endured in order to project that protecting power upon the attention of the world is not appreciated. After making most satisfactory experiments, and being sure he was right, he came to London in 1798, and met the most outrageous persecution from some of his own profession, and from the population in general. Ministers preached from their pulpits against vaccination, pronouncing it diabolical, and by most people it was denounced as bestializing.

The learned Dr. Pearson united with the eminent Dr. Woodville in an attempt to bring the merciful art into disrepute by inoculation of patients before the vaccination had time to take sufficient hold. Small wits caricatured Edward Jenner as riding in a great procession on the back of a cow, and grave men expressed it as their opinion that all the diseases of the brute creation would be transplanted into the human family; and they gave instances where they said actually horns had come out on the foreheads of innocent persons, and people had begun to chew the cud. But the discoverer felt he had a mission of rescue for the world, and, nothing daunted, he went right on until the majority of London practitioners issued an applauding manifesto, and the crowned heads of Europe favorably recognized vaccination. Then Parliament voted $50,000 by way of remuneration for his expenses and by way of reward. Afterwards an additional $100,000 was voted him, and India sent him a present of $35,000. But by that payment of $185,000 the world could not discharge its obligation to that hero of the healing art. It is estimated that this one physician saved in fifty years more lives than all the battles of any one century destroyed. No wonder that on Trafalgar Square, London, a statue was erected to perpetuate his name; but he was the world's benefactor and the health of Christendom is his monument. Let us all bless his memory for the arrest of this awful contagion, which appeared in the world in 1661, and went out to blast nations for nine hundred years, opposed by no force capable of grappling it. Thank God for the persistence and faith and courage and victory of the English physician! If, at this late date, there are any so stupid as not to accept this preventive influence against this curse of nations, let us in all cities and towns and neighborhoods, have compulsory vaccination and revaccination.

January Bills

AMONG the storms of winter, and especially a storm that seldom fails to visit every locality about the first of January—is a shower of bills. How they come in—these great snowflakes—and they stick and stare at you until they are paid, and stick and stare at you when they are paid. Among the multitude of resolutions formed for the new year about to open, there is no better one than a resolve to pay as you go. It seems passing strange that the payment of debts should be inculcated upon professing Christians, and yet is there any evil habit to which Christian men are more addicted than that of incurring debts which they cannot discharge at maturity? And the causes of this condition of things are many and multifarious. Sometimes it is the result of a weak desire to live in a style beyond one's means. Oftentimes it is the result of thoughtlessness or a general unwillingness to systematize one's expenditures.

Often it proceeds from a free-heartedness and desire to do for others, especially for the family, more than one's circumstances admit; and not infrequently it is owing to a spirit of extravagance which is a legitimate inheritance from father to son. But whatever the cause may be, as a general rule debt can be avoided and much unhappiness saved. To do this, above all firmly resolve to live within your means, however limited they may be; make no promises which you have not a reasonable certainty of keeping; be firm in applying whatever money you may have on hand to the liquidation of some debt in whole or in part, and above all avoid, so far as possible, contracting a future obligation where with to pay a present one.

And in your purchases, when you want that for which you cannot pay at the time, wait until you can, before procuring it, and when you get it, you will enjoy it all the more for the sacrifice which it has cost. There is a true nobility in denying yourself that which you cannot afford, which will increase your own self-respect, and raise you in the estimation of your friends. "Do you see this addition which I have just put up?" said a friend in our hearing not long ago. "I was offered a loan on my house, but no, I thought I would wait. I did wait. Things which I wanted I denied myself. Finally I accumulated sufficient to pay for my improvements. They cost more than the carpenter's and mason's bills; they cost a spirit of sacrifice; and don't you suppose I enjoy it all the more for this?" And he was right.

Nor do we forget that there are some who cannot pay. There are those who, unfortunate in business, simply cannot meet their obligations. They have bought on a falling market; their good name is unscathed, though their credit has been dishonored by those who had engaged to protect it. Parties owing them have failed to pay them, and bankruptcy stares them in the face. But for all that—and you can find such people everywhere—you do not doubt them, you are drawn to them in their misfortune as you never were in prosperity. You are only too glad to do all in your power to help them, and in so doing discharge only a simple Christian duty. It is not of such that we speak.

Debt: there is no worse demoralizer of character. The sad records of defaulting, embezzling and dishonest failures which we meet with so constantly in the daily press are often, indeed most frequently, the result of the demoralization of debt, and consequent desperate efforts at extrication. The financial props have given way. The little debt, which at first was as small as a grain of mustard-seed, like the rolling snowball has gathered weight and multiplied itself a thousand. And still it grows, and like the fabulous hydra which Hercules was sent to kill, you no sooner strike off one head than two shoot up in its place. The struggle is severe, but in the end decisive; either confession is made of a hopeless bankruptcy, which might and should have been avoided, or integrity is sacrificed to the temptation of the moment. Debt ruins as many households, and destroys as many fine characters as rum; it is the devil's mortgage on the soul, and he is always ready to foreclose. Pay your grocer; pay your pew bills; pay your minister. Be sure you are indebted for nothing but love, and even that be sure you pay in kind.

THE DAY NURSERIES OF NEW YORK

Where the Babes of Poor, Toiling Mothers are Lovingly Tended and Sheltered

PLEATH, ma'am, can I take it home?" It was a little "tot" of four years that spoke, as her blue eyes looked up with wistful pleading into the kindly face of Miss Abbott, Matron at the Sunnyside Day Nursery, 231 East 104th street, New York.

"Take what home, Annie?" asked the matron, wondering what the little girl meant. "The bed, ma'am. I hav'n't got any at home," was the answer, as the child gazed longingly at the snow-white crib, and then at the matron. What a world of pathos there was in the request of this little one, hardly out of babyhood, yet doomed to be a prisoner of poverty in some East Side slum of New York! She had spent the day in the bright and sunny nursery, where she had had enough to eat, clean clothes, and a delightful nap in a clean, comfortable crib. Now, evening was coming, and she must return to the cold, bare tenement home. In that poor dwelling an invalid father felt his own sad burden lightened by the thought that his little darling was cared for in the daytime at least, and did not have to droop in the close quarters to which illness condemned him, or to shiver in the streets, "making believe to play," while the brave, toiling mother was out, trying to earn enough money for rent and scanty food by scrubbing floors. Annie's case and her plea are typical ones.

The Day Nurseries of New York are doing Christ's own work for those of whom he said: "And whoso shall receive one such little child in my name, receiveth me." All nationalities are represented in them—that is, all that go to make up cosmopolitan New York. At one little table in the Silver Cross Nursery on East 117th street, when THE CHRISTIAN HERALD representative called, were seated seven children, and the group included two of American, one of Irish descent, one Hungarian, one Italian, one German, and one Jew, who might have been of either English or German origin. This assembly of races at one table was entirely accidental. The little ones didn't seem to care about the difference—if, indeed, they knew any. They had not been educated to know that; according to the logic of history, they ought to have regarded each other as hereditary enemies and gone to fighting and scratching—probably, however, they might have indulged in some sort of struggle, if left out on the noisome streets or in the wretched garrets they call home. And the mothers! What an outpouring of mother-love there is when they come in the evening to take the children home! Their own clothes may be scanty and threadbare; their cheeks pale with want, and their hands red and roughened by the toil of the day, but there is a look of gladness and gratitude in their eyes that it does one good to see, as they clasp their little ones to their bosoms and take them away for the night. And the little ones, too, are glad to see "mother," even though they have been happy and well fed at the Nursery, and though they know that mother's home is not like that charming place. She is mother, and that means all to them; and they run to her arms, and receive with rapture the kiss from her pinched and wasted lips, and cling to her as lovingly as if she were the only being on earth for them. In most of the Nurseries a warm cup of tea awaits this mother coming from work for her child; and she is greeted with pleasant and encouraging words by the kind-hearted matrons. Help is also given, in cases of dire distress, to the families of little wards at the Sunnyside Nursery, of which Mrs. Whitelaw Reid is president, over four thousand bottles of prepared milk were disposed of to mothers during the past year at one cent a bottle. Great care is taken in all the Day Nurseries to prevent the spread of diseases, and the generally healthy appearance of children who have been inmates for any length of time proves that these precautions are effective.

Snow was falling when THE CHRISTIAN HERALD representative called at the Jewell Day Nursery, No. 20 Macdougall street, the heart of the lower West Side. Eager faces were pressed against the panes, and bright eyes were dancing as they watched the snowflakes. This nursery was founded by Mrs. Jewell, of the famous Connecticut Governor's family, in memory of a beloved child gone before her to the Better Land. How often and how sweetly the flower of charity springs from the grave of a dear one, watered by the tears of love! The little ones at the "Jewell" seemed happy indeed. Their eyes and thoughts were on the snow, but some of the little ears were evidently open to what was being one day she saw a child run out of a tenement, and, attempting to cross the street, fall directly in front of heavy truck, which passed over the little one's hip. Miss Curry picked up the stricken child with her tender hands, and carried it to its tenement home, where, for some time, she nursed the little unfortunate day and night. With fourteen dollars—all the money she had—she started a place of refuge for helpless waifs, and struggled along, seeing many dark days, but never losing faith in God's providence. Her first substantial help came in a check for $200, raised at a lawn party by a little girl, whose heart had been touched by the work. This little girl started meetings, in the homes of her little friends, and prominent men and women became interested. Now the Nursery is better fitted up than ever for the task to which Miss Curry has devoted her life. "A little child shall lead them."

In the heart of the dense East Side, on Essex street, around the corner from the Protestant Episcopal Pro-cathedral, the "Bishop's church in the slums," is the Community House, where babies in the neighborhood are cared for while their mothers are working. A lady doctor was tending a little boy's broken arm when THE CHRISTIAN HERALD's representative called. The work could not have been done more tenderly, if the sufferer had been the son of a millionaire.

The Day Nurseries of New York depend on the gifts of the charitable, in the broadest meaning of that word, with one exception—the Day Nursery of Grace Church Parish. Passers-by on Broadway have noticed, spring and fall, on pleasant days, groups of children playing on the grounds of the Grace Church rectory. These are the little ones of the Day Nursery, which, founded by our former Vice-President, Levi P. Morton, in memory of his first wife, is supported by the voluntary contributions of the members of this wealthy parish. In every respect it is a model nursery. There is no sign of extravagance or luxury, but every appointment is of the best, and it is safe to say that the richest children in New York do not have better care than these children of poor mothers, most of whom are at work all day. The Deaconess, who showed THE CHRISTIAN HERALD representative through the Nursery, and to whom the children clung as if she were their real mother, stated the interesting fact, that of nine original beneficiaries of the Nursery, which was founded twenty-four years ago, all were known to be doing well, and that only two children of former inmates of the Nursery were among its present inmates. These facts the Deaconess regarded as a sufficient answer to the charge sometimes brought said around them. "This little boy," Miss Kerr, the matron said, "has an Irish father and an Italian mother." The child, bright and good-looking, turned quickly, and murmured something in his pretty patois. "He is trying to tell," said Miss Kerr, smiling, "that he has a mother and a grandmother,—and good people they are, too!" The little ones here seemed to be on the best of terms with a colored cook named Mary, of the real, good-natured southern type, who appeared to take genuine joy in making them happy.

It is a sad fact that many of these children have nothing to eat except what they get at the Nurseries; not because their mothers neglect them, but because, suffering and hungry themselves, they have nothing to give their children. And it is a pitiful sight, during a spell of severe cold, to see the children come to the Nurseries in clothing, which, though clean, as a rule, is often too thin to keep them warm, their heavy eyes bearing evidence that they had passed sleepless nights for lack of warm covering. The afternoon nap in comfortable cribs is an incalculable blessing to such as these. It is the rule in the Day Nurseries not only to examine the children each morning to see if they are well enough to mingle with others, but also to discover if their clothing is clean, and in some cases to disinfect it, giving the child nursery clothing for the day, and reclothing it in its own garments when it starts for home.

Miss Sara Curry, of the "Little Missionary's Day Nursery," to whom the building at No. 93 East Eighth street has recently been presented by friends who sympathize with her work, was doing what she could to help the unfortunate in the slums of New York, when that Day Nurseries tend to foster pauperism. Few other Day Nurseries are as fortunate as that of Grace Church, in being under the care of a wealthy parish, and were the hand of individual charity to be withdrawn, many hundreds of helpless babes would be deprived of the generous care which is preserving their lives, and helping their poor mothers to fight the battle of existence, so hard at the best for a lone woman with little ones to care for.

Delighted with Her Premiums

Corinne B. Mt. Lebanon, N. Y., writes: "I am delighted with the Art Portfolio; it is beautiful. Yesterday's express brought me Heaven, Home and Happiness. How you can give such returns is a mystery, not only to myself, but to friends. It is over eight years since I have taken THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, and I am more and more wedded to it."

It is hardly necessary to state that this particular, printed in time-table shape, attracted a lively interest in the congregation. It may be hoped that the Connecticut people's presentation of the dangers of intemperance may not be without its effect.

The Lesson Story

CHURCH every day in the week? Yes, twice every day was the custom of the Jewish people when they worshiped God in Jerusalem, within the gates of their magnificent Temple. "The morning and evening sacrifices" were nine o'clock in the morning, and three in the afternoon. From this came the morning and evening worship, once common in Christian homes, but to-day often crowded out wholly or in part.

It is a day in June, and three o'clock in the afternoon. Men, women, and children are flocking from every direction toward the Temple. There are eight side gates through which they can enter, but most of them prefer to go through the largest and most beautiful one of all, the front gate, which is of shining brass, and so dazzling that to behold it is almost like looking at the sun itself. The gate is so large and heavy that it takes twenty men to open or shut it. Coming towards this "Gate Beautiful" are two men, who have been seen so much in Jerusalem for the last three years, and have preached to such multitudes in the last few days, that they are well known as Peter and John, two of the apostles of Jesus. As they walk up the twelve steps which lead to the Gate Beautiful, we see them stop. Someone has spoken to them; a miserable-looking man, clothed in rags, whose feet and legs are smaller than the other parts of his body, and seem dried up and useless. Although the man is forty years old, he has never been able to walk, or even to stand. When he was a little baby, and his mother tried to teach him to walk, he could not learn, for he had no strength in his feet and ankle bones. He has long been carried to the Temple every day, but has never been taken further than the Gate Beautiful. He has been left on his steps so that he may beg a little money of the people who go out and in. Peter and John are stopping to talk to him, because he has asked them for money. They are standing still, and looking at him, and he is looking at them, wondering what they are going to do. He notices that they do not carry the usual "scrip," that is, the money-bag. Now they are saying to him, "We have no silver or gold to give you, but, better far, we will give you strength. In the name of Jesus of Nazareth, walk." Peter is taking him by the hand, and giving him courage to rise up. The man feels the strength coming into his feet and ankles, and jumps up. He can only jump at first, for he has never learned how to walk; but in a few moments he begins to walk. He walks up the steps, and through the Gate Beautiful, by the side of Peter and John, praising God as he goes. How the people wonder, who have been standing near and have seen how quickly it was done! What a joy for the poor man, even though he is still dressed in rags, to stand inside the gates at last, and join with the people in the worship of God!

Now the service is over, and we see the people turning to go to their homes. The man who had been healed stays close beside Peter and John; even holds on to their clothing for fear he will lose them in the crowd, which is increasing about them, for the people who have seen the wonderful cure have told others about it, and all want to see for themselves the man who has been healed and the men who healed him. But Peter and John do not want the people to praise them, and say, "What a wonder they have done!" When the crowd following Peter and John and the man who had been healed have passed through the Gate Beautiful and come into a part of the Temple called "Solomon's Porch," Peter begins to talk, and the people crowd still closer together to hear him. They think they are going to hear something about the beggar, but, instead, Peter tells them about Jesus, through whose "Name" and power the man was healed. They are not pleased to hear Jesus praised, and are still less pleased, yes, many are angry, when Peter tells them that they caused his death on the cross. "You killed him," said Peter, but God raised him from the dead, and he is now in heaven, and has sent us power to do this thing. "We did wrong; we did wrong," say others of the people, yes, many of them, for in that day thousands of them became the friends of Jesus, increasing the three thousand of Pentecost to five thousand in all. It was a great revival, and we may learn from this story, among many other things, how to have a revival: Let Christians go often to the place of prayer; let them be bravely, kindly helpful outside the Church; let the new converts "stand by" them and show Christ's transforming power; and let sinners repent and lead others to do the same (Acts 4: 13, 14; 3: 19).

Illustration and Application

Peter and John were going into the Temple at the hour of prayer. Peter and John, once rivals for political honors the Messiah was expected to give, were now closer than brothers. Each had a brother apostle, but Peter loved John more than his own brother Andrew; and John loved Peter more than his brother James, illustrating the fact that spiritual kinship in the blood of Christ may and should be the strongest of "blood relationships." Let us count every man a brother, but especially those who are twice-born sons of "Our Father."

Peter and John were still keeping up their habit of going twice a day to the Temple, though its very priests had killed their Friend and Lord, as if to rebuke those who make it an excuse for neglecting public worship, that the man in the pulpit or some one in the pew is not all he should be. The "meeting house" is a place to meet God; and defects in ourselves or others who gather there as worshipers, are not a good reason for failure to keep our appointment with God. Peter and John had become so spiritual they could have worshiped anywhere and any time, but they kept up, as we should, their regular habit of worshiping at stated times and places. Those who make the most of life are those who have a regular time and place for every important daily duty, whether it be feeding the body or the soul. If bad habits be counted jolting "ruts," hard to escape, let good habits be counted the secure rails, on which we swiftly and smoothly move onward.

And he took him by the right hand. How divine and human agencies worked together in the salvation of that lame man at the Beautiful Gate! We see an illustration of Providence in the seemingly chance meeting of two groups at the Temple gate, one group going to worship, another bearing a helpless beggar. If the apostles had arrived a moment earlier or the cripple a moment later, they would not have met, and an individual transformation that brought thousands into the Church would not have occurred. God was guiding both to results of which no man yet had a thought. Let us be quick to seize these unexpected opportunities, for in them rather than in something we have long planned, God may enable us to do our best work.

The story encourages "little faith." Peter looked the cripple through with his quickened eyes, and bade him, "In the Name of Jesus Christ of Nazareth, walk." The cripple should have understood that "all God's biddings are enablings," but Peter saw he had not faith enough to make the effort unaided to stand and walk for the first time with those limp feet of his, and so he "took him by the hand," while God at the same moment poured the tingling tides of strength through his ankle bones. And note here also an illustration that God often gives us in response to our prayers better things than we dared or cared to ask. The beggar asked money, and got health instead. Not alone his feet and ankle bones, but his "backbone" received strength, for he "stood by" the apostles fearlessly, even when the murderers of Christ brought them to trial. Here is an example for young converts. This lame man became the occasion of thousands being saved, by illustrating in body and soul the transforming power of Christ, and by fearless testimony at the very start, before he had even shed the rags of beggary.

"IN THE NAME OF JESUS CHRIST OF NAZARETH, RISE UP AND WALK"

Hudson Taylor, the missionary, had a talk with a young Christian who thought he ought to know more about Christ before doing any church work.

A Fruitful Young Convert "Well," said Mr. Taylor, "I have a question to ask you: When you light a candle, do you light it to make the candle more comfortable?"

"Certainly not," said the other, "but in order that it may give more light."

"When does it first become useful—when it is half burned down?"

"No, as soon as I light it."

"Very well," said the missionary promptly, "go thou and do likewise; begin at once."

But the great human fact in this story is, that we can give to others better things than silver and gold, with it or without it, if our hearts are richly stored with the graces of the Spirit. "Such as I have, give I unto thee." The man behind the message is the great thing after all. Some of the most beloved and useful preachers have few gifts but many graces. When Dr. John G. Paton, the beloved apostle of the New Hebrides, speaks to great audiences, only a few can hear him, but his looks and history are thrilling eloquence. Let us say and do noble things, but, most of all, let us be like Christ.

The Church and charity may well turn back, in thought to the Beautiful Gate, where both were without money and organization, but rich in personal helpfulness, more precious than gold and more beautiful than any temple gate. The early Christians gave themselves to the poor and we and such golden alms out of their Spirit-filled hearts as far as obedience, spiritual life, power, love, generosity, joy, worshipfulness, thankfulness, prayerfulness, brotherhood, kindness, sympathy, helpfulness, courage and peace. Whatever we have given in the recent holidays to the poor, or friends, or to the Church, we have withheld the best, if we have not given ourselves also. "The gift without the giver is bare." One has said that a thoughtless, unloving gift to God or man is dishonest. The Bible's greatest word about helping the poor, as rendered in the Revision, is: "Give to the poor those things that are within" (Luke 11: 41). He gives the noblest alms who "lends a hand" to help the poor to help themselves, as do the volunteer visitors of organized charity and the neighborly residents of social settlements, and the people of wealth and refinement who teach in city missions and many a man and woman who give themselves to mankind without a constitution and by-laws.

Note, that it was outside the Church door that these spiritual men, Peter and John, started a new revival by an act of applied Christianity and wayside helpfulness, characteristic of the new Christian Church as contrasted with the fossilized Jewish Church on the inside of the Temple. When the first Temple was dedicated by Solomon, the prayers and music and golden porches were filled and thrilled with the Shechinah cloud of God's presence. There was "a spirit in the wheels." But later, when the service had become heartless form, there is a tradition which is truth if not fact, that a voice was heard in the holy of holies, saying, "Let us depart." And so the beautiful Temple became a mere ecclesiastical machine, a fossil church. On the other side of the gate, on the day of our lesson story, a new church, with much life and little form, was beginning; its simple services, mostly in private houses being filled with God's presence; but it, too, was destined to fossilize in its magnificent temples, and a new apostle, Luther, would at one of its gates in Wittenberg, need to start the Church once more in simple fellowship and helpfulness, which is ever in peril of fossilizing anew into heartless forms. With or without temples or forms, that is the true Church where men are transformed in body and soul by the Christ-life flowing through his true disciples.

Thy love shall chant its own beatitudes
After its own life working. A child's kiss Set on thy sighing lips shall make thee glad.
A sick man helped by thee shall make thee strong.
Thou shalt be served thyself by every sense
Of service which thou renderest.
—ELIZABETH BARRETT BROWNING.

A woman's paper recently gave a true story, which should carry a suggestion to every reader. Mrs. Blank, a woman of means and culture, suddenly discovered one day that she was growing old. Her house was filled with beautiful objects, the accumulation of a lifetime.

"I have enjoyed them long enough," she said. "It is time I was done with the care of things." If I give them now to the right people, they will be useful; if they are disposed of indiscriminately when I am dead they will be of little value."

She proceeded, therefore, to give away her treasures where they were needed and would be valued. To a worker among children in the slums went a stereopticon; books to poor libraries in the country, photographs to schools. To a hospital for sick children she sent a collection of scrap-books filled with pictures which, in the course of years, she had cut from illustrated papers. Intrinsically, they were not worth much; an auctioneer would have found it difficult to get a bid for them, but how much they were to her! How helpful to the people who needed them! Such as she had she gave, and all of us can do that.

The highest type of philanthropy is that which springs from the feeling of the brotherhood, and which, therefore, rests on the self-respecting, healthy basis of mutual obligation and common effort. The best way to raise any one is to join with him in an effort whereby both you and he are raised by each helping the other. Sometimes this work may take the form of an organized effort to secure great equality of opportunity. Sometimes the best way is the oldest and simplest—that is, by trying the effect of character upon character.

Don't Be Blue

MISS SERAPHINA was in the dumps, for no particular reason, simply because she had a chronic tendency to indulge in low spirits. Even the cat was aware that Miss Seraphina was blue, and humped her back in protesting fashion, as she sat in the corner looking in vain for her mistress' notice. Miss Seraphina's sister, Molly, observing the familiar signs of a wet-blanket day, had, early in the morning, decided to pay a long-promised visit to a friend in the next village. Molly could not endure Seraphina's melancholy fits. The maid in the kitchen stayed in her own department. She, too, had lost patience with the lady who was moody and cross without reason, whenever her life did not quite suit her. Parrots are uncanny creatures, but I fancy Miss Seraphina's nephew, Tom, could have told how it was that the parrot in his cage suddenly called out vociferously: "Don't be blue! Don't be blue!" At any rate, Seraphina was very much startled. Just then, that cheery old soul, her plain-spoken Aunt Betsey appeared at the door. She said briskly: "Come over and help me quilt. Phreny!" "Oh! no, Aunty, I'm too far down," said the niece. "More shame to you! You're only lazy! And," she went on: "You're ungrateful, too! Come along!" "Don't be blue!" said the parrot; and Seraphina threw a shawl over her shoulders, picked up her thimble and her bonnet, and followed Aunt Betsey to the cozy home around the corner, where that lady lived in never-failing sunshine.

"I tell you what it is, my dear," the relentless mentor continued, as they seated themselves at the quilting-frame. "Most of us could overcome our blues by making a brave and honest effort. You are drifting into a state of cheerlessness because you do not exercise enough in the house and go out too seldom into the open air. People dread your long face and your gloomy ways. Children run away from you. What you need is to see your folly, and then make a strong fight against it."

"I do pray, Aunt Betsey," said Seraphina.

"Perhaps. But you don't mean what you say, or you'd help the Lord to answer your prayer. Prayer and pains go together! Remember your parrot's sermon, dearie, and don't be blue!"

Seraphina promised that she would try not to give up to low spirits any more than she could help, which, for her, was a step forward.

A Father's Life with His Children

In a recent issue of the Booklover's Weekly, Mr. Julian Hawthorne gives an enchanting picture of his gifted father, in the little red house at Lenox, where the happy days of the Hawthorne children were spent. Spring, summer, autumn and winter were play spells for these healthy little ones, with "father" as chief comrade and playmate. "But the great thing for us in winter was the coasting, for which the slope of our hill afforded excellent facilities. We had a sled big enough to hold my father, with us children on his back, and down we would go, whizzing over the compact snow, faster and faster, from top to bottom. Once we struck a hidden stump, and were buried out of sight in a snowdrift. After the coasting, we would come glowing in, and when our snow-besprinkled jackets and tippets had been taken off we would eat a big supper, and go happy to bed. In the morning there would be the terrible joy of sitting in the big sitz-tub, and having buckets of cold water poured over our squirming little backs in front of a roaring log fire. And then another day of glorious pleasure!"

A pretty glimpse, this, of a great author's home life. At this time, Nathaniel Hawthorne was writing his famous Wonder Book, composed of idyls from the old mythologies, and in the evenings he read the stories to his fortunate children.

—MOTHER. Do not say "Don't," so many times a day. Say "Do." Why fill your little girl's life with needless restraints.

—DOCTEUR. So far as Aunt Prudence is concerned, all Mrs. Sangster's articles in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD rest on a foundation of fact.

—MARTIN DEE. Your husband comes home tired. Remember this, and do not bother him with complaints the moment he enters the door.

—HUSBAND. Reverse the case. Would you like to see your wife always drowsy in the evening or else buried in the newspaper? Try entertaining her for a change.

THE SCHOLAR'S EVENTIDE

LITTLE MILDRED sometimes thought that she would enjoy a livelier home than the one she shared with her grandparents. Old Doctor Hethbridge was a scholar and an inventor. He would sit for hours in a brown study over maps, or compasses, or apparatus of some sort. His good wife was always busy with the simple housekeeping. Mildred had her own small occupations, and, though she did not dream it, was as necessary as the bread they ate, to the old people. Courage, Mildred! There are those who envy your sheltered life and quiet home, and you may yet gaze backward on these tranquil days, with some envy for the young person who found them so slow.

Every-day Etiquette.—II

The Duties of the Hostess

ABOUT this time, in most of the United States, there is a great deal of mourning and a very entertaining. As a result, many people live so far apart in the remoteness of distant wards or suburbs, and women are so busy anyhow, that the delightful running in and out of neighbors in country places, and the social afternoon calling of small towns, has ceased to exist. Ladies are in a manner compelled to have "days," when they stay at home to receive their friends: and once one has established a day, her acquaintances do not feel at liberty to go to her at any other time, unless they are on terms of great intimacy.

It is quite usual for a visiting card to be engraved thus: "Mrs. Walter Munroe," and in the lower left-hand corner, "Tuesdays, afternoon," or "Wednesdays till Lent," or simply "Mondays," or "Saturdays," as it may happen. Cards are rather small than large, and oblong rather than square this season. They may be engraved to suit the fancy in old English, or ordinary script, or in Roman letters, like printing.

A hostess who wishes to invite her friends for a particular occasion, may mail her visiting card to them, with, if she has a guest in her house, "To meet Mrs. ———" written on the top of the card, and "Tea at four" below. Only when one gives a very elaborate entertainment is the card engraved throughout. It may be something like this:

Mrs. Eugene Swarthout,
At Home

Wednesday, 12 o'clock to 4 o'clock, from four to six, and from eight to ten.
To meet Mr. and Mrs. Cuyler
Jones.

Such an invitation signifies a spread of some sort, salads, ices, and coffee, and a very dainty toilette on the part of the hostess, while the guests go in their best bibs and tuckers. They usually, however, wear bonnets at such an affair as this. Sometimes, but not generally, full evening dress is worn by the women: men of any pretensions to style wear evening clothes after six o'clock in the evening, when making calls, or fulfilling other social functions.

A successful hostess always makes her guests feel at home in her house. Her part is to greet every one cordially, and to see, without appearing to make an effort, that all are enjoying themselves. Some hostesses never suffer their guests to settle down into fixed groups: they move about, breaking up circles which are crystallizing, and taking pains to introduce agreeable people to one another. Whether or not you are introduced, you may always address a person who is a guest in the same house with you.

In presenting people, name the lady first, saying, "Mrs. Smith, may I present Mr. Emmons?" Do not reverse the order, except when a very young woman is to be introduced to an elderly man, or when it is a case of presenting people to a distinguished stranger or eminent personage. In receiving, a hostess manages to say a brief graceful personal word to each guest, but does not detain any one long, as she must be just and equalize her attentions.

Next week, I shall have something to say about the obligations of a hostess to a friend visiting her for a week or a month, and shall give some suggestions as to the management of a house party.

The Needle's Eye

A NEW SERIAL STORY
WRITTEN EXPRESSLY BY FLORENCE M. KINGSLEY FOR THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

KIND and hospitable as the old man was, his conscience would not allow him to keep the child if he belonged elsewhere. He, therefore, proceeded to question Immanuel still more closely, in spite of the fact that the boy was quite content with the situation as it stood.

"Can you remember which way you came, child?" asked the man anxiously. "Mother will want to see you."

The boy shook his head. "Mother's up in heaven; she sees me all the time," he said softly. "She'll be glad."

"Well, then, father will be looking for his boy; we must let him know you are safe."

"But you did find me—last night," said the child, wonderingly. "I want to stay with you loud-spoken, burly, red-faced husband, Marion Armitage seized an early opportunity of undoing her mistake by slipping away through the first narrow door which offered escape—it chanced to be pneumonia. She left behind her two sons, little fellows, with round, ruddy faces, scarce a hand's breadth apart in size.

The bereaved father, having passed through that stage of paternal indifference wherein his boys appeared to him very much in the light of a brace of healthy puppies, to be endured, fondled occasionally, but for the most part relegated to hired keepers, discovered in the course of time that the ruddy faces and stout legged, active bodies of his sons represented totally different propositions. The oldest son, Moses, who should along with his big body have inherited his father's plain, practical, hard-headed characteristics, was found to have taken after his mother. While Jonas, with his mother's small and less robust physique, quickly developed a keen instinct for money-getting and money-saving which delighted his progenitor.

When Moses Armitage, senior, slapping his broad knee with his broad palm, a comprehensive frown on his broad face, declared, "Jonas is my sort; but Mose is the sort of fellow I haven't any use for"—why, all was said.

Later, the chasm widened betwixt the three, leaving Moses Armitage with his second son and the pickle factory on the one side, and the oldest-born on the other. There had been a stormy scene in the private office before this cataclysm took place, during which the head of the house had raised his voice to such a pitch that the clerks in the outer office grinned and winked at each other over their ledgers.

"College? Bah! Travel? Stuff and nonsense! You've proved yourself an idle, wool-gathering ne'er-do-weel, not worth your salt. Now here's my last word to ye: you'll settle down to business with your brother here, or you take the half of your mother's money and go. I'll have no more of your nonsense."

Young Moses took the half of his mother's money and went. But whither, his father and brother, snug behind their big desks in the private office of the pickle factory neither knew nor cared. In the course of years marked newspapers, mailed from widely different localities, informed them of the marriage of Moses Armitage to Ruth Carlton, and of the death of one Carlton Armitage, only son of Moses Armitage, aged six years.

Jonas Armitage sat alone in the private office when he read the last-mentioned item. He was dressed in black clothes, at which he glanced with a curious expression on his thin, sallow face. "I might return the compliment," he muttered, "only I'm sure the fellow hasn't a sixpence to his name by this time. He'd kick up no end of a row, and try to break the will, like as not."

Mr. Jonas Armitage was wrong in certain of his conclusions. A large share of the maternal fortune had indeed found its way through the careless fingers of the wanderer; but in late middle life the primal desire to possess earth, rocks and trees had taken hold on him. "I will go," he said to the city real estate agent, "to the place where my money will buy the greatest number of acres." And so it was that Moses Armitage brought his wife to the weather-beaten little house on the hill-road between Turner's Crossroads and Tacitus Four Corners. They were very poor, for the land yielded little but beauty. After a time Ruth Armitage shut her tired brown eyes on the misty valley, and was laid to rest beside her six-year-old son in the desolate graveyard behind the Crossroad's church.

Moses Armitage lived on alone in the gray old house, and the silent years brought him resignation with white hairs. And after resignation, a kind of tranquil happiness, which grew apace till life's barren landscape turned to gold under calm evening skies. There was happiness in the long winter evenings when the red logs turned to silver ash in the old stone-fireplace, and the lamp cast a mellow light on pages beloved as familiar faces. There was happiness in the dark, sweet-smelling pine woods on a spring day, when the sombre aisles framed bright pictures of sky and field. There was happiness in the first faint gurgle of bluebirds singing in pink, frosty dawns. There was happiness—nay, there was ecstasy under broad apple boughs loaded with odorous bloom, in the earliest white violet pouring out its soul under vivid blue skies of May.

A stray passer-by once came upon Moses Armitage as he knelt in the grass, gazing at a clump of late dandelions, which flaunted all the bravery of spring suns in the face of winter. He went away and told of it in the bar-room of the village tavern, amid the loud empty braying of fools' laughter.

"Th' ol' fool looked like he was actooally a-prayin' to them weeds—he, he!" declared the astute observer. "He's as crazy as a loon, he is, an' ort by rights to be occ'pyin' a room to the county house, whar he'd be looked arter. His land's a-goin' plumb to waste!"

The Rev. Zenas Meek, pastor of the Methodist Church in Turner's Crossroads, once included the hermit in a round of parochial visits. He found him at work among his beehives, which stood in a long row behind the house. "Good day, my dear, impenitent friend," began the Rev. Mr. Meek, with what he plainly supposed to be an apostolic tone and gesture, tempered with charity, yet sharply spiced with godly authority, "I am on the Lord's business, an' it requires haste!"

Moses Armitage turned his ruddy face upon his visitor with a quizzical smile. "If you come too near, sir," he said gently, "you'll shortly be in haste for more reasons than one. The bees are a bit out of temper to-day, and they'll find you a shining mark."

The Rev. Meek had removed his hat, and was wiping the perspiration from his forehead with a large, damp handkerchief. "Good gracious!" he exclaimed sharply, as an indignant bee thrust its lightning lancet into a spot of undefended territory.

His rapid footsteps beating a hasty retreat around the corner of the house, and the agitated rattle of wagon wheels brought a quiet twinkle to the blue eyes of the bee-keeper. The next day the Rev. Meek found on his door-step a basket containing certain squares of white clover honey, and a slip of paper, which read: "With humble apologies from the Queen Bee." There was no apology from the master of the bees, the reverend gentleman remarked. He and his family ate the honey; they also found the basket convenient for collecting other pastoral ailments.

Later, he mentioned Moses Armitage to his successor as a hoary old reprobate, dead in trespasses and sins. That zealous laborer in the Lord's vineyard early discharged his responsibility by leaving a bundle of tracts upon the door-step of the lonely house on the back hill-road.

Moses Armitage, returning from a long tramp in the crisp autumn air, found them there. He examined the packet with a faint throb of pleasure. Someone had remembered him. Ten minutes thereafter the sleepy embers in the fireplace waked into merry life as they devoured a heap of tracts whose titles showed that the sender had a poor opinion of Mr. Armitage's prospect of salvation.

The blue eyes under the frosty brows sparkled indignantly as they watched the leaping flames; then as the charred fragments danced merrily up the black throat of the chimney, they softened into a smile. "So perish all uncharitable bigotry!" quoth the hermit; and fetched him a great volume bound sumptuously in gilded leather, and washed the last acrid flavor of false theology with such draughts as these.

"Religion is not a business by and for itself, which a man may practice apart from his other occupations, perhaps on certain fixed days and hours. It is the inmost spirit of love that penetrates, inspires and pervades all our actions, which in other respects pursue their appointed course without change or interruption. That the divine life and energy actually lives in us, is inseparable from religion, I said."

"Lord! let but thy will be done, then is mine done also; for I have no other will than this—that thy will be done!"

"This divine life now continually develops itself within him, without hindrance or obstruction, as it can and must develop itself only in him and his individuality. His will is therefore always accomplished, and it is absolutely impossible that anything contrary to it should ever come to pass."

"Whatever happens about him, nothing seems to him strange or unaccountable. He knows, assuredly, whether he understand it or no, that it is God's world, and that there nothing can be that does not directly tend to good. In him is no fear for the future, for the fountain of all blessedness eternally bears him on toward it; no sorrow for the past, for in so far as he was not in God he was nothing, and this is now at an end. For him all labor and effort have vanished; his whole outward existence flows forth softly, gently from his inward being, and issues forth into reality without difficulty or hindrance."

"Full surely there lies a blessedness beyond the grave for him who has already entered upon it here, and in no other form or way than that by which he can enter upon it at this very moment. By mere burial, one can not arrive at blessedness; in the future life, and throughout the infinite range of all future life, he would seek for happiness as vainly as he has already sought it, if he were to seek it in aught else than in that which already surrounds him so closely that throughout eternity it can never be brought nearer—the Infinite Love!"

Chapter X—A Story

AS the days passed and no anxious father no breathless, wild-eyed mother appeared to claim the child, Moses Armitage began to hope that this human birdling, which had somehow fluttered away from its nest, might be his. The eternal Kindness had never seemed so immanent, the infinite Love so near and warm, as when he looked into the clear shining depths of the child's eyes. Word spoken long ago by the one man who was aware of his origin came to him with a new meaning: "He that receiveth one such little child, receiveth Me."

The child had slipped into this solitary life as noiselessly and as cheerfully as a sunbeam which finds its way through shuttered windows. Nothing was changed; yet all was changed. Two now sat at the round table and the divided bread became a feast; two wandered over upland meadows and gathered flowers and berries in fragrant solitudes, while the cruel blisters healed apace in the little hands; two sat in the great chair in the tranquil evenings, till the child slumbered happily on the man's broad breast.

Moses Armitage was a poet, though he wrote no rhymes; so it did not occur to him, as to a more practical man, to proclaim his new-found treasure. Strange dreams began to weave their misty cobwebs in his brain. This child, who had come to him out of the dark (he thought) and who had called him father, was his very own, blessedly restored to him through the mercies of Omnipotent Love. This fancy was strengthened by the wonderful likeness which the boy, Immanuel, bore to his own dead son; a likeness which went deeper than the mere curve of an olive cheek or the trick of a drooped eyelash. It looked out from the serious eyes, sounded in the sweet, penetrating voice, found expression in a thousand attitudes and gestures. This was the dimmed picture of his vanished joy flashed once more into vivid life; his beloved son, come back to him across the empty chasm of time and night, newly named by the angels, Immanuel.

As for the child, he believed that he had found in this man his eternal Father. In his happy eyes the tranquil little house was heaven.

Moses Armitage, wrapped in his poet's dream, did not discover this till the two had lived together while the moon grew from its slender crescent to the full. They stood at the verge of the hill, while the great orb swung slowly aloft into mid-heaven.

"Did you make it, father?" asked the child, pointing his finger at the silver disk, "or did it grow?"

"I certainly did not make it," said Moses Armitage, gravely. "Yes, I think it grew."

"But munny told me that you made everything pretty that I liked—everything pretty an'—an' me."

The man shook his head with a troubled look. "What do you think I am, little one?" The question died on his lips. When a mystery is sweet like the heart of a rose, why tear it apart with rude fingers? "Who am I, child? Why do you love me?" The deep voice was firm and compelling now.

"I love you 'cause you—you are—my father," faltered Immanuel.

Moses Armitage lifted the small, trembling figure and held it fast. "We will go in now, my child," he said cheerfully. "I have a story to tell you."

In the depths of the big armchair the two set themselves to understand the mystery of God in his world. Moses Armitage told the story that he had promised, slowly and with thoughtful pauses. The child sat on his knee and looked at him with a troubled face.

"Once upon a time," began the old man, smiling into the wistful brown eyes uplifted to his, "there was a little child born. He slept all the time at first, and didn't seem to think about anything but his food, just as all little babies do. But he grew very fast, and after awhile he began to have thoughts. Do you know what thoughts are?"

The child nodded. "The think goes all the time," he said; "—except when I'm asleep."

"Yes," said Moses Armitage, sighing a little, "the think goes all the time. This child's thoughts were busy and constant, like a little fountain of pure sparkling water; and that is the most wonderful thing about this boy, his thoughts were always beautiful and pleasant and true. As he went on thinking they grew more and more delightful. When he was quite a little child he understood clearly that the great God who made all things was his Father."

"He was just like me, wasn't he?" cried Immanuel delightedly.

"Yes," said the old man, smiling back into the sparkling face, "he was your brother."

all the time. Mayn't I stay with you all the time? You won't send me back to him? No, no! I can't go back to him!" He clung close to the kind fingers with a sob, his dark eyes wide with fear.

Of Mose lifted the little figure once more in his arms. "If there is any great hue and cry after the boy, somebody will be here in the course of a day or two," he said to himself, "and somebody deserves a good scare." He sat down once more in his great chair, and looked more narrowly at his find. There were half-healed blisters in the small hands, over which he frowned and shook his head. The clean, carefully made garments, with tokens of mother love in every cunning stitch, told another story. "Let them look," he muttered, drawing the boy closer to his broad chest. "We'll give these blisters a chance to disappear." He touched the largest of them gently. "How was it?" he asked.

"Working," answered Immanuel, briefly. "I can work," he added, looking up wistfully into the face which bent down to him. "I can hoe, and weed, and do chores." He sighed deeply.

"Do you like to play with little boys?"

"I don't know."

"There were boys in school—eh?"

"I didn't go to school. I can read though—a little. Will you teach me?"

"Why, yes, of course I will," cried O' Mose, his eyes twinkling, "but we'll play first. Come, there are five kittens out in the barn, and two puppies."

Immanuel wound his arms about the old man's neck. "I'm so glad I found you, father," he whispered.

Chap. IX.—The Making of a Hermit

THE life story of Moses Armitage was not a singular one. Briefly, he was the son of a man who was wont to describe himself as a "plain, practical, hard-headed business man." The particular kind of business in which Moses Armitage, senior, displayed his plain, practical, hard-headed qualities was primarily the manufacture and sale of pickles, of which the New England people have always been inordinately fond, and with which they continue to set the teeth of unborn generations on edge, both literally and metaphorically. Late in life this worthy gentleman married a woman who was neither practical nor hard-headed, and who hated pickles. Finding herself grievously unhappy with her

The Earl of Kintore and Richard Weaver

By REV. I. DE WITT TALMAGE, D.D.

SHALL not soon forget a week night at the door of a church in London. I was not to preach, but to lecture. After a long ride through regions strange to me, the carriage halted at the door of a church. On my stepping out there pressed through the crowd a terrible looking man—whether a madman or one infuriated with strong drink, I cannot say—and crying out, "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved, and he that believeth not shall be damned," he struck me with full force of fist. A man, who, as I saw him afterward, seemed all too weak for such an undertaking, caught the uplifted fist and diverted the blow. The crowd then came in between me and the fury, and I passed into the church without further disturbance; but you may imagine I arrived in the anteroom in anything but a comfortable frame of mind.

THE LATE RICHARD WEAVER

Under these circumstances I was introduced to the Earl of Kintore, the celebrated Scotch philanthropist. There was so much pacification in his demeanor that I soon recovered from the perturbation of the scene through which I had just passed. Then and there an affectionate acquaintance was formed, which, though brief, will be something to rejoice over while I live. If we were asked who was the best man I met that summer, I would say without hesitation, "The Earl of Kintore." He was just as much at home on platform and in pulpit as in the House of Lords, or as in his own study. I said to my wife, over and over again, "That man is too ripe in goodness and geniality to live long in this world!" Alas, my prophecy proved too true! Seated at his table with all the members of his family, and some of his illustrious friends whom he had invited to dine, he said to me, "Do not forget our journey next Sabbath night." It was useless to tell us not to forget at which we had so ardently anticipated. At six o'clock his lordship called at the Westminster Hotel, got with a carriage, for we were going where it was best for us to go afoot. With his servant to carry his coat and Bible and psalm-book, we sauntered forth. We were out to see some of the evening and midnight varieties of London. First of all, we went into the charity lodging-houses of London—the places where outcast men who would otherwise have to lodge on the banks of the Thames, or under the arch-bridges, may come in and find gratuitous shelter. These men, as we went in, and around in all stages of poverty and wretchedness. As soon as the Earl entered they all knew him. With some he shook hands, while, in some cases, was a most undertaking. It is pleasant to shake hands with the cleanly, but a trial to shake hands with the untidy. The Earl did not stop to see whether these men had attended to proper grooming. He was more than enough to invoke all his sympathies. He addressed them as "Gentlemen" and promised them "a treat at Christmas."

From this charity lodging-house, which the inmates call the "House of Lords," we went to one of inferior quality, which the inmates call the "House of Commons." There were different grades of squalor, different degrees of rags, different styles of malodor. From there we went to missions and outdoor meetings, and benevolent rooms, where coffee and chocolate are crowding out intoxicants. Ready with prayer and exhortation himself, his lordship expected everybody with him to be ready, and although he had promised to do the talking, he had a sudden and irresistible way of utilizing others for religious address, so that at the close of this Sunday, which I had set apart for entire quiet, I found I had made five addresses. But it was one of the most refreshing and instructive days of my life.

I saw him again under very different circumstances. It was August 12th, Saturday afternoon, two o'clock. Saturday afternoon is always a holiday in London, and it is a good time for meetings and entertainments. I was to speak in Exeter Hall on "Bright and Happy Homes." The Earl was in the chair. The families of many of the English aristocracy were on the platform. The Prince Imperial of France was that afternoon being carried to Chislehurst. As the great Exeter Hall organ ceased to roll, Earl Kintore rose, and as he confronted the audience the minute-gun of the funeral procession sounded. At the sound of that gun the whole audience were in tears, for the Prince Imperial had died in the English cause, and the nation was in deep grief. Earl Kintore said: "We are assembled to hear a lecture on 'Bright and Happy Homes,' but the sound of that gun reminds us of a home no more bright and happy, but for ever desolate. God pity the Empress' broken heart!" The audience were whelmed with the thought that she had lost her palace and lost her companion and lost her child. "The only son of his mother, and she a widow!"

As the Earl of Kintore and I parted in London he said, "When you get back to America send me a stick" (by which the Englishman and Scotchman mean a cane) "and I will send you a stick." After getting home, and in due course of time, there came by International Express a shepherd's crook, made out of witch-hazel, and I think cut from the grounds around his castle in Scotland, the wood beautifully polished and appropriately inscribed. I sought from place to place to find a cane worthy of my Scottish friend. After considerable delay I found what I wanted, and sent it by express to Inverury, Aberdeenshire, Scotland; but before it arrived at its place of destination, the Earl of Kintore had finished his earthly journey, and had no more need of and no staff to conduct him. A week long, sorrow through me, only relieved by the thought that after the Christian's journey of earth there must be a heavenly reunion.

There were reminiscences of persons of great and profound in a different sphere. The summer of 1891, I had great pleasure in the much-remembered dinner, after the London excursion, at the residence of Richard Weaver, the English evangelist. He had for some years been visiting the house of my mother-in-law. It had been no unusual thing for him to appear for the dinner table in the study, and to have breakfast only one morning omitted. "He is an old man," I often said, "that I see nothing of Richard Weaver." He had for years paused in his itinerant work, and been preaching in a chapel in the town of Oldham, near Manchester. At last I found him coming out of the door of my hotel, where he had been looking at the horses. I found him smiling before I had seen him. We greeted each other like old friends. "You must go to Oldham," he said. "I cannot go," was the reply. "I have but one day, and that next Saturday, to rest in before I leave England, and I must rest or die."

By this time we had reached the house. He got down on his knees and said, "O Lord, show this man his duty to go to Oldham!" Rising, he said, "This is a solemn for demanding that you go. It will be the greatest audience you have seen in England. All poor, and the Lord's poor, and you have not seen England till you have seen my humble chapel." I accepted the invitation.

Arrived at Oldham, we had a delightful time. Richard Weaver was one of the most magnetic men I ever met. He recited reminiscences, and sang for me, and did everything except tell the story of the lost sheep. I said to him, "I have heard and read much about the way you tell that story," but he declined, saying that he needed the inspiration of a large audience before him to do it well. True to his statement, the people in his chapel are the Lord's poor. I never enjoyed preaching more than that afternoon to that unpretending audience. A gentleman played the melodeon in the chapel. As I was leaving for the train, he handed me an envelope. I said, "Excuse me, I cannot take that. I suppose it is to meet my expenses. I came down here to serve Richard Weaver, and I will pay my own expenses." He replied, "You do not know what the letter contains. Put it in your pocket." Arriving at the rail-train, I opened the letter, and was surprised more than I can tell, for it contained $500.

And so we place side by side the two men. The one descendant for six generations from the greatest height of social and political position. The other came from a colliery. The one reared in all the advantages of the university, and the other not able to read until late in life. But both God's noblemen, both the champions of religion, both eminent for humility, for faith, for courage and for devotion. Both turned many to righteousness. "And they shall shine as the stars for ever and ever."

Some Recent Observations in Painless Surgery

By . . .
DR. A. MONAE LESSER

FROM the earliest days, through all ages and periods, man has endeavored to find some means of alleviating pain, and narcotics of various kinds were introduced in the various tribes by which the sufferer could get relief. It is striking, as Biblical history tells us, that when God removed Adam's rib to create Eve, he put Adam into "a deep sleep," symbolical of an anæsthetic, that he should suffer no pain. It is a fact, that in ancient times, when man had to suffer death by execution, whatever method the means of execution might have been, he frequently received a drink of some sort to be relieved from pain. The bitter cup given in the Roman days was nothing else than a narcotic. Of course, all were of poisonous character. When opium was first introduced, it was welcomed most heartily, because it relieved suffering. But when chloroform and ether came forth, the surgeon could make progress which theretofore was entirely impossible. To place a person into a state in which the mental faculties should cease, while the normal functions of the active organs (such as the heart, the lungs, etc.) would act, is to permit any surgical operation that possibly can be performed. The narcotics are carried into the blood and general circulation, either when taken through the stomach or inhaled into the lungs. Their special affinity to the brain makes them narcotics.

merly, ice or heat were applied for the purpose of facilitating the removal of certain parts of the body, such as external tumors, and sometimes in amputation of the limbs. For the last fifteen years cocaine has been used in a limited field, where the operations do not last longer than from twenty to thirty minutes. It is injected upon the part, under the skin, and wherever the fluid reaches, it causes the nerve to become dormant, and therefore painless. If the knife should touch a spot which has not been impregnated with the cocaine, the pain is felt; therefore it is necessary to inject it through the entire surface, and in parts which may be touched with a knife or with other painful instruments.

Within the last year, however, a new method of cocaine anæsthesia has been introduced. Finding that the action of cocaine, or its effects, depended upon its contact with the nerve, it was thought wise to bring it into contact with the nerves originate, or along their course. Thus, when cocaine is injected upon a nerve which carries sensibility to a limb, or to a part, all portions supplied by that nerve become insensible to the touch; hence, operations performed upon such parts are painless. In the spinal cord, all nerves supplying the body must pass, except those of the head, the heart, the stomach, the lungs, and nerves of sympathy, though some nerves coming from the spinal cord partly supply these organs. If cocaine is injected into the spinal canal, every part of the body, from about six inches below the point of injection, loses power and sensibility, showing that the cocaine has affected the course or starting points of the nerves. The only place, however, at which advantage of this method can be taken, is below that point of the spinal cord which supplies the vital organs. Hence, only the lower part of the abdomen and lower extremities can be made insensible, as an injection above that point will interfere with the vital functions, and produce death.

Although at the Red Cross Hospital we have operated by this method upon a number of cases—such as hernia, bladder sections or operations upon the lower extremities—we now again prefer to use a general anæsthesia, such as chloroform, ether or nitrous oxide (laughing gas), for though a patient operated upon by the spinal cocaine method may watch his own operation, it is not so pleasant to explain here. The fact that one can see all that is going on, is not a disadvantage. If the patient happens to be an experienced surgeon, who desires to have a purpose, but only a limited one; for very likely he cannot judge as well as the operator, who sees the entire field of the operation. It is known what general or direct anæsthesia can do, but the results, or the after effects, if any, which the spinal cord anæsthesia may bring, cannot be judged until years have elapsed.

GOD'S WORK AMID WAR'S ALARMS

INTERRUPTIONS of mail service, incident to war in South America, have prevented us from keeping our mission here before the readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD in as frequent communications as formerly; but they, having faithful memories for good works, will doubtless recall previous accounts in your columns of our efforts to build up the Master's kingdom in Bucaramanga, Columbia. As the agent of the American Bible Society for Venezuela and Colombia, my husband, Rev. Joseph Norwood, had had the blessed privilege of carrying the Word of God into thousands of homes in these two republics before the divine call came to me to help destitute and orphaned children. It came through Vicente, a poor, hungry, deserted child, who claimed a place in our home and affections; other helpless little ones quickly followed his example; coming of themselves, or being brought by those who would, but could not, care for them. We gave out food, too, on certain days to the adult sick and poor; and formed the purpose of opening for this class the much needed institution of a soup kitchen. Because of limited means, and opposition of the Roman Catholic clergy, we had many difficulties to overcome; and when you last heard from us, we had not been able to secure a house in which to hold religious services. We have now a large hall, in which Mr. Norwood holds regular and well-attended Gospel services; we have also a flourishing Sunday School. Much surprise has been expressed at the excellent order preserved at our meetings in these troublous war times. Our work for the Lord has gone on as quietly and surely as if there were neither wars nor rumors of wars. We have concerned ourselves only with our Master's business—the work of mercy and relief—and the Prince of Peace is faithful to care for his own.

Our preparations for opening a home for orphans and a soup kitchen for the poor, have been blessings in ways we little thought of. Our hands have been full of what might be classed under the head of hospital work. Since the war began, nearly two years ago, we have

by the pressing need for aid, and by our faith in God we have gone far beyond our visible resources in extending help to the stricken and needy; yet, nearly every day, we have to turn away children who are brought to us, because we have neither money nor room for their keeping.

I send a photograph, showing a group of some of those to whom we have ministered. The wee, chubby maid in the foreground is Mercedes; Carmelita, one of our most helpful little women, has an arm over Mercedes' shoulder; next to Carmelita is Segundo, Mercedes' brother; and next Segundo are our twin orphans, Clara and Elma; the small man with arms folded is Vicente, the originator of our Home for Children. Vicente is growing fast; he has learned to read, and is very proud of the New Testament which Mr. Norwood gave him. Mercedes was a baby when her mother died, leaving her and her brother to me. She was a pitiable little skeleton; no one thought she could live. Natives called her "Sutie," a name given to a child whose growth they think has been checked by breathing air corrupted by the presence of a corpse; or, as they express it, "felt the chill air caused by death." She did not grow and thrive at first like other children; when she began to walk, she moved with a peculiar jump, which, conjoined with her thinness, caused the doctor to call her "Monkey." The doctor would hardly recognize "Monkey" now, in our bright, rosy, dimpled Mercedes. Much more than our means allow needs to be done for the people here now—the sick, the poor, the wounded, the infant and the aged. THE METEOR SHOWER OF 1833

RECOLLECTIONS OF A FAMOUS EVENT WHICH EXCITED THE WORLD'S WONDER

THIS occurrence was related to the writer by his mother, about two years ago. She was born in Central Pennsylvania, and was about ten years old when the event took place. In telling me the story she spoke of the old home of her father as a gathering-place, where people would meet to discuss the events of the day. It was also a stopping-place for travelers between Philadelphia and Pittsburgh, as her home was on the national road laid out by our Government for freight and passenger traffic between those two cities.

She described the event as taking place in the fall of the year. On that night she was awakened out of a sound sleep by loud knockings at the door. Looking around her room, she thought it must be day, the room was so bright and light, yet the time was past midnight. Hastening to the window, she saw all around her the heavens ablaze with lights, and bright flakes falling down to the ground, just as we see the first large flakes that fall so fast and thick in the coming of a big snow-storm. Her childish imagination at once centered on a large straw stack in the rear of the house, "for," she thought, "surely it is raining fire, and the straw stack will burn." But noiselessly, just as the flakes of snow fall to the ground, when the meteoric sparks touched the straw stack or ground, their lights were extinguished. The heavens were so light that one could readily read the larger size print of a newspaper.

While she was intently watching for that straw stack to burn, she heard loud rappings on the door that opened on the street. The loud knockings, and cries of "Awake, Mr. Sankey! The great Day of Judgment is at hand and the people are getting ready." Soon the house was filled with neighbors, some of them terrified, and all filled with amazement at the wonderful lights, the display in the heavens and the falling meteors. One of the company (the man who knocked at the door so loud), was known as the wag of the village. He was so terrified that he was on his knees, and in a loud voice was pleading for the remission of his shortcomings.

The village church-bell rang, the church doors were opened, and the building was soon filled. All were deeply impressed with the wonderful scenic effect of these falling meteors. Some, who never heard of meteoric showers, were sure the Day of Judgment was at hand. The hour of night helped to make the scene most impressive. Go where you would in that little village, you would find numbers of people gathered together, talking of the wonderful scene around them. Some gathered together in prayer, praying as they never had before.

Some of the falling stars apparently had long flashing points. Others were round, like balls, and of different sizes. Others seemed stationary in the heavens, and all were of different forms and sizes, darting and falling in every direction from the vaulted sky, with tremendous swiftness. To many it seemed as if the very heavens must be collapsing. There were explosions in the sky, like the sky-rockets of nowadays, and of meteors traversing the space above; and the bright shafts, darting and falling, with the sparks of meteors to the earth, made a picture never to be forgotten by those who witnessed this wonderful display. No doubt we of the present day would be most profoundly impressed with such a scene. Very likely human nature has not changed very much since then, and were we to have such a scene now, many, no doubt, would begin to prepare (without admonition) for the coming of the judgment day. The scene kept up in majestic splendor all that night; the people all over the country were gathered together in churches, in schoolhouses, and at their homes, all profoundly impressed, and many wondering what would come next.

Those were the days when the telegraph was unknown. Stage and packet carried the news, slowly indeed, from our modern standpoint of communication. It was months before it was known that that wonderful meteoric shower from above, that night had visited all over what is now these United States. And from my mother's description of that wonderful scene, I believe nothing has since happened to compare with that wonderful display. To those who yet are living and who remember that great display, what memories it must awaken of the past, and what a reminder of the swiftness of time it must bring to them! What a story of life it must open, to look back over sixty-eight years and think of the wonderful changes in the maps of the world, and of our own country, that have been made since then!

they send to Mr. Ishii. In the history of the Okayama Orphanage, the most trying period came in 1895, nine years after the founding of the institution. The Orphanage, which at that time sheltered 300 inmates, was compelled, owing to causes which I cannot here enter into, to depend entirely on the income of its industrial department for support. To the scarcity of food thus caused, was added the horrors of pestilence. The cholera, which raged in the district, carried off the head of the industrial department, and Mr. Ishii himself, with several others, were stricken by the disease. Communication with the outside world was cut off, and the industrial department was closed for a time. Most of the afflicted, including Mr. Ishii, recovered, but Mrs. Ishii, the mother of the Orphanage, succumbed to the cholera. For nine years she had devoted to the Orphanage her whole energy, had fed the waifs with her own food, clothed them with her own garments, given them a love as true and tender as that of a mother. Three hundred orphans wept at her taking-off, and mourned her loss, refusing to be comforted.

Now, after fourteen years of hardship and experience, the Okayama Orphanage possesses in its own right thirteen buildings, comprising a chapel, a school, an office, a dining hall, a printing house, an infirmary, and seven boarding houses. The cost of these buildings, which, taken together, cover nearly a half-acre, was met by special donations, and by the net income of the industrial department. The area of the entire lot occupied by the Orphanage is about one acre and a half, besides a neighboring lot of half an acre, which is rented for a playground. From the time of its founding until last summer the institution had received 541 orphans, coming from every part of Japan. About sixty children were taken here at one time, in the autumn of 1891, when a great earthquake destroyed many thousand lives in the district of Gifu. The orphans sheltered here at the time of the last report made, Jan. 1, 1901, comprised 14 boys and 12 girls under eight years of age; 118 boys and 50 girls between the ages of eight and fourteen years, 44 boys and 24 girls above fourteen years of age, a total of 262.

The education which the children receive at the Orphanage is spiritual, intellectual and industrial. For spiritual training, there are Bible classes, Sunday Schools, and a chapel exercise daily from 6:30 to 7 A. M. But the chief factor is the personal influence of Mr. Ishii and his colleagues. For intellectual education, there is a kindergarten and a regular common school in the Orphanage. Those children who have ability and inclination for the higher education, are sent to the high schools and the colleges. In the industrial education of the boys, the printing department stands first. All the children more than ten years old work in the printing house every afternoon. The Orphanage maintains a barber shop, which serves the inmates and also is open to the custom of the public. There is a band, in which those who have musical ability are trained and instructed. For girls, a sewing class is the only form of manual training provided just now. Formerly the handicrafts of weaving and of making matting were taught. In the agriculture department both sexes are employed. The farm, which is at some distance away from the Orphanage, consists of a plot of several acres on the Island of Kusu, near the birthplace of Mr. Ishii. The work upon it yields profitable returns.

This large institution is carried on now with a monthly expense of less than seven hundred dollars. Even taking into account the fact that living is much cheaper in Japan than in America, these figures are remarkably low, and they reflect great credit on the able management of Mr. Ishii and his co-workers. The assistants, with the exception of a few professional teachers, work absolutely without pay.

The total amount of income of the Orphanage, during twelve years, from 1887 to 1899, was $43,123.84, of which the sum of $36,323.80 represents contributions, in about equal proportions, of Japanese and foreigners, and $6,800.04, the net income of the industrial department during that period. The foreign contributors to the Orphanage chiefly were Americans. The value of the clothes and other articles, which were given bountifully by the public, is not included in this statement. At current prices these articles would represent about $7,000 bringing the income of the Orphanage during these twelve years up to $50,000. Mention should be made of a generous lady in Plymouth, Conn., who sends five dollars a month to Mr. Ishii, to help meet his family expenses.

The Okayama Orphanage, thus founded and thus developing, is only a youth fourteen years old. Its continued growth depends upon the sympathy of its friends, at home and abroad. American Christians have done a great deal already to carry it up to its present satisfactory condition; but it needs to be enlarged and strengthened. It is waiting for help. Who will listen to the cry of the fatherless in the land of the Far East?

THE MISSIONARY AWAKENING*

In the Heart, In the Church at Home and the Church Universal

LOVE occupies a more prominent place in the New Testament than it does in our current talk, in our social philosophy or in our sermons. Our novelists and playwrights have taken possession of the word and have played many tunes on that one string; but they have restricted its meaning and do not use it in the apostolic sense. With them it is a passion of the sexes, which is satisfied with possession and is centred in one object. Paul's idea was of a loving soul, loving Christ, and loving all men, because it is full of love. He says love is the fulfilling of the law, and he was right, for if a man love God he will keep the commandments of the first table, and if he love his brother man he will fulfil the commandments of the second table. It is stronger than law, for a man will do under the influence of love much more than any law requires him to do. Look at the mother watching by the side of her sick child. What law, what money, would bring to the child such attention as love brings? See the man trying to save his wife and child from water or fire; no earthly power could get from him such efforts as he makes, because his loved ones are in peril. Now the apostle's thought of the Christian is of one whose heart is full of that love. He says much of faith, but love is the disposition on which he depends. If a man loves, he is sure of him, knowing well that his duty will be done in every sphere of life. That was a beautiful inscription that a traveler in New England came upon in a village graveyard: just the name and date, and underneath, the words, "She was good to Everybody." If so much could be said of every Christian, the apostle's idea would be realized, and the world would understand what Christianity really is.

How does this spirit of love apply to missions, which is the subject for the day? It is the foundation of the whole movement. It sends the missionary away from home and friends among people indifferent and often hostile to him; it keeps him there laboring to win souls, with no prospect of worldly gain, and no hope of worldly applause, content if, through his service, the way of salvation becomes known in a benighted land. Like the apostle himself, the explanation of his life is, "The love of Christ constraineth." It is not that there is anything lovable in the heathen. They are often repulsive and debased and cruel. It is the love in that missionary's heart, overflowing toward Christ and toward the world, which prompts his devotion and self-sacrifice. It is part of that same love of which Christ said, "God so loved the world that he gave," etc. The same love in essence, however it may differ in degree. This love should be in every Christian's heart. It has been often observed that there is no evidence of conversion so sure as that the convert experiences an outgoing of love toward all men. It indicates the coming into his heart of God, who is love. That is the beginning of service. It prompts him to seek out people whom he can win for Christ, people whose souls he can save, people whose lives can be transformed, and to tell them of Christ, whose love brought him to earth to die for them. It prompts him to deny himself that he may have money to give to those who need, or to the societies which are sending the missionaries out to heathen lands. Sacrifices are easy to the loving soul, whether they be sacrifices of time or ease and comfort or of money. It is the spirit that counts, not the extent of the gift. If this love were really in the hearts of those who bear Christ's name, there would be no lack of funds in the organizations which are at work for him.

The plea that Paul uses for the exercise of his love applies to every age. "The night is far spent, the day is at hand." It is much nearer now than in his time and there is, therefore, the greater need for purity and devotion. It is shocking to compare the sums spent for intoxicating drink and other indulgences every year, even in Christian lands, with the money given to missions and the spread of the Gospel at home. Even the Church is blamable in this matter. Its members do not deny themselves that they may help the causes which are hindered and restricted by the lack of funds. The doors are open in many a dark land for the entrance of the Gospel. Consecrated men and women stand ready to go forth with the glad tidings, but they wait because no funds are available to send them out. God forbid that we, in our day, should suggest that such causes as those cited by the apostle are absorbing the money that should be devoted to Christ's cause. But if such causes have existed, they should cease immediately. At this season of the year, when good resolutions are in order, this surely might be one that should be urged on every Church, that whatever the past has been, sluggishness and sloth shall now be cast off and the true principles of Christianity shall have free course, impelling men and women to service and consecration of time and labor and money to him who said, "Greater love hath no man than this that a man lay down his life for his friends."

President Clark's European Tour

The Rev. Francis E. Clark, President of the World's Christian Endeavor Union, who sailed for Europe on the Commonwealth on Saturday, January 4, expects to spend seven or eight months on the Continent of Europe in the interests of the Christian Endeavor movement. Landing in Naples, he will spend a little time in Italy, but will soon go to Sweden, Norway and Denmark, and afterwards to Finland, Holland, France, Spain and Portugal. In all these countries, the Christian Endeavor Society has made a beginning, and in some of them is doing excellent work. This work Dr. Clark has been asked to strengthen and enlarge by his tour. He will also visit some points in Germany, where Christian Endeavor has already taken vigorous root, there being several hundred societies already in the Empire and large prospects for future growth. In the late spring or early summer, he will spend a few weeks in Great Britain, attending the National Endeavor Convention in Manchester at Whitsuntide, which promises to be a meeting of great numbers and enthusiasm. He has also been invited to visit Liverpool, Cornwall and Plymouth to attend smaller conventions of Endeavorers. There are also several interdenominational gatherings of consequence upon the Continent which he expects to attend before he returns home. Of late years the development of Christian Endeavor in foreign lands has been a most marked and encouraging feature of the movement, which has now become thoroughly world-wide in its scope and purpose.

Fidelity of Converts

Dr. N. Macvicar, of Blantyre, Central Africa, says that in his field, out of a total of 314 men (with five exceptions, young men) who have been baptized from the beginning of the African mission up to December 31, 1899, only twenty-six have lapsed from membership. Seeing that many of the converts are now living at a distance from any other church, and are exposed to temptations from their heathen neighbors often hard to be resisted, the proportion of the lapsed is remarkably small.

BUILT A MONUMENT The Best Sort in the World.

"A monument built by and from Postum," is the way Mr. J. G. Casey of Ayers, Ill., describes himself. He says, "For years I was a coffee drinker until at last I became a terrible sufferer from dyspepsia, constipation, headaches and indigestion, and was physically a wreck."

The different kinds of medicines I tried did not relieve me, but finally some one told me I must leave off coffee and take up Postum Food Coffee. I was fortunate in having the new coffee made strictly according to directions, so that, from the start, I liked it. It has a rich flavor and I made the change from coffee to Postum without any trouble.

Gradually my condition changed. The old troubles disappeared and I began to get well again. My appetite became good and I could digest food. Now I have been restored to strength and health. Can sleep sound all night and awake with a fresh and rested body. Everyone who meets me comments on my getting so fat and rosy.

I am really a monument built by Postum, for I was a physical wreck, distressed in body and mind, and am now a strong, healthy man. I know exactly what made the change, it was leaving off coffee and using Postum."

PROMISED TESTIMONY

The Sign of Christ's Power Given as Confirmation

BY MRS. M. BAXTER

THE Lord Jesus in his last commission to the apostles, when he commanded them to "go into all the world and preach the Gospel to every creature," assured to them his own visible testimony to their ministry in saying, "And these signs shall follow them that believe. In my name they shall cast out devils; they shall speak with new tongues; they shall take up serpents; and if they drink any deadly thing, it shall not hurt them; they shall lay hands upon the sick, and they shall recover." (Mark 16: 17-18). And lest any should think to separate between the Gospel message and the direct witness of God to it, the 20th verse records: "And they went forth and preached everywhere, the Lord working with them, and confirming the word with signs following," or R. V. "by the signs that followed." Consequently, on the day of Pentecost, "many wonders and signs were done by the apostles" (Acts 2: 43), who claimed such a testimony as needful in order that they might "speak the Word of God with boldness" (Acts 4: 13).

But the apostles had no inherent power to do these things, nor could they do them at will. The holy Spirit "worketh" all his spiritual gifts (1 Cor. 12: 11) "as he will." Peter and John went up together into the temple at the hour of prayer, and, passing by, saw the habitual beggar who was laid daily at the gate of the temple which is called Beautiful, to excite sympathy from the passers-by, having no other resource for his livelihood. Probably Peter and John had often seen him there without specially noticing him; but this day the beggar appealed to them for help. It was no accident; to men filled with the Holy Ghost there is no such thing as chance. Peter was a man filled with the Spirit and led by the Spirit. Nothing that happened could be looked upon by him but in the light of God; God permitted it for some cause. Led by the Spirit, he said to the poor man, "Look on us." And at once the lame man's attention was gained, for he expected just what he expected from any other passer-by who deigned to notice him—some little gift with which he might procure a morsel of food.

But he was to receive what he had never dreamed of. Peter said, "Silver and gold have I none; but such as I have give I thee. In the name of Jesus Christ of Nazareth, rise up and walk." One who has the Holy Ghost dwelling in him ought to be able to give something to a needy fellow-creature. We may not always be able to give money, but how often we might give our prayers when we do not! How often, in this age of press and hurry, we lose opportunities to be of use to individuals! Peter "took him by the right hand, and lifted him up; and immediately his feet and ankle-bones received strength." It was just what the Lord Jesus had said should happen where his witness is believed. And it was done suddenly, immediately, so that this man, forty years of age, who never had walked, sprang to his feet, which had never yet borne him, and walked, and "entered with them into the temple, walking and leaping, and praising God."

The beggar knew that no man could have done this for him; he imputed nothing to Peter and John; he was healed in the name of Jesus Christ of Nazareth, of whom, doubtless, he had heard from other healed people; and so, with Peter and John, he went into the temple, to render thanks where thanks were due. What a lesson for many in the present day, who are urgent in supplicating the prayers of believing people for their bodily healing in such a way as proves that it is the prayers they trust in, not in God that heareth prayer; they rely on man, and not on God!

There were many people in the temple courts when this occurrence took place. "And all the people saw him walking and praising God. And they knew that it was he which sat for alms at the beautiful gate of the temple; and they were filled with wonder and amazement at that which had happened unto him." Wonder and amazement, but not praise and thanksgiving; the people did not immediately recognize the hand of God. They saw simply a marvel; something strange and unaccountable. How slow is human nature to recognize the hand of God! As the lame man still "held Peter and John, all the people ran together unto them in the porch that is called Solomon's, greatly wondering." It was a God-given opportunity: God had gathered a congregation, and he was there to teach Peter what to say. It is often the case that unexpected opportunities of bearing witness for our God are far more fruitful than the ordinary round of classes, meetings, etc. The most important meetings are those in which we have the most closely to do with God, i.e., the prayer-meetings, if they are real, definite meetings with God, and if real business for eternity is transacted in them.

Peter got his message: "Ye men of Israel, why marvel ye at this? or why look ye so earnestly on us, as though by our own power or wisdom we had made this man to walk?"

For the most part, the idea that we can do anything in our own power is a delusion. It is the way to look at things which is all wrong.

YOU CAN PLAY THEM WITHOUT LEARNING

CHURCH BAND OF PATERSON, N. J.

The Wonderful Zobo

For Entertainments and Parties

The most extraordinary musical instrument ever produced; so constructed that the human voice comes out so wonderfully as to make it melodious beyond all comprehension. It seems impossible for it to accomplish so much. It gives you the vocal power of giants, yet its music may be softened to the cooing of a dove or the thrilling song of the nightingale. Money and music making feature for church choirs and other concerts. You can organize a brass band for public appearance with 30 minutes' practice.

Sing into mouthpiece—Zobo does the rest.

25c. Special Offer.—To introduce the wonderful ZOBO we will send one carefully packed, together with our handsomely illustrated catalogue, prepaid, for 25c. Warranted just as represented or money cheerfully refunded.

We Would Give $50,000 in Cash

if the people of the United States could in some way be made to realize that the greatest offer that has ever been made in real estate, or probably ever will be made, is embodied in our proposition to sell a lot in New York City with all city improvements for $480—because if the situation were actually understood by every person in the country there would not be one single foot of property left twenty-four hours after this knowledge was brought to their attention.

We are selling lots for less than $500 which are intrinsically worth $20,000, if you will take into consideration the three elements which go to make up values in New York City outside of fashionable districts:—distance from the center, transportation facilities, rate of fare.

The difference is, the $20,000 lot had transportation to it several years ago, and now is surrounded with houses costing from $10,000 to $40,000 apiece, while our land, which has only now just secured this improvement and transportation, must wait till the people realize that these have been secured, and until the solidly built portions (now so comparatively close to us) have reached and enveloped us, and actually brought the values where they rightfully belong.

Illustrations: Lot on corner 146th Street and Third Avenue, New York City, worth in 1881 $1,500, sold in Spring of 1901 for $70,000 to Henry Lewis Morris. His grandfather sold it for $125 in 1833. Lot on 80th Street, opposite Central Park, sold in 1850 for $500, in 1901 brought a price that showed an increase of $400 every 60 days from 1850 to 1901. (Authority: Real Estate Editor New York Sun).

Utica Ave. and Linden Boulevard, Rugby. Every improvement you see has been made within 6 months

This increase will be maintained as surely as New York is destined to grow. As sure as equal transportation makes equal values, so surely will this lot be worth as much as the lot in upper Manhattan.

We can prove it if you come to New York. We will try to prove it if you will send us your name and address. Is it not worth your while? We don't ask anything of you, only a letter or a postal. If we were sure you were in good earnest we would far rather say, send us your name and we will send you tickets to New York. This you know is obviously impossible, but if you will let us put the matter before you we will in some way prove that our proposition is a sound one, if we have to bring you to New York to do it.

What we want is to have you know that we are honest, and that every statement we make is incontrovertible truth. Then we are absolutely certain that we can do business together.

We sell a lot on $6 per month payment. This carries a life insurance, a guaranteed increase of 20% in one year, a free trip to New York, all improvements, your money back if you want it. What more can we do. Now, will you send us your name?

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS

I. These questions are printed Four weeks in advance so as to afford all our readers an opportunity to answer them.

II. For answers to the questions which appear below, when accepted, we will allow compensation for the matter used at the rate of One Dollar a hundred words. Answers should so far as possible be limited to one hundred words.

III. Answers must be received at this office three weeks in advance of the date in which they are intended to appear.

IV. The editor reserves the right to condense accepted answers when necessary, and compensation will be based on the matter as printed.

V. Do not write inquiring if your material has been accepted. If it appears on this page, you will know that it has been accepted.

VI. We cannot return any MSS. sent to the Editor of THE MAIL-BAG—not even if stamps accompany them.

VII. Write only on one side of the sheet, and never send on the same sheet anything intended for any other department of the paper. Correspondents answering more than one question should append their name and address to each answer.

VIII. Address all communications intended for this department, Editor The Mail-Bag, The Christian Herald, Bible House, New York.

Readers are invited to forward new questions which they believe would be suitable for discussion in this department.

These Questions will be Answered Feb. 19

1. What are the chief points of difference between morality and righteousness? Where does the one end and the other begin?

2. What type of character is that which Christ described (Matt. 5:8) as "the poor in spirit"?

3. If a man knows that one of his friends is arranging to make a purchase from another friend, for which he cannot pay, ought he to notify the friend who is selling that he is likely to lose, when by so doing he would lose the friendship of the prospective purchaser?

4. Does conversion obliterate the injuries to the soul which sin has caused? That is, can the sinner be as good a Christian as he would have been if he had not sinned?

5. What inference should be drawn from the decrease in the number of marriages last year? Is marriage a duty incumbent on a man who is able to provide for a wife and family?

Questions of the Week

1. Name the seven passages in the Bible in which the door stands as an emblem of different truths.

The following passages of scripture contain the word door expressing emblematically different truths: 1. In John 10: 9 as the emblem of the sinner's salvation through Christ. "I am the door; by me if any man enter in, he shall be saved." 2. In Acts 14: 27, as an illustration of faith. "How he had opened the door of faith unto the Gentiles." 3. In 1. Cor. 16: 9; Col. 4: 3 and Rev. 3: 8; it stands for opportunity of service. "A great door and effectual is opened unto me." "A door of utterance." "An open door." 4. In Rev. 3: 20 it symbolizes the individual heart and the church of God. "Behold, I stand at the door," etc. 5. In Psalm 141: 3, as a guard for our words, so that our conversation may be right. "Keep the door of my lips." 6. In Prov. 26: 14, as an illustration of the slothful man. "As the door turneth upon his hinges, so doth the slothful upon his bed." 7. In Hosea 2: 15, it is called the door of hope. See also Matt. 25: 10 and Rev. 4: 1, where door is used in connection with heaven. PHILIP BAUER.

Correct answers have been received also from L. I. Rightsell; Laura Mudge; A. A. Bullard; G. H. Rogers; L. Bishop; W. C. Lane; C. H. Clay; K. H. Booth; C. B. Stanley; John H. 2. What event does the Jewish festival of Chanukka commemorate?

The Jewish Chanukka (pronounced Ha-nukkah) which, literally translated, means "dedication," was instituted to commemorate the purification of the Temple and rebuilding of the altar, after Judas Maccabaeus had driven out the Syrians, B. C. 164. More frequently it is known as the "Feast of the Dedication" only. It is mentioned but once in the canonical Scriptures (John 10: 22). Its institution is recorded in I. Macc. 4: 52-59. The feast begins on the 25th of the Jewish month of Kislev (December), the anniversary of the purification of the Temple after its defilement by Antiochus Epiphanes, who sacrificed a sow on the Temple altar. The feast lasts eight days. It is recorded that when the Temple was dedicated, a small jar of oil was found, bearing the seal of the High Priest, and was used to light the golden candlestick in the Temple. Its contents were barely sufficient to last for one day, but by a miracle it was made to last for eight days and nights; hence, Jews all over the world commemorate the event by lighting eight lights for the eight nights of the feast, commencing with one light on the first night and increasing one light nightly, until eight lights are used. The illumination is either with miniature vessels provided with eight receptacles for oil, made from tin, copper, silver, or from solid gold; also candelabra with eight sockets, wherein from one to eight wax tapers are placed, these being increased nightly as before. These candelabra of various metals are chiefly used in the synagogues, although they are also used in many private dwellings. The poor, who cannot afford to procure any of the costlier vessels, stick the tapers on their mantels or on the window-sills. Special literature in the prayer-book is recited both in the synagogue and in the home when praying. In addition, several psalms known as the "Hallel," are also included as a part of the prayers, during the Chanukka week, both in the synagogue and the home. The Rabbinical law, which lays particular stress upon giving as much publicity to the Chanukka lights as possible, fixed the time for lighting them from sundown until the traffic of the streets ceases and everything is quiet for the night.

3. If a young man of energy, and a middle-aged man of experience were candidates for the pulpit of a church, which of the two would it be better to invite?

Assuming that both are earnest Christians, the Church should engage the one of energy rather than the man of experience. What the of Christ and of the Christ life, should grow with growing years, and so the pastor's experience strengthens and glorifies the spiritual interests of the Church. C. B. STANLEY.

That would depend upon which of the two the Church needed most. There are Churches that are cold, others that are lukewarm, others still that have run down for want of pastoral attention. Among these, the young man of energy can do good work; in fact, his opportunities are unlimited, but the young man of energy is not needed everywhere. There are Churches whose conditions are so complicated as to require wisdom, skill, experience and mature judgment, that the middle-aged man of experience alone can meet. Every minister has his peculiar adaptations. By all means get the man for the place, and there will always be a place for the man. B. D. EDEN.

4. Which, on the whole, is the greater, the influence of the father or the mother upon the children?

There are many exceptions to the rule, but usually, the mother wields the greater influence. Fifty years ago there was a family in Virginia with four small boys. The father was notoriously careless, immoral, and intemperate; yet, against his teachings, example and desires, all his sons were pious young men and entered the Christian ministry. The open secret of this was, these boys had a loving, pious mother. The biographies of nearly all prominent men disclose the fact that they owe their greatness to their mothers. In early years the child is usually more closely associated with the mother than with the father.

of the mothers upon their famous sons and daughters. Washington's mother was his companion and tutor. John Wesley, J. A. G. Field, and others too numerous to mention were influenced by their mothers for good while on the other hand, Lord Byron's mother was responsible to a degree for his immorality and scepticism. The influence of the mother is seen in all the actions of mankind. "What is home without a mother?"

ALVIA JAMES HUNTER.

5. Is food (puddings, pies, fruit, cake, etc.) which has wine or any alcoholic liquor put before cooking, liable, or has it ever been known to arouse in a person a love for strong drink? Would a person who had taken cure for drink be liable to have the appetite aroused by eating such things, or the alcoholic principle destroyed by cooking?

I do not believe that the presence of liquor in such cases can become responsible for a pet for liquor. Puddings, etc., often do not contain any of the intoxicating constituents of the liquor used. Many cooks before using the liquor, "burn" it, by which process the alcohol is dissipated and the aromatic principles and water only remain, and these alone are employed. Besides, if liquor, unburnt, is used in pies or sauces that are served hot, most, and in most cases all, of the alcohol, which is very volatile even at the ordinary temperature, evaporates quickly, and very little more than the aroma of the liquor remains. From these combined facts, I deduced that persons, not having already acquired a desire for liquor, will not do so as a result of partaking of dishes into which liquor enters. But persons that were once drinkers and have been cured of the habit, are most certainly running enormous risks of having their former desires renewed, by allowing themselves or by being allowed by others, the taste of liquor in puddings, etc., which may arouse their former craving for liquor. F. A. MOSEBACH.

It is certainly a very dangerous thing to eat foods in which wine or any other alcoholic liquors have been cooked. I have eaten puddings, in which I could not only taste the brandy, but would feel the intoxicating effects in my head afterwards. If one were inclined to like the effect of strong drink, this would certainly increase the desire, and lead to a dangerous use of alcoholic liquors. A person who had taken any of the alcoholic cures ought not to risk eating puddings, or any other foods containing wines, brandies, etc. The intoxicating effects of such beverages are not destroyed by cooking, but if foods are taken hot, rather increases their effect. The only safe method to pursue to prevent becoming a drunkard is "to touch not, taste not, handle not." Using liquors in moderation is a dangerous practice. CHAS. F. COOPER.

The Second Lesson in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD's Free Course of Isaac Pitman's Shorthand appears in this issue. A very large number—probably the largest shorthand class ever known—have begun with us the study of this most practical system. Any reader who is hesitating about beginning the Free Course should decide at once, so as to keep pace with the steady progress of the great body of students. The first lesson appeared in our issue of Jan. 8. These lessons are published every other week during the entire course, and each lesson is self-explanatory and complete.

world and the Church need to-day is the consecrated power and activity of young manhood. Experience is readily acquired, but nothing can take the place of the zeal and enthusiasm of energetic strenuous life. What the young pastor may lack in maturity of judgment and wisdom, may be supplemented by that of the staid church body in deliberation and counsel, but no amount of rich and ripe experience can incite to Christian activity and service an apathetic lifeless Church. The power and force of Christian character, if possessed in a large degree, is itself contagious, and besides making the accomplishment of great results possible, it rouses to active endeavor and positive usefulness the indifferent in Zion. Valuable experience here is the result, not the cause, of the enthusiastic and complete utilization of spiritual force of character for God. WALTER W. HUBBARD.

Call the man of experience, if his experience has ripened and matured his judgment. It is true that the zeal of the young man may lead him to undertake much, but it is oftentimes too much; more than he is able to accomplish. The young man's energy cannot be tempered with the wisdom which comes from experience while the mere fact of years and experience does not deprive a man of zeal in the Lord's business. There are many problems in the management of a church which require calm, dispassionate, wise solution, and such a solution can only come from one whose judgments are based on a knowledge of men and of the world, which knowledge comes only by experience. It is also reasonable to suppose that the tender, intimate knowledge

This is the formative period. The mother's rule, too, is more by love; the father's more by authority. Love prevails. The greater of these is love. Truly, "the hand that rocks the cradle rules the world."

J. T. CRABTREE.

A mother's example is the prime cause of influence, and a mother's influence for a girl, and a father's for the boy, seem greatest because of association; but, as a rule, mothers have the first care of children, and their first thoughts of love and obedience are hers, and being naturally better, nobler, and purer than man, her influence is greater with well-disposed children. The training of unruly children is often left to the father, who often loses his influence by harshness or mistaken ideas of government. From a Christian standpoint, a mother's influence is greatest, for between the two, a large majority will testify to the prayers, teachings and examples of good mothers. MARY ABBOTT.

The influence of the mother upon the children is undoubtedly greater on the whole than that of the father. While there are some few children who are influenced more by their fathers, most of us are indebted to our mothers for our noble ambitions and aspirations. She is the companion, playmate and adviser of our babyhood. The mother gains the confidence and love of her children where the father cannot. Her love for the child is naturally much stronger than the father's, and the child is bound to respond to that love to a greater or less degree. Most of the great names of history were made by the influence

THE OLD LIBERTY BELL

One of the Nation's Precious Heirlooms Sent from Philadelphia to Charleston

INDEPENDENCE HALL

Rise out of bed with broken hearts and sighs
The land is free! The land is free!
But my land not still set all hearts free
For Liberty! Sweet Liberty!

VOICELESS now is the old "Liberty Bell," but the reverberations of the tones it gave forth before it became mute, have not ceased to stir the hearts of the American people. In its permanent home in Independence Hall, Philadelphia, this historic relic has been for generations a shrine of patriotic interest and admiration. It has made several journeys, once to the Columbian Exposition at Chicago, again to the Atlanta Exposition, next to the Cotton Exposition at New Orleans, and now it has been sent, with a pomp and ceremony befitting the high position it holds in the heart of the nation, to the Southern and West Indian Exposition at Charleston, S. C. There it is installed in the Philadelphia Building, where it will remain for several months. Philadelphia has ever been neighborly and generous with her sister cities in lending the bell on great occasions. Its journeyings have always been in the nature of triumphal tours; it has been greeted with honors wherever it went, and every State and city where it has found a temporary home, has held it as a beloved and revered guest. Governors of States, and Mayors, and Councils have received it with elaborate ceremonials, and great crowds of school children, carrying flags and banners, have gathered about it singing their national anthems.

On the occasion of its recent journey, when it was conveyed under distinguished escort and with due civic parade from Independence Hall to the Pennsylvania Railroad station in West Philadelphia, the streets were thronged with people, who cheered as the venerable proclaimer of liberty passed by. While the parade had not been planned to begin until 2 P. M., the bell was taken from its handsome glass case shortly after twelve, and rolled on trucks on the Chestnut street pavement. It was an hour's work lifting the heavy relic by derrick to a great 16-wheeled wagon that had been beautifully decorated to receive it, being literally covered with white bunting, violets and silk flags. Marching beside the car were four stalwart reserve policemen, who will constitute its special Guard of Honor at Charleston. The long procession included, in their order, Superintendent of Police Quirk, Sergeant Reed, a color-bearer, Lieutenant Dungan and mounted police, Fire-Chief Baxter and firemen on foot; First City Troop acting as Guard of Honor, First Regiment, and finally, the members of the City Council in carriages. The long line circled around City Hall in review before the Mayor. A special train of seven cars took the bell to Charleston. The Mayor, Director of Public Works, President of Public Charities, and various other officials, besides the special Council Committee, forming a part of its escort. The arrival at Charleston was greeted with enthusiasm and that city did her best to outshine Philadelphia's patriotism in the civic display of her welcome.

Nothing could better show the spirit of brotherhood restored and regnant in our land than this interchange between Philadelphia and this city of the South, in sight of whose harbor the walls of Sumter frown. There where the first guns of the Civil War were heard the little children are gathering with happy, patriotic anthems around the old "Liberty Bell." Just to look at it, the bell is not, in itself, a thing to waken enthusiasm. It is old, and weather-worn—a cracked bell. It rings no wondrous golden notes; never, perhaps, was its tone very musical. But upon it is this inscription:

Proclaim liberty unto the land and all the inhabitants thereof

the Second Continental Congress, who framed, "First these sacred values are: self might be free and Independent States." Here, too, July 4, 1776, Congress adopted the Declaration of Independence. Here, in 1787, occurred the meeting of the Constitutional Convention, and the drafting and adopting of the Constitution of the United States. Before this time, the building was known as the State House; since then, it has been fitly designated Independence Hall, and the old bell which heralded its memorable transactions, is well called the "Liberty Bell."

The whole neighborhood is rich in recollections of revolutionary times. In the old Congress Hall, corner Sixth and Chestnut streets, the various departments of the Federal Government had their offices in the early days of the republic, and it was here in the room used for the House of Representatives, that Washington, in 1793, was inaugurated President for the second time. In the same place, John Adams, four years afterward, assumed the duties of the Presidential office. Independence Square, in the rear of Independence Hall, was the scene of the first reading to the populace of the Declaration of Independence, on July 8, 1776, by John Nixon, standing on the platform of an observatory erected several years before. In this square the citizens were accustomed to gather for "town meeting" assemblies and outdoor demonstrations. Here were held the meeting to protest against the Stamp Act, and the gathering to insist that tea should not be unloaded at Philadelphia. For many years afterward, the Declaration of Independence was read on Independence Day in this old square and within the sound of the Liberty Bell.

The historians of revolutionary times have recorded how the news of the signing of the Declaration was received with general joy, which found expression in bonfires, illuminations and rejoicings. But the dramatic incident of the old bell, which pealed forth the news, has been lost told by the years. Later throngs filled the streets below, awaiting its message:

See! See! The downy cloud appears
Through all its lengthy line.
As the last beam of the portal
Leaves truth to give the sun
With his small hands upon a throne.
Beneath, with his high
Hark! with deep, clear intonation
Breaks his young voice in the air
Hushed the people's swelling murmur.
Lost the boy's strong, joyous cry
"Ring!" he shouts aloud, "Ring, grandpa, Ring, old ring for Liberty!"
And straightaway at the signal
The old intonation hits his heart.
And sends the good news ringing
Iron music through the land.
How they shouted! What cheering!
How the old bell shook the air
Till the ring of Freedom came
The old, old Liberty Bell
How the windows and the doors
Opened the light to pour
And from the shadows the planets
Fair Liberty arose!
The old bell's tone is sweet
And heard its true intonation
But the spirit it was sent Still lives—forever young.
We'll never forget the intonation
When, "FOR THE SOUTH AND SOUTHWEST"
Rings the old bell's intonation
Which, please God, will come true

THE "LIBERTY BELL" AS IT APPEARS TODAY

Philosophical Society building, founded by Benjamin Franklin in 1727, and upon its membership rolls are many of the names that are enrolled among those of our noblest patriot-heroes and statesmen.

The people of the South will welcome the old Liberty Bell, and while it rests among them, they will cherish it for the sake of the memories it awakens. Beside other bells it may be clumsy and unsightly, its workmanship poor and defective, and its tone cracked and rasping; but they cannot forget that once it awoke, with its deep clangor, the spirit of liberty in the breasts of men, and gave the nation an impulse toward that destiny which, under Divine direction, has made it a beacon light for freedom among the nations of the world.

And this is what the bell did for our country long years ago. In Independence Hall, Philadelphia, where the bell is preserved now simply as a relic, was convened

The Borrowed Ax

TEXT—II. Kings 6: 6:

"THE IRON DID SWIM"

A THEOLOGICAL seminary in The Valley of Palms, near the river Jordan, had become so popular in the time of Elisha, the prophet, that more accommodations were needed for the students. The class-rooms and the dormitories must be enlarged, or an entirely new building constructed. What will they do? Will they send up to Jerusalem and solicit contributions for this undertaking? Will they send out agents to raise the money for a new theological seminary? Having raised the money, will they send for cedars of Lebanon, and marble from the quarries where Ahab got the stone for the pillars and walls of his palace? No; the students propose to build it themselves. They were rugged boys, who had been brought up in the country and who had never been weakened by the luxuries of city life. All they ask is that Elisha, their professor and prophet, go along with them to the woods and boss the job. They start for the work, Elisha and his students. Plenty of lumber in those regions along the Jordan. The sycamore is a stout, strong tree, and good for timber. Mr. Gladstone asked me if I had seen in Palestine any sycamore tree more beautiful than the one we stood under at Hawarden. I told him I had not. The sycamores near the Jordan, are now attacked by Elisha's students, for they must have lumber for the new theological seminary. I suppose some of the students made an awkward stroke, and they were extemporized axmen. Stand from under! Crash! goes one of the trees, and another, and another. But something now happens so wonderful that the occurrence will tax the credulity of the ages, so wonderful that many still think it never happened at all. One of the students, not able to own an ax, had borrowed one. You must remember that while the ax of olden time was much like our modern ax, it differed in the fact, that instead of the helve or handle being thrust into a socket in the iron head, the head of the ax was fastened on the handle by a leathern thong; and so it might slip the helve. A student of the seminary was swinging his ax against one of those trees, and whether it was at the moment he made his first stroke and the chips flew, or was after he had cut the tree from all sides so deep that it was ready to fall, we are not told, but the ax-head and the handle parted. Being near the riverside, the ax-head dropped into the river and sank to the muddy bottom. Great was

The Student's Dismay

If it had been his own, it would have been bad enough, but it did not belong to him. He had no means to buy another for the kind man who had loaned it to him. But God helps the helpless, and he generally helps through some good and sympathetic soul, and in this case it was Elisha, who was in the woods and on the river-bank at the time. He did not see the ax-head fly off, and so he asked the student where it dropped. He was shown the place where it went down into the river. Then Elisha broke off a branch of a tree and threw it into the water, and the ax-head rose from the depths of the river and floated to the bank, so that the student had just to stoop down and take up the restored property. Now you see the meaning of my text: "The iron did swim."

Suppose a hundred years ago some one had told people that the time would come when hundreds of thousands of tons of iron would float on the Atlantic and Pacific—iron ships from New York to Southampton, from London to Calcutta, from San Francisco to Canton. The man making such a prophecy would have been sent to an asylum or carefully watched as incompetent to go alone. We have all in our day seen iron swim. Now, if man can make hundreds of tons of metal float, I am disposed to think that the Almighty could make an ax-head float.

"What," says some one, "would be the use of such a miracle?" Of vast, of infinite, of eternal importance. Those students were preparing for the ministry. They had joined the theological seminary to get all its advantages. They needed to have their faith strengthened. They needed to be persuaded that God can do everything. They needed to learn that God takes notice of little things; that there is no emergency of life where he is not willing to help. Standing on the banks of that Jordan, those students of that day of the recalled ax-head had their faith reinforced, and nothing that they had found out in the class-rooms of that learned institution had ever done more in the way of fitting them for their coming profession.

I hear from different sources that there is a great deal of infidelity in some of the theological seminaries of our day. They think that the Garden of Eden is an allegory, and that Moses did not write the Pentateuch, and that the Book of Job is only a drama, and that the Book of Jonah is an unreliable fish story, and that water was not turned into wine, although the bartender now by large dilution turns wine into water, and that most of the so-called miracles of the Old and the New Testament were wrought by natural causes. When those infidels graduate from the theological seminary, and take the pulpits of America as expounders of the Holy Scriptures, what advocates they will be of that Gospel for the truth of which the martyrs died! Hail the Polycarps and Hugh Latimers and John Knoxes of the twentieth century, believing the Bible is true in spots! Would to God that some great revival of religion might sweep through all the theological seminaries of this land, confirming the faith of the coming expounders of an entire Bible. Was it not a mighty thing for those theological students under Elisha to have impressed upon them the fact that their professor and teacher, Elisha, was from God, and that a law of nature can be revoked or put under, or set aside as the Lord wills it? As easily as we can wind up a watch or put its hands forward or backward, can God do anything he chooses to do with his universe.

The Right to Borrow

Furthermore, in that scene of the text God sanctions borrowing, and sets forth the importance of returning. I do not think there would have been any miracle performed if the young man had owned the ax that slipped the helve. The young man cried out in the hearing of the prophet: "Alas, master! for it was borrowed." He had a right to borrow. There are times when we have not only a right to borrow, but it is a duty to borrow. There are times when we ought to lend, for Christ in his sermon on the mount declared: "From him that would borrow of thee turn not thou away." It is right that one borrow the means for getting an education, as the young student of my text borrowed the ax. It is right to borrow means for the forwarding of commercial ends. Most of the vast fortunes that now overshadow the land were hatched out of a borrowed dollar.

If in any assembly it were requested that those who had never borrowed hold up their hands, none would be lifted; or, if here and there a hand were lifted, we would know that it was a case of inveracity. Borrow? Why, we are borrowing all the time. We borrow from the Lord the sunlight that shows us our way, the water that slakes our thirst, the food that refreshes us three times a day, the pillow on which we slumber. We borrow gladness from our friends. We borrow all elevated surroundings. The Church borrows all its beauty from the Christ who founded it. In our songs and sermons we borrow from the raptures of heaven.

We borrow time. We will borrow eternity. And that constant borrowing implies a return. For what we borrow from God we must pay back in hearty thanks and Christian service, in improvement of ourselves and helpfulness for others. For what we borrow in the shape of protection from good government, we must pay back in patriotic devotion. For what we borrow from our parents in their good example and their hard work wrought for us in our journey from cradle to manhood or womanhood, for all the ages to come we ought to be paying back. The hallelujahs of heaven will be returned for crucifixion agony.

The student wielding that ax in The Valley of Palms did not steal the implement. He expected to return it, and when he saw that he would not be able to return it, he ejaculated the words I have already quoted: "Alas, master! for it was borrowed." There needs to be a more punctilious observance of that which has been borrowed. If suddenly all the world should wake up to this duty, and borrowed things should go back to their owners, what a revolution in libraries, in homes, in churches, in State and National legislature! What books escaping from shelves where they have no right to stay! What pictures leaving walls! What millions of dollars changing banks, leaving the places where they have no right for places where they are due! Pay up, you people who have what does not belong to you. There are cases where that is impossible, and you have not the means to pay, as the student of my text could not have returned the ax-head if a sudden relief had not come. If you cannot pay all, pay part; as no doubt this scholar of Elisha would have returned the handle of the ax, if he could not have returned the head.

Haydon the painter said his ruin began the day he began to borrow money, and he wrote in his diary: "Here began debt and obligation, out of which I have never been and never shall be extricated as long as I live." Doctor Johnson said, "Do not accustom yourself to consider debt only as an inconvenience; you will find it a calamity." We have a right to borrow for the absolute necessities expecting to pay back again, but we ought never to borrow for the luxuries. According to the "Laws of Amasis," in Egypt, if a man died without paying that which he had borrowed, he was deprived all obsequies. If that law were in vogue in our times how many postponed and impossible funerals!

Earning an Education

Furthermore, let us admire these young men of Elisha's theological seminary, for the fact that they were earning their own way. The most of those to-day who are successful in the professions, medicating the sick or advocating the law, or preaching the Gospel, fought their own way on and up. Those are the kind of men who know what education is worth and know how to use it. Many of us remember that in college days the sons of affluent fathers, with plenty of money to spend and horses to drive, and libraries crowded with books never read, and wardrobes that kept them in perplexity as to which of many garments was appropriate for the weather that day, were worth to the world nothing; then and have been worth to the world nothing since while the young man in college who had to economize three months in order to get some book they needed and who could hardly raise money for their diploma have since wrought mightily for God and the truth turning the world upside down because it was wrong side up.

In the summer watering places North, South, East and West, in the great hotels, serving at table and in baggage room, are theological students who are in preparation for the ministry, earning in July and August the means by which they may study the other months of the year. I hail them; I cheer them; I bless them. They will be the Herschels in the observatories, the Dr. Motts in your medical colleges, the Rufus Choates in your court rooms, the Bishop McIlvaines in your pulpits. Let them not now be ashamed of the ax with which they hew the beam for Elisha's seminary.

Those students in the valley of Palms by the Jordan had a physical strength and hardihood that would help them in their mental and spiritual achievements. We who are toiling for the world's betterment need brawn as well as brain, strong bodies as well as illumined minds and consecrated souls. Many of those who are now doing the best work in church and state got muscle and power of endurance from the fact that in early life they were compelled to use ax or plow or flail or hammer, while many who were brought up in the luxuries of life give out before the battle is won. They are keen and sharp of mind but have no physical endurance. They have the ax-head, but no handle. The body is the handle of the soul.

Let all those who toil for their education remember they are especially favored, and if things go against them and the ax-head should fly the helve, that very hindrance may some time turn out advantageously, as the accident by the river Jordan, which seemed to finish the young student's capacity to help build the new seminary, resulted in a splendid demonstration of the power of Elisha's God to help any one who helps himself. No ax that was ever wielded has wrought so well as that ax, the handle and head of which parted.

Natural Law Suspended

Notice, also, how God is superior to every law that he has made, even the strongest law of nature—the law of gravitation. The stick that Elisha threw into the Jordan floated, but the ax-head sank. By inexorable law, it must go down into the depths of the Jordan, yet without so much as a touch, the hard, heavy metal sought the surface. There it is, the floating ax-head. What a rebuke to those who reject miracles on the ground that they are contrary to nature, as though the law were stronger than the God who made the law! Again and again in Bible times was that law revoked. Witness the scene on the banks of the same Jordan, where, in after time, the ax-head sank and rose. Elisha stood there, wearing cape of sheepskin, when there was a mighty stir in the air and a flashing equipage descended. Elisha stepped into it, and on wheels of fire, drawn by horses of fire, he rose. Fifty men for three days searched the mountains, to see if the body of Elisha had not been dropped among the rocks, and picked at by birds of prey, but the search was in vain. The law of gravitation had been defeated.

There Christ stood by his disciples on the Mount of Olives, after his coming out of the sepulchre. No ladders let down for his ascension, but his feet lifted from the hill, and he goes up until the curtain of cloud drops, and he is invisible. Law of gravitation again unharmed. Enoch, Methuselah's father, escaping death, went up bodily, and will have no need of resurrection. So will all the good who shall be still alive at the end of

Rev. F. M. Rains Declares that the Ancient Nation was More Sinned Against than Sinning

HE Rev. F. M. Rains, Corresponding Secretary of the Foreign Christian Missionary Society, of the Disciples of Christ, has just returned from an extended tour of the mission stations of China and Japan. Several months were spent in the countries visited, for the purpose of studying the questions affecting mission work.

"The new school laws in Japan," Mr. Rains said to the writer, "are not so objectionable as was generally supposed. They do not stand seriously in the way of the mission schools, as we thought they did when we first heard of them. In Japan, I was impressed with the fact that the country seems to be in constant preparation for war. Soldiers were everywhere. The standing army numbers nearly 200,000, and this in a territory about the size of California. The navy consists of about fifty-five war vessels, and 25,000 officers and men. Other boats are in course of construction, which will materially increase the naval power. Japan has her eye on Russia, and feels that she can hardly trust that power.

"Postal facilities in Japan may be pronounced exceptionally good, better, in some ways, than in this country, for they have free delivery everywhere. Mail is delivered in cities until ten o'clock at night, and as early as seven o'clock in the morning. In their postal telegraphic system, charge for sending a telegram includes the privilege of replying free of charge. Postal rates are cheaper than in this country, and so are telegraphic rates.

"The Japanese are making wonderful progress in law, in literature, in public schools, and in railways and ship-building. Some of the finest ships on the Pacific are owned by Japanese capitalists. The city of Osaka, numbering about a million people, is now arranging for an exposition, and has invited the United States, England, Germany and other nations to make exhibits! Truly, the Japanese are the Yankees of the East. Our own country is not doing as much business in Japan and China as she can and ought to do. England and Germany are there with their products. We do not go after trade in a business way. We ought to have more American ships to meet the needs of commerce. "China is waking up in many ways. The people are kind and hospitable to foreign visitors. China has been greatly wronged; I do not blame her as I once did. The Chinese gave the missionaries enthusiastic receptions, upon their return to their work after the riots. Different Chinese officials showed me the greatest kindness, and I felt as safe in China as in Cincinnati. The constant talk of partitioning China, and the unreasonable demands made upon her by foreign powers, are suspicious. The Boxer movement there is similar to the old Know Nothing Party in this country. The Know Nothings said, 'America for the Americans'; the Chinese said, 'China for the Chinese.' They went a little further than the Know Nothings did, but they had much pro vocation.

"There is hope of a public school system for they have already some splendid schools, built by government and other large schools conducted by private enterprise. The people are demanding western learning. The presses cannot turn out modern books into Chinese language fast enough. Some of the Viceroy's require examinations in western learning, and the old style examination is passing away.

"The missionary work is more prosperous than ever before. People are turning to the Lord by the thousands. I witnessed some great meetings. Every mission school I saw was crowded to its full capacity with students who pay their board and tuition. Ten or fifteen years ago, when the schools required board and tuition they could hardly secure pupils. Even when they gave board and tuition, it was difficult to fill the schools. St. John's College, in Shanghai, requires its pupils to pay board and tuition three years in advance. The capacity is three hundred. Not long ago there was a vacancy for thirty new students, and eighty-five applied, with sufficient money to pay board and tuition for three years in advance, though only thirty could be accepted. mention this to show the eagerness of the people for education. St. John's College is a mission school, and was a very small one a few years ago.

"Li Hung Chang died while I was in Shanghai. There was no demonstration of sorrow by either foreigners or natives. His death, many believe, is a blessing to the world in general, and to China in particular. He was cunning and shrewd and selfish in the extreme. It seemed that those who knew him best had least confidence in his integrity.

"We have great opportunities in China and Japan!" concluded Mr. Rains. "Doors are open to us as never before, but these doors will be closed against us if we do not enter them at the proper time."

Day of Prayer for Students

For several years, the Christian student movements of Germany, Great Britain, Norway, Sweden, Denmark, Finland, Holland, France, Switzerland, the United States, Canada, South Africa, Australasia, and also Japan, China, India, Ceylon, and other mission lands, have united in observing the second Sunday of February as a Universal Day of Prayer for Students. Reports received from over thirty countries give facts showing that the observance of this day of prayer has been attended with most gratifying spiritual results in all parts of the world. The General Committee of the World's Student Christian Federation, composed of official representatives of all these movements, has called upon all Christian student organizations, to observe Sunday Feb. 9, 1902, as a day of special prayer on behalf of students. It is believed by leaders in Christian work among students that there is indeed great need of united prayer for students. The past few years have witnessed an unprecedented multiplication of Christian student organizations.

Religion at the World's Fair

The movement to secure a religious building at the St. Louis Exposition, 1903, is being vigorously prosecuted by the representatives of the various churches in St. Louis. Addressing President Francis of the World's Fair, a member of the General Committee of Church Workers said: "Religion has done as much for the advancement of civilization within the Louisiana Territory during the past century as education has done. You have provided at least two large buildings for the educational exhibit; the religious workers ask but one." President Francis assured the members of the committee that he was in favor of their proposition. Mr. John Shroers, Chairman of the World's Fair Committee on Education, endorsing the plan for the Religious Building, says:

"It would be proper to consider the foundations of religious faiths, to review the triumphs of religion in all ages, to set forth the present state of religion among the nations and its influence over literature, art, commerce, government and family life; to indicate its power in promoting social purity and its harmony with true science, to show its dominance in the higher institutions of learning, to make prominent the value of the weekly rest-day on religious and other ground, and to contribute to those forces which will bring about the unity of the race in the worship of God and the service of man."

The Purity of Our Children

The New York Society for the Suppression of Vice, has just issued a little pamphlet, which is intended for the pastors of churches throughout the United States. It is an appeal on behalf of nearly 40,000,000 children and young men and women in our schools and various institutions of learning. Mr. Anthony Comstock, the founder of the Society, now asks for a permanent fund for the furtherance of its work. He writes:

Can there be any more important work done than to secure a permanent defence of the integrity and virtue of the millions of youth in this country? More than one-half of the population of the United States are in our institutions of learning, or too young to be thus enrolled. If you add to the 33,842,769 boys and girls in our institutions of learning, the millions of babies under five years of age, then you will get some idea of what a mighty army we have in the individual brigade of this nation; and these children are marching on with firm and irresistible tread from youth to maturity. Every boy and every girl that is corrupted in thought, is a future menace to the peace and good order of this nation.

A Fatal Educational Defect

It is said that a boatman on a lake had, one day, for a passenger a puffed-up and conceited scholar, who fell into conversation with the boatman, and said to him: "Have you ever studied philosophy?" When the answer came, "No," he said: "Then a quarter of your life is lost." Then he said: "Did you ever study science?" The answer being the same, he replied: "Then another quarter of it is lost. Do you know anything about art?" "No." "Well, then another quarter of your life is gone." Just then a violent squall struck the boat, and the boatman turned and said: "Sir, can you swim?" "No," came the answer. "Well, then," the boatman replied, "the whole of your life is lost." The conceited man had not foreseen the emergency in which the power of swimming would be of more avail to him than his accomplishments. It may be hoped that he had not also neglected to provide for another emergency which he should have foreseen, seeing that all must meet it, in which a knowledge of Christ is most essential.

mountain side. In isolated valleys, we find homes to which the foot of no other pastor comes.

In one locality, a Christian woman with a child in her arms became the superintendent of the Sunday School, or which the little community had waited twenty years. Little Marvel L—, the child of an outlaw, who has never seen her, was brought to the infant class to see the wonderful Picture Lesson Roll and hear about Jesus. The missionary called the people together for prayer-meeting at a log-house in the brush, and Marvel's mother, with her young brothers and sisters, heard Christian prayer for the first time in her father's house. The valley where Marvel lives contains 6,000 people, 65 per cent. of whom are Mormons, and the others never had any religion but Mormonism. At the county seat, a devout Presbyterian woman—a doctor's wife—was induced to turn from her barnyard pets, which have been her solace in her exile, to care for another Sunday School, and these two beacon lights yet shine—the only ones in Ashley Valley. An Episcopal minister has now settled there. Dr. Wishard sent us E. J. Hanks, a student at Sheldon Jackson College, and the American Sunday School Union sent him over the mountains to Ashley Valley.

Brigham Young in stone (better than in life) and the gilded angel Maroni, at the head of Main street, Salt Lake City, look down upon thousands of children, who can go to the Sunday School if they will, and here in the city the efforts of the Christian churches exhaust themselves. But the child of the wilderness cannot go if she would. Until the missionary of the American Sunday

Christian influence if they had any, but they are totally destitute of attention, and are waiting for the Gospel. Two families of Marion, in Camas Prairie, purchased their first Bibles of me, and expressed a great desire to know the truth. Woodland, Marion, Oakley, Peoa, Rockport, and Wanship, all towns of Camas Prairie, have none of them an evangelical service of any kind.

The large dance hall witnesses the sum of life in Camas. The little old Mormon Church holds less than fifty people. The heartless devil goes with his cross and knows absolutely nothing of the Christian world, and the Christian world knows nothing of him. About 90,000 others, of school age in Utah (from six to eighteen), are growing up with him to make American homes.

Our Union Sunday School continues to be the only evangelical light in that sadly-neglected place. The devoted Superintendent, Mrs. Jas. P. Johnson, a Presbyterian, has for four years held up the torch of Gospel light, to guide the little feet in ways of truth. Meanwhile, the Union Missionary servant of all churches—your servant and Christ's—out through the rocky passes, or guided by Fenno, the Ute Chief, away up the Duchesne, goes seeking the neglected places and trying to save the children. Where you cannot found churches, speed the Sunday School Missionary.

Mental and Moral Measurements

IN opening up a New Year, the second in the new decade of the new century, it is well to note the mental and moral situation of our country, and the world at large. As merchants and large business firms at this season take inventory of their stock, to know their exact status and profits and losses, it is well to know also where we stand as to our possessions in things more valuable than mere material good. Are we rising in spirituality? Are we more intellectual? Are nations coming into closer friendly relations? Are the millionaires of the world more generous and regard themselves as God's almoners? Are the great avenues that lead to crime, poverty and social distress, narrowing? Are the governments of the world studying more and more political purity and righteous administration of good, wholesome laws? These are some of the great essentials that measure off real goodness and greatness. As to the religious phase, Jesus Christ never had as many followers, and his name and work were never so widely spread as to-day; but as to its leading to an increased spiritual dynamical force and working evangelism is another question. Knowledge and grace are two distinct factors. A mere dead intellectualism is not the world's great need, but with higher intellectuality conjoined with a vital spiritual force, we believe there is a deeper spiritual type of religious character to-day, and less agnostic and sceptical philosophy than at the opening of the last century, and the tide of religious feeling is rising steadily, but not silently, only its forms of activity have changed. In the range of our intellectual culture, we are prepared to say with one of our foremost thinkers, President Patton, of Princeton, "in its essence its spirit is not irreligious, for the great concepts and doctrines of to-day are at bottom religious." Nations are, as a whole, studying the larger interests of peace and good will, not to a few sections of our world, but to the maintenance of harmony between the great powers, and while there may seem to be great appalling ruin in allowing a prolonged conflict, such as at present rages in South Africa, the whole trend of affairs and non-interference with Great Britain is proof that the main purpose of the powers is to avoid much more serious hostilities between themselves.

"Filling Up the Cup"

SOME young men sat in one of the Rathskellers on Pennsylvania avenue at the Nation's Capital, to see the old year out. Along the elegantly decorated walls were numerous frescoed mottoes. Among them was this one, that was evidently a favorite, by its being so often quoted by the gay young fellows: "Fill up the cup that clears to-day of past regrets." As every new bumper was drank, and new calls for the waiters' services, the jovial fellows would sing out: "Fill up the cup! Fill up the cup!" It was to clear away their past regrets—regrets of failures—broken vows, sad disappointments, and all the humiliations of the dying year! They were bound to open up the new era of time with a clear sky, and have only sunshine in 1902?

There is one word, however, in that motto that was least thought of, which, if it had been heeded, would have revealed to these gay men their folly. It is the word "To-day." We grant that a drunken stupor may sink into oblivion the regrets of the hour, but only to double and intensify the regrets and sorrows of the morrow! Thousands cling to the strange delusion that filling up the cup of strong drink is the cure for sorrow, sadness and desperate hours! Alas, it is filling up another cup of remorse, shame, disgrace, pain, and despair! The more drink, the greater the number of after regrets. To succeed in having a bright outlook and unclouded sky in 1902, dash into ten thousand shivers the cup of hell's brewing, young man, and if one regret is left, let it be that you did not smash the enemy of your happiness and success sooner! Drink drains your body of physical vigor! Drink saps your vitality. Drink empties your purse, and fills your home and your best friends with pain! Drink clouds the mind, and ruins all your intellectual strength! Drink is the devil's panacea for distress, and generally ends in beggary! It is one of Satan's falsehoods—the wine-cup never cleared away one of your past regrets, but makes certain the utter destruction of all that should be precious to a young man! It means the soul's wreck, for "no drunkard can hope to reach heaven unrepentant!"

For this New Year, there are other cups to fill that bring no regrets, only the sweet, calm sunshine of God's favor. Fill up the cup of another's joy, and you will find gladness in your own bosom! There are human hearts all about you whose cups are empty, and to take what has hitherto been spent in folly, and pour into them a little of life's necessities will cause your own to overflow with happiness!

Give a loaf to the needy, and your soul will be fed and realize divine love! Help some less favored young man out of employment to find a situation, and your own hard tasks will be more easily accomplished! Drain the cup of a widow's tears, or an orphan's cup of anguish, and you will fill your own with their benedictions, and the New Year with heaven's most radiant sunshine.

Dealing with Crime

CRIMEOLOGY is now a science. Pauperism is reduced to a known basis of cause and effect. We understand that Christ's statement, "the poor ye have with you always," is essentially true, and as we have had such in the past must also in the future. But the institutions that rise constantly on every hand to relieve human distress, and the means now employed to detect crime, and deal properly with the criminal element in society, assure us that, measured proportionately according to density of population and congestion of some of our metropolitan centres, the avenues leading to vice and evil in varied forms are much more narrow to-day than in 1802.

Civic Righteousness

PURITY of politics is a power for righteousness second to no other factor in advancing the Kingdom of Christ. If the blood be poisoned, the body is doomed to speedy disintegration. Pure blood means vital power. Clean ballots are creators of civic centralized righteousness. Our cities are to be saved, if saved at all, by fulfilling the great law of love in doing justly and upholding righteousness against mere partisanship. We are not to be satisfied with what seems to govern, but what will uplift the law of God for controlling the life of our great municipalities. This we believe is more and more possessing the national conscience, and the whole trend of our political life seems to be toward ideal governments—local and national.

The new year, 1902, is far in advance of the brightest dreams of optimists who lived in the year 1892, and Pantheists, materialists, and gross forms of infidelity, are less and still lessening, and while there is not perfect harmony in the whole religious situation, yet everything seems to be approaching nearer and nearer to that "one divine event to which the whole creation moves," the ultimate enthronement of Jesus Christ as King of kings and Lord of lords.

"A Beautiful Evil"

IT was New Year's Day, and in one of the elegant mansions that grace the avenues in the West End, a circle of young ladies were receiving callers. To say they were beautiful is commonplace, for all that could lend enchantment to the day had been most carefully studied and discussed—dresses, flowers, viands, fruits, and the wines. The parlor was magnificent in all its appointments, and the decorations made it a fairy scene. The table was spread with immaculate linen and groaned beneath the load of delicacies. The coffee sent forth its aroma! Music lent its sweet strains, and the merry spirits of these fair receivers made the mansion ring with expressions of joy! Among the callers were some young men, students at college in a distant city, now home for the holidays. A deep religious interest had been manifest in the college, and several young men had resolved to enter a new life, and had resolved that the New Year should be marked by more earnest work in their studies, and consecration to Christ!

Two of the young men who were calling, after formal introductions and pleasant exchange of greetings, were then invited to partake of refreshments. These two had been the subjects of deep religious impressions, and resolved upon one thing—that no drink, such as wine, champagne, or any intoxicating beverage, should ever touch their lips again. It was their solemn New Year vow! They had made other calls, and had declined courteously and repeatedly, and only tasted lemonade water or coffee. But, alas! here they met their Waterloo—a moral pressure too great was brought to bear upon them, and they succumbed. These young ladies, now so lovely, and who formed the entrancing circle, had other years been students in the same High School with the young collegians. One of their number, the most vivacious and full of wit, with smiles insisted that young men drink just a little champagne. It was declined. But the jeweled hand of the fair heiress great wealth held the glass and looked grieved at young man's refusal. Just a hint was given in sarcasm about being puritanic since going to a New England college, and other institutions were not so straitlaced, and again proffered the glass with even more winsomeness. He yielded, and then also his friend. Both said it was not to be repeated; but the old appetite was aroused, and ere night came on they were more than hilarious. They went reeling at dawn to bed, to sleep off their drunken stupors. It was the beginning of wrecked manhood and a ruined immortality. The course at college was changed from entering the sacred profession, and after being conditioned again and again in their studies were finally dismissed for intoxication.

No greater wrong can be perpetrated under the guise of hospitality, friendship or entertaining during New Year's than this temptation to drink. Beauty bewitched! Almost any young man can stand up and in determination refuse one of his own sex; but when the temptation comes from the fair and beautiful it is subtle and often fatal.

Banish from sideboards this demon wine! Better branded as inhospitable and shabby than ruin the souls of others. Better be regarded by leaders of fashion as ultra in your views of entertaining than blight to eternity the deathless souls of those you entertain. Young ladies, above all others, should be the last to tempt, for retributive justice may one day bring honor to them a ruined father, or that loved brother who has been their pride as once one of nature's noblest young men.

Wireless Telegraphy

MESSAGES flashed across the sea by means of wireless telegraphy! One holds one's breath at the wonder of it, at the miracle it seems! Ages ago would have been thought supernatural, and the wizard who should have predicted it would have been burned at the stake for their presumption. We, awe-struck as we are, accept it and expect greater marvels, as electricity becomes better understood, and more and more is harnessed as a force to the day's work of the world.

There has been a wireless telegraphy, as swift, as certain, as amazing, ever since the morning stars sang together, ever since a sleeping lad with a desert bed and a wayside stone for a pillow, saw angels ascending and descending between earth and heaven, ever since our Lord walked in Galilee, ever since he arose from the tomb and went back to the Father. Wonderful wireless telegraphy of prayer! It far surpasses any achievement of modern science, and transcends the uttermost results of modern inventiveness. For prayer summons at once and without disappointment an almighty arm to assist us in our extremity, and often the response is swifter than the cry, and the help anticipates the plea.

Cordial Appreciation

Dr. M. B., Cleveland, O., writes: "THE CHRISTIAN HERALD surpasses every paper I have any knowledge of in the liberality of its premiums. We like the paper itself aside from the premiums, and take pleasure in saying a good word for it at every opportunity."

A Marvelous Achievement

Permit me to express my great pleasure with and astonishment at your beautiful Art Portfolio, just at hand. They are indeed wonderful, and those of my friends who are not in the circle of your beneficiaries, as subscribers, are much surprised at your ability to dispense such gifts. As I cross the bay here on the ferry and back in the mountains, I see people busy over THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. It is truly a marvelous achievement.

THE BIBLE AND THE NEWSPAPER

New York's Railroad Horror

ONE of the most serious railroad accidents that New York has had in many years, was that which, on January 8, cost fifteen lives and injured about two score persons, occurred in the notorious tunnel, which is long been the dread of travelers entering New York by the New York, New Haven and Hartford Railroad. A train bound for the South Norwalk Local Express, left Danbury, Conn., at six in the morning, taking up many passengers at Stamford, New Rochelle, and other stations. It was due at the Grand Central Station at 8:17 A. M. It reached the tower Fifty-ninth street, at the end of the tunnel, in safety, and was there signalled to stop, and then to advance slowly. Following this train was one from White Plains, signals were set to stop it, but the tunnel was full of steam and fog, and it is supposed that the engineer could not distinguish them until too late. He put on the brakes, but his engine crashed into the car of the train ahead, which was full of passengers. It was utterly smashed, that the firemen and police, who were quickly on the scene, easily pulled it to pieces. Fifteen mangled bodies—fourteen men and one woman—lay there. Many passengers were pinned under the wreck, while those who could move were trying to crawl through the broken windows. Ambulances were summoned from the nearest hospitals, and crowds of men worked hard to rescue passengers who were still living. Some of those, it is feared, will die, as they had to undergo amputations of their limbs, which are always dangerous when the patient is suffering from other injuries and nervous shock. A thorough investigation is being made of the catastrophe with the object of fixing the blame. It is thought that a law may be passed by the Legislature, compelling the directors of the road to use electric locomotives in the tunnel, so as to get rid of the smoke which comes from the engines now in use, and so fills the badly ventilated tunnel that it is difficult for the engineers to distinguish the signals. In this instance, the engineer of the rear train says he could not see the light, and when the fireman, who could see it from his side of the cab, told him of it, he applied the brakes at once. He is a sober, careful man, with an excellent record, but he was not familiar with that particular part of the road. Whatever may be the result of the investigation and of the effort to force the managers of the road to take proper precautions against future catastrophes, the first feeling of all hearts is one of sorrow and distress for the poor creatures who were killed without a moment's warning. Would that among the millions who travel daily to and fro and are liable to such an end, there might be many who, warned by this calamity, may make their peace with God while they have time and opportunity!

Be ye also ready; for in such an hour as ye think not the Son of Man cometh (Matt. 24: 44).

How Electric Waves Travel

An interesting lecture recently given by Professor Fleming explains the principle of the wireless telegraphy of Marconi. The professor has been making experiments in the comparison of light waves with electric waves, and has discovered that both are waves, in the ether, which is believed to fill all space. The waves have about the same speed of 186,000 miles a second, and the electric, like the light waves, bend around an obstacle. Thus, although the curvature of the sea midway between Newfoundland and England is one hundred and ten miles above an imaginary straight line joining those points, the electric waves would bend uniformly with the surface. The water of the sea is impervious to the electric waves, and the upper strata of air being highly rarefied, is also an obstacle to them, so the electric waves are confined between the two. Professor Fleming believed that if the impulse was strong enough, a wave might be sent any distance, sandwiched between the two opacities, and it might be that means would yet be found of sending it clear around the earth. If that achievement is ever accomplished, we shall learn that it was unnecessary to lay cables under the sea, as a way was provided above the water that the electric current could traverse. Happily the world did not have to wait for scientists to discover the analogous truth that a way of communication between heaven and earth was open to man, and that the power of the Son of God was not at all the power of the Son of Man. It is a power which cannot be measured by any standard of human knowledge. Christ taught it necessary to lay the foundation of that power.

The Secret of Death

A statement so startling as that, made before the American Physiological Society by Prof. Lopus, would be deemed at first, by any one, a mere scientific authority. It is nothing less than that by experiments he had discovered the secret of death. Death, Professor Lopus affirms, is not a mere passive process, a simple breaking down of tissues, as it has been regarded, but an active agent, born with the birth of the egg, and destined, if not checked, to gain the upper hand of the life instinct and bring about extinction. In the course of time the life agent grows weak with age.

While the death agent gains strength, and finally acquires the mastery. He went on to say that he had experimented on eggs, and had found that certain chemical agents, which he called "death agents," would destroy the life agent, and thus bring about death. He said that he had found that the death agent was a very active agent, and that it was not a mere passive process, but an active agent, born with the birth of the egg, and destined, if not checked, to gain the upper hand of the life instinct and bring about extinction. In the course of time the life agent grows weak with age. While the death agent gains strength, and finally acquires the mastery. He went on to say that he had experimented on eggs, and had found that certain chemical agents, without any plans of their own, for God revealed it in his Word. Neither is it beyond the sea, that thou shouldst say, Who shall go over the sea for us? But the work is very high unto thee, in thy mouth, and in thy heart (Deut. 30: 13).

A Jailer Deceived

The warden of a prison in Indianapolis, Ind., is deeply mortified by the escape of a prisoner who was in his charge. He was confined on the charge of stealing a cow and was awaiting his trial. Some of his friends had offered to become bail for him, but he strongly asserted his innocence and declared he would never leave the prison until his good name was vindicated. A few days ago, the jailer going his rounds, saw a group of prisoners playing cards in front of the door of the cell in which the man was confined. Looking in, the jailer saw the prisoner on his knees, with his back turned toward him. He knew that the prisoner had posed as a pious man, and had indeed often occupied the pulpit of a church, so he concluded, as it was doubtless intended that he should, that the prisoner was praying for the gamblers outside his cell door. The man kept his attitude of prayer until darkness set in and the hour for retiring came. The next morning the jailer discovered that he had been hoodwinked. The prisoner had not been praying, but digging a hole in the floor of his cell, through which he had escaped. It is believed that he will be retaken, but whether he will be so or not, it is certain that such a man is in awful danger of a more terrible fate than any he could have notably potassium cyanide, would check the progress of the death agent, and thus prolong life. Such a statement reads like the boast of one of the ancient alchemists, but the eminence of the professor commands respect. If he really has found a sure means of prolonging life, how ardently will it be sought and used! Yet the offer of eternal life which Christ makes to all who believe in him is often neglected.

A Living Man Legally Dead

A romantic case is set down for trial before Justice Scott, in the Supreme Court in New York. It is the application of a man fifty-two years of age, who, thirty years ago, was married in Newark, N. J. He was unable to make much financial success there, so went to New York, where he lived for some time, but was unable to make much success. For two years, he had been receiving letters from various Western by which the Christian gains a heavenly inheritance. That goes to people who are dead to the things of this world.

There are many who are dead to the things of this world, but who are not dead to the things of the next world.

CHRISTIAN MANLINESS

A Sermon by
REV. CHARLES M. SHELDON, of Topeka, Kan.

TEXT—Ezekiel 2: 1:

"And he said unto me, Son of man, stand upon thy feet, and I will speak unto thee"

GOD cannot use men to do his will who try to crawl through the world on all fours. When he wants any great work done he always says, "Son of man, stand upon thy feet, and I will speak unto thee." The erect attitude of the upright man is the first thing necessary to gain the ear of God when any particularly great thing is to be done for him. Therefore, let us consider some truths concerning the dignity and power of a man when he stands erect in conscious integrity, face to face with God. Man can serve God best only when he is entirely free from the burden of sin. There are countless things that keep men from hearing God's voice. There is the burden of actual guilt, of crime, of law-breaking, of civil transgression. This is visited with punishment upon the man. On the other hand, there is the burden of selfishness, which takes a thousand forms, and for which the statute law of society has no punishment. The law of society may not be able to touch a man who is at heart guilty of enormous wickedness but who does not violate any statute of civil authority. Nevertheless, the punishment for all transgression, civil or moral, falls on the man with inevitable results. The man is always borne down by the degradation of his transgression to a place where God cannot and will not use him to do great things. Therefore, all burden of sin must be removed before humanity can become the instrument to fulfil the mighty will and plan of God for the world.

It is this fact which is keeping the world to-day from the performance of mighty deeds. It is out of the question to suppose that society will be lifted up into a position of spiritual power until the individuals who make up society stand upon their feet, and give ear to the voice of the God, who made us all for the doing of his glorious will. Let us see if that is not so.

Civilization Cannot Regenerate

What we call civilization, progress, refinement, education, do certain things for the race. They enable men to accomplish marvels of architecture, to originate wonderful machinery, to write splendid books, to compose heavenly music. But there are certain things which civilization, refinement, progress, will not and cannot do. A man may play an organ and be a selfish demon in his heart. A man may write powerful books and be a scoffer of God. A man may perform miracles of invention and never offer a prayer. A man may be famous in public history and infamous in his private life. A man may be able to surround himself by all the power and elegance and building of the most progressive things in science and music and architecture, and still be in his own inner life a monster of selfishness or self-indulgence. I am not crying down progress and science and civilization. I am only trying to show that these things do not in themselves have any power to change or better men in their hearts.

So we cannot look to anything like the outward circumstances of society for the transforming power that shall regenerate society. There is nothing in it of a regenerating character. The world needs to-day the same regenerating that it needed before electricity, steam, photographs, telephones and liquid air marvels were known to the human race. Men still disobey God. They still break his day of rest. They still indulge in selfishness. They still commit awful crimes. And the first and most important need of the human race to-day is not more art and science and architecture and marvels of invention—the greatest and most important need of the world is the casting off of its sin, the rising to its feet, the erect attitude before God, that he may speak to the heart and send man out to do the great work which must be done before this world is brought into harmony with God's purposes, progressive, powerful.

All this is the work, not of man but of God. We must have a more profound conviction of our need of the Divine element in human lives. Who can forgive sins but God only? No one. No thing. No surroundings. No circumstances. God, God alone. And there is nothing that we need so much as to cry out mightily to God to remove all the burden of our indifference and transgression and evil example, and raise us to our feet that we may be in a fit position to hear his voice and do his will.

I do not believe in a cheap and superficial religious excitement. I have little confidence in the appeal so often made to the surface emotions of men. But I do believe most profoundly in the need of a regenerating revival of God's spirit throughout the world. I do believe that we must witness something like the Day of Pentecost in this beginning of the twentieth century before we shall be fitted to stand upon our feet and run into the century with the glad tidings of the Son of God. And I shall welcome as water in a thirsty land the coming of the Holy Spirit in a tide, not of excitement, but of oceanic fullness and grandeur, which shall sweep men of selfishness and power, and money and social standing, into the regenerated living they need, and fill the church with a new flood of

Enthusiasm and Sacrifice

Let us not be afraid of asking God for a revival. Let us be afraid of asking him for anything less. For anything less will not answer the needs of the times. Let us by his help put aside all the sin that hinders our doing his will. That is the first need of the world, of our nation, of our State, of our city, of our church, of our hearts. I do not look for any change for the better in our politics, our civilization, our churches, until the Holy Spirit has come again, and men have said, "The Lord he is the God! The Lord he is the God!"

There are certain things which we, Christian disciples, can do to hasten that event and put ourselves more into the position where God can speak with us and send us on his errands. Let us mention a few of them.

1. We can be more loyal in our faith and be the same Christians in time of adversity as in prosperity.

Dr. Dixon, of Boston, recently told me the story of a man who put a weather-vane upon his house, and painted on it in large letters the words: "God is Love." One of the man's neighbors saw it, and said to him: "Friend, you have put an eternal truth on a very changeable thing." "That may be," replied the man. "But God is Love, no matter which way the wind blows." That is what we Christians and church members, disciples of Christ need to have, the constant faith, which says under all circumstances, "God is Love, no matter which way the wind blows." And not only say it, but live it out. It is when the storm beats hard and the coast is strewn with wrecks that Christ, the Life-saver ought to be most precious to us, and should shine out most clearly. It is no credit to a man to be good-natured, happy, calm, active in service, while he is well, making money and living in a comfortable home. It is when he is overwhelmed with losses, when his home is in danger of foreclosure of mortgage, his health breaking down, that his test comes. What is his Christian faith good for then? That is the measure of its value. Will it stand by him? Will he stand by it? Of what earthly value is it to the man unless at just such a crisis he can rise, and stand upon his feet, and hear what God has to say to him.

Before God can use us as a people to do any great work in this city or State, we must get off the ground, where we have been creeping in our low physical pleasures, and give the strength and beauty of our lives to the things that are most necessary for humanity.

This community knows that I am not in the habit of de-claiming against card-playing and dancing and similar forms of entertainment, as if they were the greatest sins of the world. I do not so regard them. But I do feel that if the men and women of this city, many of them members of the churches and confessed disciples of Jesus, do not cease spending so much valuable time in useless amusements, God will never use them to do any great things for him. The Progressive Whist parties, the ceaseless round of card-playing and dancing clubs that plan to make this winter a "gay one," as society calls it, are destructive to the spiritual growth of the people. A Christian cannot indulge in these things and expect to be used of God to great things in the Kingdom.

REV. CHARLES M. SHELDON

How far along have we gone in our civilization when we can find no better way to spend time and strength than to shut ourselves up in artificially lighted rooms and spend two hours at a time shuffling cards and talking nonsense, while the great sinning, dying, needy world of humanity, in a thousand forms, stretches out its hands for help, and Christ has bidden us go into the harvest fields and reap for him. Men and women of this city, I appeal to you in the name of him who came not to be ministered unto but to minister, will you not get up out of this heavy, selfish atmosphere of the ground, where you have been willing to crawl for your own amusement, up into the place where God can use you to his glory and the building up of his kingdom in this city? Men and women, grown up, do not need to play so much. God did not make us to play. He made us to work. Childhood is for play. Old age is for rest. Eternity is for pleasures evermore. But grown up manhood and womanhood is for sturdy, happy work, doing God's will, lifting of the world's burdens, doing our share to make a better place to live in. Let us stand upon our feet and let God use us to bless this city that we love. He never can do it, he never will do it, as long as we are content to give the best and the strongest and the finest strength we have to playing like little children with little things that ought to have been laid aside many long years ago.

In the matter also of absence of evil, in the matter of personal drinking habits, we need to cleanse ourselves. God can never use those members of churches who still continue to claim their personal liberty, selfishly setting the example before a community. There are many men and women in this city who drink intoxicating liquors, claiming their privilege to do so on the score that it does not hurt them. My brothers, my sisters, do you think that God can speak you to do great things so long as you continue to set the example before your children or before the youth of this city?

God wants to use citizens who can stand upon their feet and look him in the face without even the suspicion of doing wrong. We are told to avoid even the appearance of evil. We need to govern our lives not by the law of expedience but by the law of service. It is not enough for a man or a organization to simply keep from breaking a law technically. We need to be living and doing and saying things positive on the side of temperance and law and order, with no possible room for suspicion of our motives or actions. God citizenship calls before all else for good, clean, wholesome example. We need more men who are able to stand upon their feet in this matter. Men who are so anxious for the sobriety and thrift and good standing of other men, that they are glad to give up personal gratification of bad habits and refuse their sanction of them in others, even when the themselves do not indulge. We cannot keep ourselves to clean for examples. We need the uplift of an unselfish broad principle of divine action in us, which, like Paul, will neither eat meat nor drink wine nor do anything to cause our brother to stumble or be offended.

2. There is need of a renewed consecration, that all the men possess shall be used to build up the kingdom of God. If Christians would spend as much money to build up the Kingdom as saloon men spend to build up their business, the world would be converted in ten years. Between 1880 and 1890, the average annual increase of wealth of church members in the United States was $434,790,000. (Our Country Pg. 228, last edition.) A tenth part of that sum wisely spent on the slums of New York, Boston, and Chicago would wipe them out of existence. New and modern tenements, model kindergartens, people's palaces, like the one in Whitechapel aggressive University extension work, would solve the problem of the slum, and in a decade it would be a thing of ancient history. But all these things cost money. Yes, it may sound strange, but it takes

Money to Make the World Better

Christianity cannot win its victories without the aid of the great god of mammon. It takes a good deal of money to run churches and colleges, and kindergartens and model tenements and missions among the negro, the Indian, the Chinaman and the foreigner in the city. The Christian who goes into the slums or among the foreign element to raise them up, and transform them into intelligent, useful citizens, and tries to do it with spiritual strength alone, is working at tremendous odds. The liquor power and the political power and the press power are all using money with a lavish hand. Christianity must use it with the same hand, or it is simply engulfed and overwhelmed by its antagonists. And this is as God would have it. He is teaching us in this age that all things belong to him. The gold and silver and land and houses are his, and he is teaching us that only as we give him all can we hope to conquer the world by the use of his property.

It seems sometimes to me that all we need at this age of the world to carry on the work of Christ to glorious victory is money. We have men and women, thousands of them, who are consecrated, willing, able. If the church would provide the means, it can easily find the men. There are plenty of splendidly-equipped young men and women in the United States ready this minute to go anywhere on God's earth, and live to build up the kingdom of Christ. But how can they go except they are sent, and how can they be sent without the money to pay their fare and support them and their work when they reach the place? Railroads, steamship lines, landlords, owners of materials for schools, colleges and churches are not in the habit of furnishing these necessities for nothing. Missions cost. Christianity must pay as everything else pays. And this very moment one of our most useful and necessary departments of Christian power in the United States is cutting down its educational and training work one-third, simply because the Christian people of the country are not willing to pay the bills. The Christian world needs to stand upon its feet in this matter, and hear God's voice saying, "The earth is mine, and the fullness thereof. The world and they that dwell therein." All our praying and preaching and singing won't convert the world unless we go down into our pockets and give freely of our substance. "Freely ye have received. Freely give."

Ready for Service

"Son of man, stand upon thy feet and I will speak with thee." That is the attitude of a man who is ready to run on God's errands. When a man starts to run he doesn't sit down in a chair at the point of starting nor recline on a couch. He stands upon his feet. He is in a position to get a good start. That is what God is saying to the world to-day. "The King's business requireth haste." He cannot use laggards nor loafers nor lazy men. Men on their feet eagerly listening to know what God's voice shall command—these are the men God wants to use, they are the men he does use and will use. "Stand upon thy feet." Free thyself from all sin burdens that make thee stoop and stagger. "Stand upon thy feet." Look God in the face free from all suspicion of comradeship with evil. "Stand upon thy feet." Be free from the entangling impediments of selfish money using, and consecrate all things to his purposes. "Stand upon thy feet." Be ready to do his bidding quickly and carry his message of love with glad haste to the nations that sit in darkness without God and without hope in the world. And he will speak to you. It will be something wonderful he will have to say, for God never speaks to a man who stands upon his feet in sinless integrity without giving the man a message of wonderful power and sweetness and courage. His message will be either, "Son, go work to-day in my vineyard and I will be with thee," or it will be, "Son of man, I have commissioned thee to save another, or lift up another, or conquer all hell in my name. Go, and the Lord of hosts shall go with thee."

The Lord grant that this day we may all stand upon our feet before him in conscious integrity, our hearts filled with love to God and man and our lives throbbing with the divine music of his voice, which speaks to us as friend talks with friend.

In his interesting book, AMERICAN ANTIQUARIANISM, issued 1876, H. C. Tracy Townsend gives much information concerning these customs, and also relative to the part which coins and ornaments play in betrothing and wedding. When a young man has acquired sufficient means for a marriage dowry, he tells his father, and, the latter approving the proposed step, the youth next asks his mother to select a wife for him. If all goes well, a portion of the dowry is paid on the groom's behalf, and the remainder retained to be paid to the wife, in the event of her divorce. The father of the betrothed girl is expected to give a like sum, and this is added to the amount paid by the groom, the entire sum being the bride's portion, to invest as she pleases in coins, jewelry and dresses. As banks are unknown in the country, the bride is her own banker, and, except in rare cases, usually invests all her wealth in personal adornment.

TRANSFORMED MEN The First Persecution

INTERNATIONAL SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON FOR FEB. 2
ACTS 4: 1-31

By Dr. and Mrs. Wilbur F. Crafts

GOLDEN TEXT: "THERE IS NONE OTHER NAME UNDER HEAVEN GIVEN AMONG MEN WHEREBY WE MUST BE SAVED." ACTS 4: 12

Forefathers' dinner in Washington, in December last, Hon. John W. Foster, ex-Secretary of State, spoke of the surprising fact that not only hasty newspaper editors, but even a distinguished ambassador and a Justice of the Supreme Court, have recently expressed the opinion that because China has not welcomed Christian missionaries, but has persecuted them instead, they ought to be withdrawn; forgetting that under such a rule our European ancestors would have been left in barbarism, since the Britons were no more willing to accept Christianity than the Chinese are to-day. He might have gone further back, and shown how Paul, in his first missionary work in pagan Europe, at Philippi, encountered persecution from false priests, whose victims were being rescued (Acts 16: 16-24). Or he might have gone back to the first persecution of the Church, in to-day's lesson, which was encountered in the first week of Church history, Persecution, instead of suggesting that a church has made a wrong move, is a token that it is of true apostolic quality.

The Lesson Story

It would be a strange sight if a prisoner, brought into court, accused of some bad deed, should suddenly turn and charge the judge and the whole court with a greater crime. But this is just what happened when Peter and John were brought into the supreme court of the Jews, called the Sanhedrin. Let us enter with Peter and John. But in order to start with them we must go to the prison, where they have been spending the night. They were arrested about six o'clock in the afternoon preceding the story of our lesson, as they were standing in Solomon's Porch, which was a part of the Temple near to the Beautiful Gate. The arrest was made by the Captain of the Temple, under orders from the High Priest, who was jealous of the interest and the attention which the people were giving to Peter and John. And beside, the priests were not willing to have the people taught that Jesus was the Son of God. Peter and John were taken to the prison by an underground way, for fear there might be a mob among the people, who believed in them because they had healed the lame man at the Beautiful Gate. This miracle had made them gather in a great crowd to see the healed man and hear the apostles preach. It was then they had been arrested.

But now it is about nine o'clock in the morning. With Peter and John and the man who was healed of his lameness—he can walk as well as anybody now—let us go into the court room, which is a part of the Temple. We count the judges seated in a half circle, and find that there are seventy, beside the High Priest, who sits in the centre. He has on his golden clothes. He should be a true and good judge, for on his cap are engraved, on a golden band, the words, "Holiness to the Lord." But alas! the inside of his head does not correspond with the outside. This seems to be a great occasion, for the old High Priest, Annas, father of Caiaphas, the present High Priest, has come into the court, and with him some distinguished members of his family. We look at Peter and John as they are brought to stand in front of the High Priest, and with them the man who was healed. There is no look of fear in the faces of Peter and John. They look straight at the High Priest when he asks them how they were able to cure the lame man. "By what power and by what authority have ye done this?" In a loud voice, so that all could hear, Peter answers: "Jesus, the Messiah, gave us the power to do it; he himself did it through us; the same Jesus whom you crucified. He has risen from the dead, and gone to live with God, his Father." And Peter goes on to say: "Jesus is like that most beautiful stone in the Temple, long rejected, but now highest of all." They knew well which stone he meant; that it was one which had lain in the dust a long time when the Temple was being built, because no one knew where to put it, until at last, when the Temple was nearly done, one stone was missing, the crowning stone. To that place was raised the neglected, rejected stone. The High Priest and his court are not pleased to hear such honor given to Jesus. And how angry they look as Peter tells them that they are murderers! Any moment they may send Peter and John back to prison and cause their death; but Peter talks on; he is telling them that only through Jesus, whom he calls Christ, meaning the true Messiah, the Son of God, can anyone be saved from the guilt and power and love of sin. The High Priest and his court do not like this, for they think the offering of sacrifices will secure forgiveness of sins.

But Peter is saying: "There is none other than the name of Jesus given among men whereby we must be saved." How full of surprise are the faces of the High Priest and his court, as they look at Peter and John, that they should dare to speak such words to them. The Captain is told to take them out for a little while, and the man who had been healed goes with them. The judges want to advise together what they had better do to punish Peter and John. In a short time the Captain is told to bring them back, and the High Priest says: "We are not going to send you back to prison, but we make a law for you that you shall not say anything more to the people about Jesus." Peter and John bravely answer: "We will obey God, and not you." Just then the court would have liked to say they must go back to prison again, but they were afraid to say so, because they thought the people would be angry with them. So again the High Priest says: "It is our law that you shall not talk to the people about Jesus. You may go free now." Let us go with Peter and John and the man who was healed to the house where many of the friends of Jesus are gathered together, praying that no harm shall come to Peter and John. We go into the house, and even while Peter and John are telling the story of what has happened at the court, the Heavenly Father shows his pleasure in what they have said and done by sending the Holy Spirit into the room where all are gathered in, another bestowment of "power" like that of Pentecost. Again they are "of one heart and one soul." There are no fiery tongues in sight this time, but "the place is shaken where they are assembled." They pray, not that persecutions may cease, for they know from Jesus' words that opposition must be encountered if they do their duty in trying to change men and things from wrong to right (John 15: 18-20); they pray for "boldness" to speak and act for God. And God answers their prayer, as we shall see, in many a lesson to follow.

Illustration and Application

Christianity is approved and advanced—

1. By the hostility of its foes.
2. By the multiplication of converts.
3. By the courage of its witnesses.
4. By the transformations it accomplishes.
5. By its prayerful, ennobling fellowship.

They laid hands on them. How vain in all ages has been the effort to arrest and imprison and destroy God's truth! Every persecution has illustrated anew the assurance, "The Word of God is not bound." As the affliction of the lame man proved to be for the glory of God in that his cure, after those forty years of helplessness, did more good in bringing men to Christ than he could possibly have done in forty years of health, so the persecution of the apostles gave them opportunity to show a greater transformation in themselves, from the timidity they had shown when Jesus was arrested to the fearlessness of faith which they would now display. The Boxer uprising in China would seem to have almost destroyed Christianity in that empire, in the martyrdom of two hundred missionaries and forty thousand converts; but we shall probably find the loss in life and property less than the gain in proof given to the world that Chinese converts have not become such, as alleged, for "rice" or any other selfish benefit. Very few recanted their faith when they might so have saved their lives. On the battlefield, the heathen Chinese, trained to love peace by Confucius, seemed deficient in courage; but Christian Chinamen, in the deeper tests of martyrdom, standing alone, proved themselves heroes. Such moral courage men admire and covet, and will seek for it at its Christian source. When the German steamer Arcadia was wrecked in the Gulf of St. Lawrence, her passengers and crew, numbering nearly a hundred people, had a desperate experience in trying to reach land. Three men attempted to swim through the surf, one after another, with the life-line, but failed. Then a fourth brave man stepped to the front, and succeeded in attaching the hawser to the rocks in a favorable position, so that all were safely landed after a hard struggle. Shall we be less brave in efforts to save souls?

Persecution is a refiner's fire, that tests and purifies and unites and strengthens the Church. First of all there is the testing fire. In small retorts adjoining the assayer's office, the metal is tried in little clay crucibles. There its quality is determined. As you look, you can see the vapors curling upward—these are the impurities. The gold and silver of the mint are proved by fire.

Next, there is the fire for refining and mixing. The gold and silver must be freed from impurities, and then it must be amalgamated with other metals to make it good currency.

It gets the right proportions in the fire. The crucibles of gold boil and bubble away at a furious rate. What fearful heat! Yet it is the salvation of the gold. If the seething mass could speak, it might rebel; but after it has received the Government's stamp, it blesses the hot experience that gave it power to become the servant of man. Not only does the fire test and refine and purify and fuse together the necessary constituents of a good coin, but it also anneals. After it has been melted and rolled and cut into strips, it is placed in the annealing furnace to temper and toughen and harden it. Thus it is fitted to stand the wear and tear of currency.

That early Church was also approved by thronging converts. Quality is more than quantity, but when the Evangelical churches of the United States in a recent year gained only one per cent., bishops rightly thought it a call for fasting and prayer. Think of one hundred recruiting officers working a whole year and coming back to report only one added to the ranks above the losses by death and desertion! Three thousand were converted at Pentecost by one sermon, but it has been said that to-day it seems to take three thousand sermons to win one convert. Let us not rail at others, but each of us solemnly ask, Have I won a soul in the last year or in any year? Not in platoons usually, but one by one, souls are enlisted. At this early time in the new year let each resolve, I will prayerfully and persistently endeavor to win at least one soul this year. If every professing Christian would do even so much, two-thirds of the population of America would be in the Church in a year's time, and everybody in a second year. When the apostles went to the Temple that June afternoon of our previous lesson, by an act of beneficence by the way they captured an extra worshiper outside the gate, who proved the most influential of all who came there that day. Let us by equally Christlike kindness draw men to worship God.

When Peter and John stood unabashed before the Sanhedrin, the judges were the more surprised, because they were wont to see uneducated men abashed in their august presence. This calm heroism reminded them of the fearlessness in their Master, when he had faced them a few weeks before. Courage in the Christian honors

Christ, while fear shows lack of faith. How can we fear anything if we really believe he is watching over us? Fearlessness proclaims we "have been with Jesus," ay, are now in his conscious presence, having lost the self-consciousness of fear. This soul transformation of Christ's timid sheep into fearless lions was more wonderful than of the cripple's weakness into strength. A story is told of a Christian boy, whom some bad boys tried to frighten into swearing like themselves, by coming on him out on a lonely road with an ugly bull dog. They cried, "Swear, or we will set the dog on you." But, like the apostles, the boy would "obey God rather than man," at any risk. When they set the dog on the brave boy, he only barked. The God of Daniel kept the hero from harm.

Whittier, the Quaker poet, wrote to Gail Hamilton in 1866, a letter which has been published, in which he related a very characteristic incident: "I must tell thee something droll. Last week the Amoskeag Veterans from New Hampshire, and a Massachusetts company, with military bands, came and paraded before our house, and Governor Smyth of New Hampshire and one or two other officers called on me. When they left, and I stepped out to see them civilly off, the men in epaulets got up a grand military salute, with music and three cheers to wind up with! Was ever a Quaker in such a predicament? I did, I fear, somewhat compromise myself by lifting, almost involuntarily, my hand to my hat—but I resisted the temptation and only pulled my hat lower down over my brows by way of testimony." There is your true man of principle. Every soldier honored the Quaker poet the more for standing true to his own character.

When they saw the man that was healed standing by, they could say nothing against it. After all, the most unanswerable argument for Christianity, for the Sanhedrin and the popular crowd alike, was that transformed man. His soul was made whole as well as his body, for his first use of his feet was to enter the Temple for thanksgiving. The cripple became strong and the beggar a hero. He stood by the apostles, not only when the crowd gathered to applaud, but also when they went to court, though this seemed like going into the jaws of death. Gregory, the Pope, said to Thomas Aquinas, "The Church can no longer say, Silver and gold have I none." He was answered, "Nor can she say any longer, In the name of Jesus Christ of Nazareth rise up and walk."

WITH rapt attention, Immanuel listened to the old sweet story, told in the old man's tender accents, which showed how deeply it had penetrated his own nature. How many have told that story to the children, each dwelling on the traits of character which most impressed the narrator, and each finding in it beauty and grace! Mr. Armitage saw that his little auditor was interested, and he went on to present the picture in richer colors:

"This boy I am telling you of," he said, "was always thinking about his Father, and, as he grew older, the people who knew him wondered to see how much he knew about his Father's character. He used to talk as if he could hear his Father speaking with him, and he could tell them things they had never understood before. As the boy grew into a strong young man, he went about among the people and taught them something that was quite new to them."

"What was that?" the child asked.

"Well, you see, they had their own idea of God. They thought that after he had made the world and everything in it, that he went to live somewhere away off in the sky, and he sat in a high place watching people, and that when they did wrong he became very angry with them. At those times it was necessary to do something to please him, and make him kind again. They got the idea that he liked to see suffering, and in some places they would actually kill a child to please him. This young man told them that this was all wrong. He said God was their Father, and he loved them, and was very near to them all the time, and not a long way off. He was not pleased by having animals and children killed, but only wanted the people to be good, and was ready to forgive them if, after being naughty, they were sorry. Do you understand?"

Immanuel nodded, his large eyes shining like stars.

"This made a great change, and everyone wondered. Some of the poor and good people were very pleased to hear it, but the great men who had been teaching the old notion of God were angry, and they said, 'This young man does not know. He is only a carpenter's son. How can he tell?' But the poor people loved him more, and when they found that he could cure them when they were sick, and give them food if they were hungry, and that he loved little children, they began to follow this strong, beautiful, pleasant-spoken young man around the country to hear what he had to say, and to see the very wonderful things which he did. Then those persons who supposed themselves to be so very wise and learned, began to be jealous and to hate him. They said, 'If this man keeps on talking, nobody will pay any attention to us'; which was quite true, for they were very stupid indeed, as you will see when I show you some of the books they studied and wrote."

"What did they do?"

"The stupidest and cruelest thing they could think of, my child; they took this beautiful, gentle, loving man, who was trying to make the world into heaven, and killed him. That is, they tried to; they could only kill his body, you see, because the God in him could not be killed."

"Didn't anyone love him?"

"Yes, all the children loved him, and a few of the grown-up people, who hadn't forgotten their child thoughts altogether. Some of them wrote down a few of the things he said and did, soon after he left the earth. I will read to you out of their book some day. But there is even a better way than reading books to know what he knew. Can you think what it is?"

The child looked down at his folded hands in silence for a moment; then he said slowly, "If I should have the God think in me, I should know, shouldn't I?"

"Yes, my boy, you would, and there isn't any other way. One time the man explained this very simply to his friends. 'The spirit of your Father in you,' he said, 'will teach you.'"

"But I thought you were my father; what are you?"

"I am your Father, so far as he is in me—but not all of him can be in anyone. When I love you, I am truly a part of him, just as a single letter on the page of this book is a part of the whole book. We are meant to read it all, my child; but we must begin with the letters."

The boy threw his arms about the old man's neck. "I am glad!" he cried, then was silent for so long a time that the other wondered. "I have a book," he said at last; "it tells about my Father; munny keeps it in the spare room, under the bolster of the bed. I should like to see munny, she loves me, too."

Moses Armitage drew the child a little closer. "Tell me about munny," he said; "when did she go away?"

"She didn't go away!" cried Immanuel, in a tone of surprise. "She came to the fun'ral with me. I cried, 'cause I didn't like fun'ral, an' munny told me to go out doors an' not to come back. Only some of the people can cry at fun'ral. I was a naughty boy to cry, munny said so. I should like to see munny," he added, in a subdued voice. "She loves me."

"But you told me mother was in heaven, my child."

"Not 'Lizbeth; 'Lizbeth has to make butter an' feed the chickens; she has n't got no time to fool away. My other mother—the beautiful lady—I only see her sometimes when I'm most asleep."

Moses Armitage sat for a long time in his great chair that night, holding the sleeping child. Again he scanned the still face feature by feature. "Have I forgotten?" he said aloud; "or have my eyes grown dim of late, so that I see what was, but is not?"

Tenderly he laid the child in his bed and fell to searching among his papers, presently bringing to light a tin-type, taken years before in a traveling car which had stopped at he muttered, as he ascended the kitchen stoop with slow, threatening tread. "Arter that, why, I'll tan that 'ar youngun's hide so 't he won't never forgit who 's boss here!"

He laid hold upon the latch with truculent fingers. "I'll show her 'at I ain't to be monkeyed with!" he growled; then his jaw dropped. "What in thunder? Humph! the critter ain't home yit. Hangin' round to gossip, I'll bet! I tol' her she wa'n't to go up to the cem'tery. She'd ought to ha' been here long ago."

When, after an hour or more spent in aimless wandering about the silent house, in the course of which he lavished his entire vocabulary of drastic phrases upon the empty air, the quick beat of hoofs and the rattle of light wheels announced the return of Elizabeth, he merely grunted.

"Oh, 'Rastus!" faltered the woman, with a quick, fearful glance into the scowling face; "do tell if he's come home!"

"Who's come home? What ye talkin' 'bout? An' say, what in creation d'ye mean by stayin' away like this? Here I've been a-hangin' 'round waitin' on ye sence four o'clock! No supper—nothin'! An' you with the key in yer pocket. Han't it out now, and of woods, or lying white and cold in some neglected field urged her out and away. Day after day she thrust her duties from her with frantic hands to search and call, "Manuel Manuel! Oh, Manuel, where be you?"

Erastus Winch, having emptied the windy chambers of his wrath upon her bowed head and discovering to his dismay that she cared not a whit for his bitterest fulminations, actually shook her one morning till the teeth chattered in her head. "I b'lieve you're a-goin' plumb crazy," he cried. "You look like it, by thunder."

Elizabeth stared at him with glassy eyes. "I want Manuel," was all she said.

Winch cast a glowering look about the disordered kitchen. "By thunder!" he repeated "what in—" Then he stopped short, the thought crossing his mind of what his loss would be if 'Lizbeth really did go crazy. "Say, 'Lizbeth," he burst out, "ef you'll quit this stupid foolin', I'm blamed ef I won't let ye take the team an' look fer the youngun. Say, I'll go with ye. He's prob'ly snuger an a bug in some farm house up on the hill. Little rat, I wish't I had him here this minit. I'd—"

The woman burst into frantic sobbing. "I hope he's dead," she wailed. "He'd be better dead." The dry sobs ceased as suddenly as they had begun. "I hope he's dead," she repeated in the lifeless tone of settled anguish. Her worn fingers picked nervously at her apron strings. "I've tol' his mother 'at I hope she'll fin' him. I seen her las' night in the barn over by the hay-mow, but he wa'n't with her."

The man's hair bristled. "I—I say, 'Lizbeth," he began after a long silence, "we—we'll go an' look fer the boy. Yes, you an' me, we'll both go. It's time to cut the oats, an' I ain't got a minit to fool away; but—but—. Why, you know, 'Lizbeth, we can't go on this way—eh?" He sidled a little nearer to the gray, impassive figure. "I—I. Mebbe I was a leetle ha'sh with the boy. I say, 'Lizbeth, I'll let you run him arter this, any way you want. I won't whip him no more, I swan I won't, ef you—ef you—"

There was no reply. The still face looked as if carved from granite. "I'm a-goin' out to hitch up the critters now," he went on, raising his voice. "You git on yer bunnit an' be ready when I come 'round—won't ye, 'Lizbeth?"

He turned and strode heavily out toward the barn, his rugged face working strangely. "What in all creation 'ud I do," he muttered, "ef 'Lizbeth—'Lizbeth—?" His dim eyes fell upon a straggling bush of cinnamon rose, dusty and forlorn in the hot August weather, and visions long forgotten lifted above the seething surface of his thought. He beheld Elizabeth, a bride of twenty, roses blooming in her round cheeks and nodding above her hat-brim. He saw himself proud and awkward in his wedding clothes, stooping to gather a bunch of half-opened buds. "You're nigh as pink an' purty as the posies," he had said, and kissed the sweet curve of her smiling lips. How long—how long ago it was! "I guess I've been kind of ha'sh with 'Lizbeth," he groaned, his eyes still riveted on the withered thing at his feet. "But it was all that pesky young one; ef it hadn't ha' been fer him, we'd been all right."

To his immense relief Elizabeth stood on the stoop, bonneted and shawled, as he drove up. "I think I'm mighty good to ye, 'Lizbeth," he began in a complaining tone, his every-day self reasserting itself with sudden strength. "By rights I'd ought to be a-harvestin', an' you know it's well's I do. I tol' ye when you would keep that boy 'at you'd be sorry for it. I knew you would, well 'nough. You'd ought to ha' done as I said."

The two were driving briskly along the dusty road at this point in Mr. Winch's agreeable monologue. "Now, this 'ere 's a fool job ef I ever heerd o' one," he continued, his gorge rising at sight of the ten-acre lot brimming over with ripened grain, "a stupid fool job, an' when it's done you'll remember, Mis' Winch, 'at you've greed to brace up an' quit yer nonsense. Ef we fin' the boy, well an' good; we'll fetch him home an' you kin send him to deestic school, or anythin' you please; I wash my han's of him f'om now on. Ef we don't fin' him, I'll notfy the overseer of the poor an' let him take the job in han'; but he don't come no more to my house, you bet. D'ye understan'?"

Elizabeth made no answer. She sat gripping the iron rail of the wagon-seat with both hands, as if to restrain herself from some desperate act. Her feverish eyes searched the tangled growths by the road-side.

Erastus Winch conducted his search for the lost child with his accustomed energy the hospitable spring by the barn. It was a picture of his own boy, Carlton, dead thirty years; but it might have served as a portrait of the child who slept. There was the same delicate oval face, shaded with short clustering curls, the same eager, dark eyes, the same bewitching smile. "No, I was not mistaken," murmured the man, shaking his white head with a troubled smile; "the boy is Carlton himself." As he thrust the picture away with a trembling hand, a legal-looking envelope fell from the disordered mass of papers and lay, superscription up, on the lid of his desk. The seal was unbroken, and as Moses Armitage regarded it wonderingly, it occurred to him that it was curiously linked with the finding of the boy.

It was a short letter, type-written on a large sheet of bluish paper. He read it three times. Then he dropped heavily into his chair and wiped the moisture from his forehead. "So they are all dead!" he said aloud, "—all dead, and the money that bewitched them and benumbed them is left!"

Chapter XI—'Lizbeth

BY the time the "hired kerndge" had left Erastus Winch at his own door, on the day of the funeral, he had formulated certain plans for his future course, which appeared to him very original and wise. "I'll let her know what's what, fust thing I do," git in the house, an' ten' to yer bizness lively! You kin bet you'll stay to hum arter this!"

"I—I couldn't help it, 'Rastus. Oh, I'm mos' crazy! I let Manuel go out in the yard, an' when I come to look fer him arter you was all gone to the cem'tery, I couldn't fin' him nowhere! An' he ain't come home—I see he ain't! What shall I do; it's most dark a'ready!"

"You kin come in the house an' git supper an' stop yer gab, or by thunder, I'll—I'll hit ye." Erastus Winch had never touched his wife save with the lash of his tongue; but now his face grew purple with suppressed rage; his great hands clenched themselves. "I've heerd 'bout yer low-down, sneakin' tricks," he yelled; "a-coaxin' Liph Dundor to stick his nose into my bizness. I wonder ye ain't 'shamed to look me in the face. When ye do fin' the brat you kin lay to one thing, Mis' Winch, he'll git his sneaking little hide tanned in a way he won't fergit, ner you neither."

Elizabeth climbed slowly down over the wagon wheel. She reeled slightly as she passed into the kitchen. "O God, I hope you've took him," she moaned, as her trembling hands fumbled aimlessly with her bonnet strings. "He'd be better off—better off."

She made no further mention of the lost child that day, nor the next. Then visions of his little figure wandering in dark stretches

FIXED THE FAMILY. Grape-Nuts Set Them Right.

It is better to have a food epidemic in a family than an epidemic of sickness. A young lady out at Hibbing, Minn., tells about the way Grape-Nuts won her family. She says, "When recovering from typhoid fever my doctor ordered Grape-Nuts Breakfast Food. I gained four pounds the first week, and, as the package was kept on the table for me, the whole family started to eat the new food."

We soon noticed a difference in my younger brother's face, which had been pale and bloodless, and who had been suffering from chronic inflammation of the stomach. In a short time he began to eat so heartily that we all remarked about it, and before long he got so he could eat anything without the least bad effect.

We often eat Grape-Nuts dry as we would candy or nuts, and it has a richer taste than when soaked in water. The best way is to put on some good, rich cream.

My sister found that after we began eating Grape-Nuts she had a much greater supply of milk for her babe. We have quit eating hot bread and meat for the evening meal and take in place some nice Grape-Nuts, with cream, and a little fruit, and have all improved greatly in health.

THE McKINLEY MEMORIAL

An Appeal from the National Memorial Association for Public Co-operation

SUBSTANTIAL progress is reported in the movement for a National Memorial to the late President McKinley. Hon. Cornelius N. Bliss, Chairman of the Executive Committee of the Memorial Association, has issued a statement, in which the plans and purposes of the Association are set forth as follows:

"The McKinley National Memorial Association having been incorporated according to law, met in Cleveland, O., October 10, 1901, for the purpose of effecting an organization. The President of the United States, at the request of Mrs. McKinley and members of the family, named the following Board of Trustees:

Cornelius N. Bliss, New York; Thomas Dolan, Philadelphia; W. Murray Crane, Boston; Alexander H. Revell, Chicago; Charles W. Fairbanks, Indianapolis; Henry M. Duffield, Detroit; George B. Cortelyou, Washington; Ell Torrance, Minneapolis; William A. Lynch, Canton; John G. Milburn, Buffalo; William McConway, Pittsburg; David R. Francis, St. Louis; Robert J. Lowry, Atlanta; Henry C. Payne, Milwaukee; Henry T. Scott, San Francisco; Franklin Murphy, Newark; E. S. Hammond, Memphis; E. W. Bloomingdale, New York; William R. Day, Canton; Marcus A. Hanna, Cleveland, and Myron T. Herrick, Cleveland.

"The Trustees having qualified, proceeded to the election of officers, choosing as

"President, William R. Day, Canton, O.; Vice-President, Marcus A. Hanna, Cleveland, O.; Treasurer, Myron T. Herrick, Cleveland, O.; Secretary, Ryerson Ritchie, Cleveland, O.

"The purposes of the Association are the erection and maintenance at Canton, O., of a suitable memorial to the late President, and raising the necessary funds for said purposes; and after fully providing therefor, the surplus of such funds, if any, to be devoted to such memorial as may be provided for the late President at the National Capital. The memorial will be erected at Canton, that city having been his home throughout his public life and selected by him as his final resting place. The memorial is to be, in the highest sense, the sincere expression of all the people of the country of their love for President McKinley and of their admiration for the qualities expressed so eminently in his life and deeds. It is the purpose to have the offerings of the people voluntary, with a full opportunity to all to contribute. The co-operation of the Governors and officers of the States and municipalities of the United States, and all religious, educational, labor, civic, patriotic, fraternal, benevolent, and other organizations is invited. All public officials, organized bodies, and the press are requested to take immediate steps to secure, at the earliest possible time, a full response to this appeal.

"The Association will prepare and distribute to all donors to the fund a souvenir certificate which will be worthy of preservation, as evidence of the holder's participation in the work. The name and post-office address of each contributor should be forwarded to the Treasurer of the Association, with the fund remitted, for preservation in the permanent archives of the Association. It was decided to form a State Association in the State of New York, and at a meeting held at the Chamber of Commerce of the State of New York, 32 Nassau street, New York City, October 23, a State organization was effected, with the following officers:

"President, Governor B. B. Odell, Jr.; Vice-President, John G. Milburn; Treasurer, James G. Cannon; Chairman Executive Committee, Cornelius N. Bliss; Secretary, F. B. Thurber.

"Offices have been taken at 100 Broadway, New York City, and subscriptions, large or small, are solicited."

Mr. Bliss further explains: "The National Association suggested the formation of a State organization in each State, and this has been very generally carried out. Our organization in New York State has endeavored to form local organizations in each county, and in Greater New York, an organization in each principal branch of trade, and also the professions. We have about thirty of these already at work, and others are forming. We have already received subscriptions to the extent of about $60,000, and hope to raise at least $150,000 in this State. The National Committee has not yet considered the question of a design or what form the memorial should take, except that it was felt that following the example in the cases of Presidents Lincoln and Garfield, a suitable memorial should be erected where the President was buried, and that a further memorial should be erected at Washington. The people in Washington favored the idea of a memorial arch, but realizing that two National Committees appealing for popular subscriptions created confusion in the public mind and injured both, it was arranged at a conference between the two committees that each would endeavor to help the other, but that the Washington Committee would withdraw from the field of popular subscriptions, and that our National Committee would join with them in asking Congress for a sufficient appropriation for a memorial at Washington."

THE QUAKER PEACE CONFERENCE

THE recent Peace Conference of the Quakers, in Philadelphia, was national in scope and the first of its kind ever held in the States, if not in the world. Delegates from various branches of the Friends' Society all over the country brought under one roof the three great divisions of the "Quaker" religion—Orthodox, Hicksites and Wilburites. The programme announced the first two meetings for Witherspoon Hall, Juniper and Walnut streets, and the last for the old historic Twelfth Street meeting House, Twelfth and Chestnut streets.

For years, the Friends have been endeavoring to organize this Conference, but it was not until May of last year that final arrangements were made. Then some thirty members of the Society, convening at Lake Mohonk, New York, drew up plans for a grand Convention to be held in the last month of the first year of the new century. Benjamin Trueblood, of Boston, Mass., was the chief promoter of the scheme, and it was chiefly through his efforts that the recent gathering was made possible. Its chief purpose was to bring together all the branches of the Friends' Society and to so wipe out all denominational differences, that Quakers will once more stand a solid unit. The peace meeting was also designed to commemorate the 250th anniversary of the founding of the religion, to mark the first year of the twentieth century, and to instill afresh into the hearts of all Friends the original peace principles of the Quaker. Mr. Trueblood voiced the general opinion of the Friends when he said in a speech advocating the holding of the Conference, that in many cases the younger generation of their members besides the world at large, did not really know what the fundamental peace principles of the Society were, and from want of proper understanding Quakers had fallen away and deviated from them. He proposed to send out letters of inquiry to the heads of the different divisions of Friends throughout the country and to obtain their views as to the benefits of a possible peace conference, and among the thirty men gathered together at Lake Mohonk were representatives of the three divisions, Orthodox, Hicksites and Wilburites, who willingly agreed to help further the plans for the great meeting. The letters were sent and were enthusiastically received. All inquiries were met with a ready response, each division agreeing to send some of its brightest members as speakers and delegates.

Placid Friends everywhere were stirred when they learned the great purport of the Conference. Peace meetings had been held before in the far West, but they were meetings of only one division of the Society—the Orthodox Friends—therefore, the Conference stands alone in purpose and scope, for it embraced all those who in any way consider themselves as belonging to the Society.

John B. Garrett, of Rosemont, Pa., was chairman, and Howard M. Jenkins, of Philadelphia, secretary of the Conference. President Isaac Sharpless appeared on the programme as presiding over some of the meetings.

Four Million Christian Endeavorers

...THE ORGANIZATION'S 21st BIRTHDAY
SEES IT A GIGANTIC POWER FOR GOOD

ON February 2, next, Christian Endeavor celebrates its twenty-first birthday. On "coming of age," it is a point to its magnificent array of four millions of pledged Christian men and women—probably the grandest Army of the Cross that has ever been recruited in so brief a period, since the Christian era began. In 1881, the close of a decade Endeavor, there were 274 societies, and in the past eleven years the million members have become four million.

The first Christian Endeavor organization was formed Feb. 2, 1881, by Dr. F. E. Clark, then the faithful pastor of the Milliston Church, Maine. The first year there were twenty-eight members, gathered out chiefly from the Mizpah Missionary circle, which had been conducted by Mrs. F. E. Clark, and from the pastor's class of boys and girls in the Sunday School. It was the result of a revival experienced that winter and the desire of the pastor to give the youth something to do, that led him to call them together on a cold evening in February, when he read to them the constitution and offered them the "iron-clad edge." The first signer of the constitution was W. H. Pennell, the teacher of the young men's class in the Sunday School.

The society in Portland worked so well that sister societies began to multiply rapidly all over the United States, and in Canada, England, Ireland, and Scotland. It now flourishes in France, Spain, Australia, Egypt, South America, India, China, Mexico, and Japan, and its literature is found in Persian, Arabic, Bulgarian, Coptic, Portuguese, Malay, Hungarian, and many other tongues and dialects. These figures show the yearly growth of Christian Endeavor:

Year	Societies	Members
81.....	1	48
82.....	7	481
83.....	50	2,870
84.....	150	8,995
85.....	253	13,074
86.....	350	50,000
87.....	2,314	149,000
88.....	4,379	310,000
89.....	7,072	485,000
90.....	11,013	600,000
91.....	16,274	1,000,000
92.....	21,080	1,370,000
93.....	26,280	1,577,000
94.....	33,720	2,023,800
95.....	41,209	2,473,740
96.....	46,125	2,750,000
97.....	51,005	3,000,000
98.....	54,470	3,200,000
99.....	59,223	3,371,000
00.....	59,712	3,500,000
01.....	61,427	4,000,000

Conventions have been held each year, the attendance gradually increasing. The first convention had two hundred in attendance, the fifth 1,200; the tenth 14,000; the fifteenth 31,000; and the twentieth 100,000.

At the suggestion of Dr. Clark, the twenty-first birthday is to be a "decision day" for Christ. He hopes that tens of thousands may then decide for the better life. Thousands of meetings will be held to celebrate the "majority" of the Society. "A campaign for substitutes" will be made to fill the ranks of those promoted from the Junior, Intermediate and Senior Societies.

General Secretary John Willis Baer gives this birthday greeting to the four million members:

It is a pleasure to send a personal greeting to the Christian Endeavorers, and to urge upon them in the coming days the desire to secure a better knowledge of God's Word. More and more ought our Endeavorers to be more thoroughly equipped and able to use the Word effectively in personal work. We are in hopes, inasmuch as Christian Endeavor is now coming of age, and is to celebrate its twenty-first birthday, February 2, that the year will be characterized by a great missionary and evangelistic effort.

Impressive as these figures are, they do not fully represent the outgrowth of that seed planted twenty-one years ago. The two other great divisions of the noble army of young workers, the Epworth League and the Baptist Young People's Union, have a right to participate in this anniversary. They, too, have reason to bless God for the idea that he put in the mind of Dr. F. E. Clark, which has grown to world-wide influence. Not as rivals, but as comrades in service are they laboring in the field. The principle of Christian Endeavor, the enlistment and organization of young Christians has been applied by the two denominations each in its own way, and each is rejoicing in the fruit of its efforts. The movement is one, and its separation into three streams has only multiplied its usefulness.

It is appropriate at this celebration that the passage chosen for consideration (Matt. 25: 31-46) should be impressed on every member. No soul is converted merely for its own sake. It is converted for service. That picture of the judgment, in which Christ rewards those who have manifested his spirit in the world, and condemns those who have been indifferent to the sorrow and poverty and misery around them, is a summons to duty. To attend prayer-meetings and church services, to study the Bible and to be regular in private devotion, do not comprise the whole of Christianity. They are all good, but they should induce Christian activity and beneficence. The spirit of love, which brought Christ to the world to redeem men, must be in his followers, for if a man has not the spirit of Christ he is none of his. And how tender is the plea that he uses. In ministering to the poor and afflicted, his followers are ministering to him. That is the test of love. To those who proffer him their hearts, he gives opportunity for proving their sincerity. Let them see in every burdened life their Lord suffering, and in relieving it they will be serving him. He needs nothing at their hands, but there are men whom he loves, men who know him, and men who know him not, who are in need, and he counts the good done to them as having been done to him. It was a loving thought, worthy of our Master, and when it takes full possession of every Christian soul, the world will see what it has never yet seen—every sorrow comforted, every want supplied.

A BOLD AVOWAL

Peter no Longer a Denier, but a Courageous Disciple

BY MRS. M. BAXTER

WHEN Peter and John were interrogated before the great Jewish Council (Acts 4: 7) they made no concealment of their connection with Jesus, but declared openly that they were his followers. It was a bold statement; it brought the rulers of Israel in guilty of crucifying God's Messiah, and the ecclesiastical authorities had their mouths shut. The boldness of two unlearned and ignorant men, and the presence of the man who had been healed, were irrefutable arguments that the work was Divine, and all that this august council could accomplish was to identify these men as having been with Jesus. What an honor! Oh that every child of God so walked that the atmosphere which he carries with him should proclaim to all with whom he has to do, "This man has been with Jesus." It ought to be; God wills it should be, and therefore it may be. Let it be so with us.

Foiled in their effort to convict the two witnesses of Christ, the priests commanded them to withdraw, while they conferred among themselves. The priests were in a difficulty. "What shall we do to these men?" they said one to another. They were forced to acknowledge "that a notable miracle hath been wrought through them. But," they added, "that it spread no further among the people, let us threaten them." Unworthy perversion of justice! They could not, they dared not say that the healing of the poor man was a sin. Had they healed him, all the land would have been called upon to magnify the priesthood. But that the name of him whom they had condemned and executed as a transgressor should be connected with such a miracle would be most disastrous to the credit of the priesthood. At all costs such a calamity to their prestige must be averted.

It was not a question with them of right or wrong; the honor of God did not enter into their account; it was simply what was politic under the circumstance to maintain their reputation. It is a bad sign in a teacher when he treasures his own reputation above truth, and above what is due to God. It is an awful thing for a man to sacrifice God's cause to his own. Alas, priestly pride, the pride of office, then as now, led men to take up a position which was ruin to their own souls. Poor men! they thought they could stop the Word of God from going farther. "His going forth, who is the living Word, is from the end of the heaven, and his circuit unto the ends of it" (Ps. 19: 6). But they said, "Let us threaten them." They knew not with whom they had to do, and how small were the threats of man to those who stood in the presence of God.

"They called them and charged them not to speak at all nor teach in the name of Jesus." But they were unprepared for the answer which cited their judges to stand with them in the presence of God. "Whether it be right in the sight of God to hearken unto you rather than unto God, judge ye; for we cannot but speak the things which we saw and heard." Such an appeal to a higher tribunal, not of this world, on the part of unlearned and ignorant men, was unusual, perhaps unknown, among the priests and rulers of that day in Jerusalem. But it was irresistible; the authorities were at a total loss to find any way by which they "might punish them, because of the people, for all men glorified God for that which was done." For very shame, the authorities could not openly take sides against God. So they had to content themselves with powerless threats, and let them go. Thus God, in his servants, prevailed.

How did these men act when they returned to their own company, who understood and were one with them? Did they exult over the discomfiture of their persecutors? Did they take measures to secure their safety? Did they take counsel how to speak in future, so as to avoid clashing with the prejudices of the priests? No; they reported all that had happened, and the whole company of the infant Church lifted up their voice to God with one accord in adoration, and in recognition of the fulfillment of the Scripture that only that which God had foreordained had come to pass; and their one petition was for boldness to continue doing as they had done. Quoting from Psalm 2: 1, 2, which God was opening up to them, and saw that only that had come to pass which they had to expect before God could set his Son upon his holy hill of Zion. And, therefore, their old expectation of a temporal reign of Christ on earth was postponed until their Lord should have first a people for his name; and their prayer was not for personal deliverance and safety, but, "Grant unto thy servants to speak thy Word with all boldness, while thou stretchest out thine hand to heal, and that signs and wonders may be done through the name of thy holy Servant Jesus" (verses 23-30, R. V.) Christ had said that signs should follow them which believe; these first apostles expected nothing less as God's undoubted witness that he was working with them. The prayer was answered: "the place was shaken where they were gathered together; and they were all-filled with the Holy Ghost, and they spake the Word of God with boldness."

Frances Willard Memorial for India

AT the Seventh National W. C. T. U. Convention, recently held in Cawnpore, India, important action was taken regarding the proposed Willard Home for Inebriates. Poona, near Bombay, was suggested as the location. When erected, this will be, so far as can be ascertained, the only institution in India, known as a "Home for Inebriates." The spread of the drink curse throughout India was deeply deplored. The Report of Miss H. E. Dunhill, National Organizer for India, showed how the unfortunate habit was gaining ground, even the little children and the women becoming ensnared. During her late tour of 10,000 miles, she has held many meetings among Europeans and natives, and in day and Sunday Schools, famine orphanages, hospitals, barracks, leper asylums, etc.; she gave an interesting account of the efforts being put forth for the betterment of India, spiritually and materially. In one busy orphanage, where there were hundreds of famine girls, a Y. Union was organized at five in the morning!

One encouraging paper read at the Convention described the recent victory won in the doing away with barmaids in Bengal, where the iniquitous system of having girls as mixers and sellers of drink had prevailed. Another told of how Bangalore, a military station, is starting an urgently needed Rescue Home for Fallen Women. Any one wishing to know more of W. C. T. U. work in India can receive information by writing to Miss H. E. Dunhill, 12 South Parade, Bangalore, India.

The Lend-a-Hand Book Mission

Applications are constantly coming to the Lend-a-Hand Book Mission for the gift of second-hand Sunday School books and papers, books for traveling libraries and for free public libraries in small villages in the South and Southwest. Prisoners write, asking for back numbers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD and other papers. The demand for reading far exceeds the supply. The freight on the barrels and boxes of reading should be paid by the donors. Individuals are also requested to send papers by mail to wardens for the prisoners under their charge, and to ministers and teachers for distribution in obscure towns. Reading should not be sent to Lend-a-Hand office, Boston, Mass. Write to the manager, stating the kind and amount of reading you can offer, and she will return to you the address of some person who will appreciate your contribution. Address Sarah P. Brigham, Manager of the Lend-a-Hand Book Mission, 1 Beacon street, Boston, Mass.

A 20th Century Bible

Mr. E. H. Phelps, New York, writes: "I am more than pleased with the Red Letter Edition Bible received yesterday, as a premium with THE CHRISTIAN HERALD—I am delighted. It is a handsome work of art; the typography is perfect, the type is clear and bold, and, better than all, the distinct feature of the Red Letter texts is not only novel, but very desirable. It is a twentieth century idea. The wonder to me, is how so handsome a volume, so well bound, can be furnished with THE CHRISTIAN HERALD for $3, the worth of the journal itself. I am very glad to give you this cordial testimony."

"The Pictures are Very Fine"

C. C. W., Montgomery, Mo., writes: "We have just received your Art Portfolio, and are very much pleased with it. Mrs. W., who is a good judge of pictures, says that they are very fine!"

BLACK AND RICH

Is the Way Postum Coffee Should Be

A liquid food that will help a person break a bad habit is worth knowing of. The president of one of the State associations of W. C. T. U., who naturally does not want a name given, writes as follows: "When I was obliged to go without coffee for breakfast, a dull, distracting headache would come on before noon. I discovered that, in reality, the nerves were crying out for their accustomed stimulant."

At evening dinner I had been taught experience that I must refrain from coffee pass a sleepless night. In the summer of 1910 while visiting a physician and his wife, I was served with a most excellent coffee at the dainty and elegant table, and upon inquiry discovered that this charming beverage was Postum Food Coffee, and that the family had been greatly benefited by leaving off coffee and using Postum.

I was so in love with it, and so pleased with the glimpse of freedom from my one bond of habit, and so thoroughly convinced that I ought to break with my captor, that upon my return home I at once began the use of Postum Food Coffee, and have continued it ever since, now more than a year.

I don't know what sick headache is now and my nerves are steady, and I sleep sound, generally eight hours regularly. I used become bilious frequently and require physicians now seldom ever have that experience.

I have learned that long boiling is a solutely essential to furnish good Postum. That makes it clear, black and rich as a Mocha and Java blend. Please withhold my name, but you may use the letter for the good it may do."

NEW YORK, JANUARY 29, 1902

FIVE DOLLARS PER YEAR

A NOOK IN THE LIBRARY

DIRECTOR CHARLES SPRAGUE SMITH

IN THE INSIDE OF A CLASS-ROOM

A Pioneer College for Wage-Earners

What the People's Institute of New York is Doing—125,000 Yearly Attend the Schools

ASCHOOL or college with an aggregate yearly attendance of 125,000 may justly, perhaps, claim to be regarded as the biggest school in the world. And since it not only enlightens intellectually, but uplifts in a moral, social and religious sense such a vast clientele, it may, doubtless, with large show of justice, lay claim to the still prouder distinction of doing an amount of good that is beyond calculation. Such an institution has a rightful place in the columns of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, and its opportunities for doing good will probably be enlarged to still greater dimensions when its object, history, plans and methods are laid before the more than 500,000 readers of this journal. "If the news of this good work goes abroad," says Director Charles Sprague Smith, "other cities may speedily follow the example given, and thereby many difficult social problems will be brought nearer to a peaceful, intelligent and just solution."

The People's Institute, Cooper Union, New York, has the annual attendance which has been mentioned—125,000—composed almost entirely of the adult wage-earners of the city. It has been in existence four years. Was there ever before such phenomenal development of an educational enterprise? The Institute was organized May, 1897, as the result of a series of conferences, in which leading representatives of the different sections of society took part. The large hall of Cooper Union was offered by Mr. Abram S. Hewitt for the experimental course of lectures and discussions. The first season embraced nineteen evenings, with an average attendance of one thousand, which was considered a surprising success, since few had believed that audiences of the people would follow continuously serious courses of study. In three years, the Institute was conducting six evening courses weekly—three in the large hall, three in a lecture room above; and it had established a flourishing Institute club in commodious quarters at 241 East Fourteenth street. It has now established a branch in Harlem, corner of 125th street and Lexington avenue, with Mr. John Martin in charge; and the opening of a Brooklyn branch is contemplated.

The work of the Institute embraces: 1. An Evening Free College for adults with chief attention paid to the study of history, social science, economics and ethics, and minor attention to art, literature and national sciences. 2. A forum for the discussion of questions affecting civic, state and national life. 3. A Sunday evening series of addresses. 4. Symphony concerts, with tickets at nominal prices (in co-operation with the People's Symphony Orchestra). 5. A People's Club, which is open to both sexes. 6. Class excursions under suitable guidance, to the museums and to places of historic interest. All of this work, except the Sunday evening series, are given in co-operation with the Cooper Union. In a recent communication to this paper, Director Charles Sprague Smith says: "Our class-room is frequently crowded beyond its capacity, a multitude standing outside and holding the doors open, while the large hall of Cooper Union is usually filled every Sunday night." So hungry are the people for knowledge! so thirsty for something which shall make them better!

into a sort of mammoth Sunday School, although it does not go by this name, and the line of inquiry and response is not such as of times would be expected in a religious house of worship. For the great Sunday gatherings at Cooper Union are made up of people of all creeds and religions, and even of those who are not members of any church, and who are not yet ready to accept of any mission or a synagogue.

In the course of these conferences and great forum, the Institute's capacity for bringing all classes of people to a better understanding of each other and a better feeling for each other are beyond reckoning, and the power and effect of such a gathering is incalculable. All the great problems of the day are discussed, among them the liquor traffic, race problems, social reforms, distribution of wealth, labor questions, luxury, and religion, the last being presented fully, by the able and most orthodox method, of course all the teaching is unpartisan and nonpartisan, the object being the development of intelligent social citizenship. It is a sign of progress that there are all over the Union are coming to the Institute seeking advice as to the organization of similar bodies elsewhere.

The Institute Club is one of the best features of the Institute. It provides a wholesome, dignified place of social recreation for men, women and children, with opportunities for self-improvement in a variety of studies.

Marvelously well known, the People's Institute has not reached its present state of development without struggle and sacrifice on the part of those who have been its leaders.

Has been successful Director, J. W. Phelps, former Chairman, and V. Lynd, former Treasurer. On the list of its supporters are: John Allen, John F. Cutting, Louis H. Dodge, Abram S. Hewitt, William S. Johnston, and others. On the advisory Board are William E. Dodge, Samuel J. May, John H. Brown, Anne B. Brown, James H. Brown, James A. Riis, and many others whose names are known in their fellow-citizens. These, with the many others who have been the mainstay of the Institute, are working it with their voluntary contributions. They are proud of this great institution, and its development of the future. The People's Institute will be proud to stand in a worthy position for every one throughout the land.

A PEOPLE'S INSTITUTE SUNDAY EVENING SESSION IN THE LARGE HALL

The Sunday addresses have all along drawn the largest audiences. Of this series, a prominent clergyman recently said: "No more valuable or significant work among the masses of unchurched people in a great city has been done than that which is carried on at Cooper Union." The Sunday speaker is usually one of the leaders in the Metropolitan pulpit, or a layman of eminence. "Is the World Growing Better?" by Rev. Dr. Amory H. Bradford; "The Christianity of Jesus Christ," by Rev. Dr. Lyman Abbott; "What I Believe in God," by Rev. Dr. Rudolph Grossman; "The Son of Man," by Rev. Dr. Andrew W. Raymond, are among the features named on the programme of the season now passing. After the address of the evening, questions and discussion begin, the meeting thus resolving itself

THE AGE OF MAN

TEXT—Psalms 90: 10:

"The days of our years are three-score years and ten"

HE seventieth milestone of life is here planted as at the end of the journey. A few go beyond it; multitudes never reach it. The oldest person of modern times expired at one hundred and sixty-nine years. A Greek, by the name of Stravaride, lived to one hundred and thirty-two years. An Englishman, by the name of Thomas Parr, lived one hundred and fifty-two years. Before the time of Moses, people lived one hundred and fifty years, and if you go far enough back, they lived nine hundred years. Well, that was necessary, because the story of the world must come down by tradition, and it needed long life safely to transmit the news of the past. If the generations had been short-lived, the story would so often have changed lips that it might have got all astray. But after Moses began to write it down, and parchment told it from century to century, it was not necessary that people live so long in order to authenticate the events of the past. If, in our time, people lived only twenty-five years, that would not affect history, since it is put in print, and is not dependent on tradition. Whatever your age, I will to-day directly address you, and I shall speak to those who are in the twenties, the thirties, the forties, the fifties, the sixties, and to those who are in the seventies and beyond.

Counseling the Young Men

First, then, I accost those of you who are in the twenties. You are full of expectation. You are ambitious—that is, if you amount to anything—for some kind of success, commercial, or mechanical, or professional, or literary, or agricultural, or social, or moral. If I find someone in the twenties without any sort of ambition, I feel like saying: "My friend, you have got on the wrong planet. This is not the world for you. You are going to be in the way. Have you made your choice of poor-houses? You will never be able to pay for your cradle. Who is going to settle for your board? There is a mistake about the fact that you were born at all." But supposing you have ambition, let me say to all the twenties, expect everything through Divine manipulation, and then you will get all you want or something better. Are you looking for wealth? Well, remember that God controls the money markets, the harvests, the droughts, the caterpillars, the locusts, the sunshine, the storm, the land, the sea, and you will get wealth. Perhaps not that which is stored up in banks, in safe deposits, in United States securities, in houses and lands, but your clothing and board and shelter, and that is about all you can appropriate anyhow. You cost the Lord a great deal. To feed and clothe and shelter you for a lifetime requires a big sum of money, and if you get nothing more than the absolute necessities, you get an enormous amount of supply. Expect as much as you will of any kind of success, if you expect it from the Lord you are safe. Depend on any other resource and you may be badly chagrined, but depend on God and all will be well. It is a good thing in the crises of life to have a man of large means back you up. It is a great thing to have a moneyed institution stand behind you in your undertaking. But it is a mightier thing to have the God of heaven and earth your coadjutor, and you may have him. I am so glad that I meet you while you are in the twenties. You are laying out your plans, and all your life in this world and the next for five hundred million years of your existence will be affected by those plans. It is about eight o'clock in the morning of your life, and you are just starting out. Which way are you going to start? Oh, the twenties!

"Twenty" is a great word in the Bible. Joseph was sold for twenty pieces of silver. Samson judged Israel twenty years. Solomon gave Hiram twenty cities. The flying roll that Zechariah saw was twenty cubits. When the sailors of the ship on which Paul sailed sounded the Mediterranean Sea, it was twenty fathoms. What mighty things have been done in the twenties. Romulus founded Rome when he was twenty. Keats finished life at twenty-five. Lafayette was a world-renowned soldier at twenty-three. Oberlin accomplished his chief work by twenty-seven. Bonaparte was victor over Italy at twenty-six. Pitt was prime minister of England at twenty-two. Calvin had completed his immortal "Institutes" by the time he was twenty-six. Grotius was Attorney-General at twenty-four. Some of the mightiest things for God and eternity have been done in the twenties. As long as you can put the figure "2" before the other figure that helps describe your age, I have high hopes about you. Look out for that figure "2." Watch its continuance with as much earnestness as you ever watched anything that promised you salvation or threatened you demolition. What a critical time, the twenties! While they continue you decide your occupation and the principles by which you will be guided. You make your most abiding friendships. You arrange your home life. You fix your habits. Lord God Almighty, for Jesus Christ's sake, have mercy on all the men and women in the twenties!

The Business and Professional Age

Next I accost those in the thirties. You are at an age when you find what a tough thing it is to get recognized and established in your occupation or profession. Ten years ago you thought all that was necessary for success was to put on your shutter the sign of physician or dentist or attorney or broker or agent, and you would have plenty of business. How many hours you sat and waited for business, and waited in vain, three persons only know—God, your wife and yourself. In commercial life you have not had the promotion and the increase in salary you anticipated, or the place you expected to occupy in the firm has not been vacated. The produce of the farm, with which you expected to support yourself and those depending on you, and to pay the interest on the mortgage, has been far less than you anticipated, or the prices were down, or special expenses for sickness made draughts on your resources that you could not have expected. In some respects the hardest decade of life is the thirties, because the results are generally so far behind the anticipations. It is very rare, indeed, that a young man does as did the young man one Sunday night when he came to me and said: "I have been so marvelously prospered since I came to this country, that I feel, as a matter of gratitude, that I ought to dedicate myself to God." Nine-tenths of the poetry of life has been knocked out of you since you came into the thirties. Men in the different professions and occupations saw that you were rising, and they must put an estoppel on you or you might somehow stand in the way. They think you must be suppressed. From thirty to forty is an especially hard time for young doctors, young lawyers, young merchants, young farmers, young mechanics, young ministers. The struggle of the thirties is for honest and helpful and remunerative recognition. But few old people know how to treat young people, without patronizing them on the one hand or snubbing them on the other. Oh, the thirties! Joseph stood before Pharaoh at thirty. David was thirty years old when he began to reign. The height of Solomon's temple was thirty cubits. Christ entered upon his active ministry at thirty years of age. Judas sold him for thirty pieces of silver. Oh, the thirties! What a word suggestive of triumph or disaster!

Your decade is the one that will probably afford the greatest opportunity for victory, because there is the greatest necessity for struggle. Read the world's history and know what are the thirties for good or bad. Alexander the Great closed his career at thirty-two. Frederick the Great made Europe tremble with his armies at thirty-five. Cortes conquered Mexico at thirty. Grant fought Shiloh and Donelson, when thirty-eight. Raphael died at thirty-seven. Luther was the hero of the Reformation at thirty-five. Sir Philip Sydney got through by thirty-two. The greatest deeds for God and against him were done within the thirties, and your greatest battles are now and between the time when you cease expressing your age by putting first a figure "2" and the time when you will cease expressing it by putting first a figure "3." As it is the greatest time of the struggle, I adjure you, in God's name, and by God's grace, make it the greatest achievement. My prayer is for all those in the tremendous crisis of the thirties. The fact is, that by the way you decide the present decade of your history, you decide all the following decades.

For Those Nearing Mid-Life

Next, I accost the forties. Yours is the decade of discovery. I do not mean the discovery of the outside, but the discovery of yourself. No man knows himself until he is forty. He over-estimates or under-estimates himself. By that time he has learned what he can do, or what he cannot do. He thought he had commercial genius enough to become a millionaire, but now he is satisfied to make a comfortable living. He thought he had rhetorical power that would bring him into the United States Senate; now he is content if he can successfully argue a common case before a petit-jury. He thought he had medical skill that would make him a Mott or a Grosse or a Willard Parker or a Sims; now he finds his sphere is that of a family physician, prescribing for the ordinary ailments that afflict our race. He was sailing on in a fog and could not take a reckoning, but now it clears up enough to allow him to find out his real latitude and longitude. He has been climbing, but now he has got to the top of the hill, and he takes a long breath. He is half-way through the journey at least, and he is in a position to look backward or forward. He has more good sense than he ever had. He knows human nature, for he has been cheated often enough to see the bad side of it, and he has met so many gracious and kindly and splendid souls, he also knows the good side of it. Now, calm yourself. Thank God for the past, and deliberately set your compass for another voyage. You have chased enough thistledown. You have blown enough soap bubbles. You have seen the unsatisfying nature of all earthly things. Open a new chapter with God and the world. This decade of the forties ought to eclipse all its predecessors in worship, in usefulness and in happiness. "Forty is a great word in the Bible. God's ancient people were forty years in the Wilderness. Eli judged Israel forty years. David and Solomon and Jehoash reigned forty years. When Joseph visited his brethren he was forty years old." Oh, this mountain-top of the forties! You have now the character you will probably have for all time and all eternity. God, by his grace, sometimes changes a man after the forties, but after that a man never changes himself. Tell me, O men and women who are in the forties, your habits of thought and life, and I will tell you what you will forever be. I might make a mistake once in a thousand times, but not more than in that proportion.

For Those in the Fifties

My sermon next accosts the fifties. How queer it looks when in writing your age you make the first of the two figures a "5." This is the decade which shows what the other decades have been. If a young man has sown wild oats, and he has lived to this time, he reaps the harvest of it in the fifties, or if by necessity he was compelled to overtoil in honest directions, he is called to settle up with exacting nature sometime during the fifties. Many have it so hard in early life that they are octogenarians at fifty. Sciaticas and rheumatisms and neuralgias and vertigos and insomnias have their playground in the fifties. A man's hair begins to whiten, and although he may have worn spectacles before, now he asks the optician for No. 14 or No. 12, or No. 10. When he gets a cough and is almost cured, he hacks and clears his throat a good while afterward. Oh, ye who are in the fifties, think of it! A half century of blessing to be thankful for, and a half century subtracted from an existence which, in the most marked cases of longevity, hardly ever reaches a whole century. By this time you ought to be eminent for piety. You have been in so many battles, you ought to be a brave soldier. You have made so many voyages, you ought to be a good sailor. So long protected and blessed, you ought to have a soul full of doxology. In Bible times in Canaan every fifty years was by God's command a year of jubilee. The people did not work that year. If property had, by misfortune, gone out of one's possession, on the fiftieth year it came back to him. If he had fooled it away, it was returned without a farthing to pay. If a man had been enslaved, he was, in that year, emancipated. A trumpet was sounded loud and clear and long, and it was the trumpet of jubilee. They shook hands, they laughed, they congratulated. What a time it was, that fiftieth year! And if under the old dispensation it was such a glad time, under our new and more glorious dispensation let all who have come to the fifties hear the trumpet of jubilee that I now blow. That was the allusion made by Mr. Toplady, the great hymnologist, when he wrote:

Blow ye the trumpet, blow
The gladly solemn sound:
Let all the nations know,
To earth's remotest bound,
The year of jubilee is come;
Return, ye ransomed sinners, home.

Ye who have sold for nought
Your heritage above,
Shall have it back unbought,
The gift of Jesus' love.
The year of jubilee has come;
Return ye ransomed sinners home.

My sermon next accosts the sixties. The beginning of that decade is more startling than any other. In his chronological journey, the man rides rather smoothly over the figures "2" and "3" and "4" and "5," but the figure "6" gives him a big jolt. He says: "It cannot be that I am sixty. Let me examine the old family record. I guess they made a mistake. They got my name down wrong in the roll of births." But no, the older brothers or sisters remember the time of his advent, and there is some relative a year older and another relative a year

The Goodness of God

[illegible]

But the most of you will never reach the eighties or the seventies or the sixties or the fifties or the forties. He who passes into the forties has gone far beyond the average of human life. Amid the uncertainty of the future, God through Jesus Christ as your present and eternal safety. The longest life is only a small fragment of the great eternity. We will all of us soon be there.

What, then, have we gained, when results are low?

HOW SHENSI WELCOMED OUR RELIEF CARAVAN

Forty-Eight Carts Bore "The Christian Herald's" Relief to the Famine Sufferers—The Empress Dowager's Acknowledgments

appointed by the Missionary Relief Committee in Tientsin to take personal charge of the famine relief work in the remote province of Shensi. It is a wonderful story that his letter tells—a story of a people conquered by love and kindness; of the oldest part of the Chinese nation deeply touched by the generosity of Christians, and of doors, heretofore closed against the Gospel, opening wide to the missionaries, who bring with their message, succor for the stricken multitudes.

Dr. Duncan's letter is given below:

HSI-AN-FU, SHENSI, NOV. 11.

Early in June it was doubtful whether it would be possible to distribute any relief in this province, which suffered the most from the famine that swept the northwest provinces. The Committee that was formed by Rev. Dr. Arthur Smith at Tien-tsin, allotted a portion of the New York CHRISTIAN HERALD Fund to Shensi, on the understanding that its administration be undertaken only by foreigners. The Ambassadors gave permission to go into the interior, if the Chinese were friendly and the way opened up.

On the 22d of June, a party started for T'ai-yuan, the scene of the inhuman massacres last year. On arrival there, through the good offices of Tao-T'ai Shen, the Governor of Shensi was communicated with, and soon permission was granted to proceed to Hsi-an-Fu (the capital). On the 26th of August, Major Pereira, Dr. J. A. C. Smith and myself reached the Western Capital. We were well received, as we had been protected and cared for all along the route. The journey was made with a minimum of discomfort, despite the weather. On arrival, we were visited by all the acting officials. The Governor did us the honor to invite the chief officials to meet us at dinner, and we also had the distinction of being the first foreigners to meet the members of the reconstructed Foreign Office (Wai-Wu-Pu), of which the successor to Li Hung Chang, Wang-Wen-Shao, was the President.

An Imperial Edict had been issued that we were going to distribute relief, and commanding all officials to treat us with respect. The Literary Chancellor was very anxious to inform us of an interview he had with the Empress Dowager, which was substantially as follows:

Empress Dowager. "And some foreigners have been here distributing relief?"

Literary Chancellor. "Yes; they are at present engaged in the work."

Empress Dowager. "It is very good of them to come at such a time. I heard of their arrival, and gave strict orders that the officials were to treat them courteously and render them assistance. Have you met them?"

Literary Chancellor. "Yes, I have met them and talked with them for some time. There is one of them who is quite at home in the language and classics of our land."

The Empress Dowager here expressed her pleasure and surprise.

Literary Chancellor (continuing). "And what is more, two of them have come up (that is, from San-Yuen-Hsien, where we were distributing relief), specially to see your Majesty start."

Empress Dowager. "That is exceedingly courteous. It would have been more befitting in me to visit them than that they should come to see me off."

The officials, from first to last, rendered effective help. The one to whose unflinching courtesy and spontaneous initiative we owed the most was the Intendent T'ang, the manager of the government relief office. By his resourcefulness, capacity and practical aid, he both officially and personally rendered immense and invaluable aid, and did all he could to further the interests of the relief. But for the help the officials gave, it would have been impossible for us to so effectually and quickly cover the field and afford relief. Some twenty-six officials in all actively assisted us. Then there were seventeen Christians (leaders and teachers) and four foreigners: Dr. J. A. C. Smith, of the Baptist Missionary Society; Mr. A. Trudinger, of the China Inland Mission; Mr. Tjader, of the Swedish Mission to China, and myself. The distributors were international and interdenominational, and the Chinese recipients were Confucians, Buddhists, Taoists, Mohammedans, and Christians.

The whole relief has been a conspicuous example of the broad philanthropy that oversteps distinctions of race and place. The method of relief was as follows: We first decided to limit the area to such places as we could effectively help, rather than extend the field. Next, we secured official lists of the poor and destitute in the various counties. These counties were divided into districts, and these, again, into divisions. A systematic scrutiny was made, by house-to-house visitation, of the condition of the families and the number of "mouths" to be relieved. In each district, the names of those not in actual need were struck off, while those in distress, or new-comers, were added. A stamped ticket was given to the head of each family, with the name and number of those "mouths" to be assisted, and a duplicate was retained for accuracy. Then on fixed days, at definite centres, we distributed the relief to the ticket-holders, who came to some public building lent to us for the occasion. In this way six counties—in the centre of greatest distress—were relieved as follows:

COUNTIES	FAMILIES	INDIVIDUALS	AMOUNT (TAELS)
Hsi-an-Fu—2 Cy's	10,385	36,742	22,459.76
San Yuen County	5,391	15,312	10,413.61
Kao Lin	1,026	6,741	3,000.00
Lin Tung	7,058	17,712	17,377.38
Han Ch'eng			5,448.00

Taels, 59,699.05

It is satisfactory to know that at least 90-95 per cent. of those assisted were the poorest and most destitute. The relief was distributed personally by the foreigners, and to the parties relieved; there were no intermediaries. It must be a source of pleasure to those who contributed the money to learn that their help was extremely timely. There will be much suffering in the winter and in the early spring.

The small balance of the relief fund in hand could not be better disposed of than in the relief of the widows and orphans, of whom, alas, there is a large number. There are few homes in which there are not vacant chairs, and fewer still without empty cupboards. But the sufferings of the body are not to be compared with the sorrows of the heart, and if the few remaining taels will help to give shelter to a few orphans, and help to some widows, surely there will follow the blessing of the Master who said: "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto the least of these, my little ones, ye did it unto me."

THE EMPRESS-DOWAGER OF CHINA

Drawn from Life by a Correspondent of Black and White

I would like to say that, personally, I have felt it an honor to be the dispenser of the benevolence of your friends. It has shown how race and place, and all the barriers that divide, can be levelled by a single touch of Christian grace. The officials have been exceedingly struck with the genuineness and catholicity of the scheme. Again and again the governor and other officers would express surprise at the large-heartedness of the philanthropy. They were quick enough to discern how totally different Christian compassion is from the Confucian ideas of mercy. If no other idea has been driven home, that one has.

Another thing is this—there have been several villages and districts where, hitherto, we have not had any access or hearing for ourselves or our Gospel message, which have already sent deputations, asking us to tell them the bottom truths we teach and believe. I confess that is a result I was not prepared at this stage to witness, for we were of necessity so busy with the actual relief work, when at it, as to prevent us from having time to preach. A still further result has been that we have, in this ancient city, been respectfully received, where, before, we were barely tolerated for several years. Altogether, I undertook the work only under the sense of the pressing necessity of help, and without the expectation of these indirect results, that are as pleasing as practical. Dr. Smith and Mr. Trudinger have shared equally in all the danger and difficulties of the work, and without their aid it would have been impossible to get through so satisfactorily or speedily. The way was marvelously opened. We have all been helped and kept. The people are grateful, and the work is done. Thank all the donors for their mercy and help, I am, yours, a common service. MOIR DUNCAN.

Dr. Duncan also sends this statement of the disbursement of that portion of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Relief Fund allotted to Shensi province:

The expenses were chiefly for portage, e. g. He had to hire no fewer than forty-eight carts to carry relief to the centres of distribution. The relief in Hsian and Sanyuan was conducted jointly by Dr. Smith, Mr. Trudinger, and Dr. Duncan. The Kao Lin relief was given by Dr. Smith. The Lin Tung relief was administered by Mr. Trudinger and Dr. Duncan. The Han-Ch'eng relief was undertaken solely by Mr. Tjader.

General Howard on the Chinese

GEN. O. O. HOWARD, in the course of an address delivered before the West Side Branch Y. M. C. A. in New York recently, discussed the "proper attitude of American young men toward the Chinese within our boundaries." He said the execution of the present law, which is now expiring by limitation, had worked much hardship and cruelty to innocent victims, who had the misfortune to have been born in China. It is time for us to reconsider the whole question of Chinese exclusion. He would accord to the Chinaman the same rights and privileges that we now grant to Poles, Russians, Austrians, Italians, Scandinavians, and other foreigners who come here. Continuing, General Howard said:

"I know many Chinese families who dress as we dress, live as we live, send their children to our schools, and give an example of fidelity to Christian teaching that cannot be excelled. Thousands have already embraced our faith; some forty thousand gave their lives in China during the late war, on account of their love of the Master. We must advocate friendliness and not hostility in our legislation. Material interests, spiritual interests, every interest of humanity demands it. If the time has come when we must check immigration, let the exclusion be impartial and righteous—the exclusion of vice, of vicious indulgence, of plague spots, of anarchy, and of crime, we will gladly advocate."

General Howard told the story of So Ho Luck, a young Chinese student in this country. He worked in a restaurant, and afterwards became night clerk in a hotel, slept little, saved all he could, and studied at school all day. In vacation he went to China to see his parents, and on returning in October, was refused permission to land at Portland, Ore., and was finally obliged to give up all his ambitions and go back to China. The speaker also cited other recent instances of cruel persecution, notably those of Leong Yank Tong, a Chinese merchant of Portland, Ore.; of forty Chinese in Philadelphia, who were forcibly removed from their homes and places of business and sent to prison; of Chinese residents of Denver, imprisoned by wholesale, and of similar experiences among the Chinese in Jacksonville, Fla. He related several other instances of persecution under the Exclusion laws, which were only examples of thousands of other cases occurring all over the country.

Among General Howard's good-sized audience there were several Chinamen, who listened with the closest attention. The General is of opinion that there will be a change of policy on the part of the United States in regard to the Exclusion Act. Opinion in the West, he believes, is also changing and growing more liberal on the subject.

SHIPWRECKED MEN AT TIERRA DEL FUEGO

THE YAHGAN TRIBE

THE YAHGAN TRIBE

A TOUR IN PATAGONIAN WILDS

Tierra del Fuego and its Savage People A Land of Heathenism and Cruelty

By Emilio
Olson

OUR steamer Chaco, one of the government transports, has now safely reached Ushuaia. Tierra del Fuego, in the southernmost part of our great western hemisphere, where, fifty years ago, amid ice, snow and storms, beaten by savage Indians, the first missionary pioneers laid down their lives and obtained the martyr's crown.

During my two months on board, the Argentine commander and officers have been very kind and were interested in my mission tour in the far south. My precious load of Bibles has now been circulated from Buenos Ayres, along the Atlantic coast of Patagonia, to Tierra del Fuego, off the wild Cape Horn sea, a distance of two thousand miles. Over one thousand Scriptures (Testaments and portions), have been disposed of.
All my books are from the American Bible Society of New York city. The "Silent Messenger of God," his written Word, is now read by hundreds of people in many out-of-the-way places, in territory which has ever before been trodden by a missionary of the Cross.

Patagonia includes Chubut,
Santa Cruz, and Tierra del Fuego.
Its enormous pampas and cor-dilleras are little known. It is supposed by some that the great antediluvian animal, the milodon, still exists in Patagonia. I have been told the Indians call him
"El Gualicho" (or "devil"). A skeleton has been found by explorers in Patagonia at Rada Villy. I ascended a hill about even hundred feet above sea level, and there found sea shells and bones on the very top. Many centuries ago, the whole of Pat-agonia must have been under water.

On October 16, 1901, we reached La Isla del Estado or "Staten Island," near Cape Horn. We safely anchored in Puerto Cook, discovered by Captain Cook. The harbor is the most magnificent I have ever seen. Its surrounding snow-clad peaks seem to reach the clouds, and the ocean waves roll at its feet. The story of wrecks on the rocks of this island, and the coast of Tierra del Fuego is appalling. Since May, 1901, or in about four months, no less than five ships have been lost or abandoned, dashed at night against the rocks, carried to the shore by terrific storms and wild Cape Horn seas, and all hands lost. The Argentine Government is doing good service to humanity, in picking up shipwrecked seamen and bringing them to Buenos Ayres. Our steamer picked up two shipwrecked crews, one from the French ship Astree, Captain A. Yananjean and twenty-nine seamen, the other from the wreck of the British four masted ship Glencaird, of Liverpool, bound for San Francisco. She was lost at dawn on August 1, on the rocks off Staten Island, and of the thirty-four men on board, only the boatswain, Lewis Powell, and two young Scandinavian sailors were saved, after being forty-one days on the frozen rocks of La Isla del Estado. The boatswain, Mr. Powell, and the poor sailors lost all they had, but they are now kindly cared for and well treated on the Argentine transport Chaco.

I had the pleasure of presenting to the people of Staten Island and Ushuaia.

An old Indian (Yahgan), told me at the mission house at Ushuaia, that he remembered as a little boy the story of the massacre of the first white party of missionary martyrs, by the inhuman Fuegians. He pointed out the spot where, in 1845, Bishop Wilson "the good man" was lived alone among the savage natives, daily expecting death."

The Yahgan tribe is fast dying out, owing to the prevalence of disease and the great infant mortality.
The Church of England Missionary Society has a mission at Tekenika, among the Yahgians. Mr. James Pringle being the missionary in charge. A small mission has lately been discovered at Tekenika, and I have been told that gold washing is done by the Indians in some places on Tierra del Fuego. These people are in great condition. A few days ago, I spoke to a native woman and prayed in her home. "Oh," she said in Spanish, "if a missionary only would come and stay here! I, for one would do all I could to help him."

God is calling for laborers. Who will go? Who will read the Gospel? The Yahgan tribe and the Alaculofes of Western Patagonia, and the Tehuelches Indians of Patagonia are waiting for missionaries. The great inland Indian tribes, in the heart of northern South America (where I traveled) are waiting without seeing a single Protestant missionary, and perishing without Christ. They are burning about through the great forests, social, uncared, uncared for by Christendom, lost in heathenism, crime and savery. A pathetic cry comes from these people of a neglected continent in Christian America. They want your prayers and they want the compass of the Gospel.

FAMOUS BIBLE READERS

Read it Through Twenty-five Times

I am sixty-seven years old. Commence! in my

Read it Through Fifty Times

At the age of fourteen years I commenced a systematic reading of the Bible, aiming to read it through once a year, taking three chapters on weekdays and five chapters on the Sabbath. This I continued for about ten years. Since then I have followed a different course, taking words and ver-sicles, a certain number at a time, and tracing them word for word from Genesis to Revelation, only to commence again with another set of words. This last form of study makes it intensely interesting.

inasmuch that I have read the Bible through as many as fifty times, and now am making a sixth of fifty times more. [Taken from the pages of

Read the Bible Fifty-eight Times

I have read the Bible through by course fifty-eight times. I commenced years ago last September. I determined to read the Bible, by course, through, at family worship, once each year, for the mutual benefit of the household, and that my children might be familiar with the Scriptures. I have now read it through fifty-eight times, and am now making a sixth of fifty times more.

THE WOMAN'S BUILDING

AN ESKIMO PET

THE SOUTH'S DISPLAY AT CHARLESTON

All the Buildings Nearing Completion—Scenic and Other Attractions of the Exposition

AFTER more than a month of its life has elapsed, the Charleston Exposition begins to near completion. It will be fully February before all the buildings are ready, or their contents arranged. It is not surprising that this state of affairs exists. Exposition history teems with obstacles surmounted, but Charleston has had more than its share of these. Limited in means, without a cent of government aid, handicapped by cold weather and lack of intelligent labor, the whole undertaking has moved forward only because the shoulders at the wheel have been numerous and strong.

The decision to open the gates December 1, was an admitted mistake; but the officials believed that a delay in the opening date would be almost fatal to success, so the original programme was carried out. Now, however, it is possible to realize that, in its complete form, the Exposition will be well worth seeing. While the Woman's Building is the only one actually in order, the other structures have a number of practically complete exhibits. This is particularly true of the Palace of Agriculture, really the South Carolina State Building, where educational, textile and agricultural displays give an excellent idea of the progress the Twentieth Century South is making.

The educational work is notable, from the kindergarten display to that of South Carolina College, Wade Hampton's Alma Mater. If those in whose hands the Southern educational work has been placed are permitted to carry out their plans, the percentage of illiteracy will, within the days of the rising generation, be reduced to slight proportions. The display of children's work at Winthrop College will compare favorably with any similar work, and the exhibit of Clemson College, Senator Tillman's pride, is more than interesting in its showing of practical educational work accomplished.

In the Cotton Palace, and in the Palace of Commerce, the exhibits are in too incomplete a state to admit of comparison, and this is also true of the Electrical, Transportation and Machinery Buildings. The task of hanging the pictures in the Art Building has just begun, and with the exception of Maryland, the State buildings are still unfinished.

The women of South Carolina have led all exhibitors. Their building, situated a stone's throw from the historic Ashley River, was originally the old Rose mansion. It was Sir Henry Clinton's headquarters during the British occupation of Charleston in Revolutionary days. Here is presented a quaint and curious collection of deep historical interest. In strong contrast with this are the exhibits illustrating the present—the library, its cases filled with books written by women—and the display in another room, illustrating the duties and deeds of the trained nurse. Then there is the dining-room, furnished in the fashion of long ago, with queer chairs, centuries old, a sideboard brought from England by one of the Cavaliers, and a huge mahogany table, at which twenty-five persons might dine with comfort. In the great room on the second floor, the different sections of the State are represented, as well as communities outside the Carolinas. Quaint and curious is the most fitting term of description.

Near the Woman's Building stands the Negro Department, a structure of the Mexican mission type, built in the form of a letter "H." Here is shown the work of the Southern colored educational institutions, the exhibits being almost wholly for the purpose of illustrating what the mechanics and artisans of these schools can accomplish. A feature of note stands just at the rear Architecturally, the Exposition is decidedly unique. The main group of buildings, numbering three, is constructed in horseshoe form. The connecting links are colonnades, and these are used by the Government for the exhibits of the Smithsonian Institution, Navy Department, etc. The principal structures are ornate, and the architect's apparent intention was to make them suggest the tropics. Straight down from the centre of the Cotton Palace lies the sunken garden, surrounded by a moat, bridged at intervals.

In sculpture there are few original groups, but these are of exceptional excellence. Chief among them are the Huguenot, Negro and Colonial groups. Reproductions from antique and modern sculpture are scattered effectively through the grounds. The ever-present Apollo Belvidere vies in favor with the "Broncho Buster," while, here and there, equestrian and other memorials of famous men are visible. It is a matter of satisfaction that no effort is made to impress by quantity rather than quality. Anything may be criticised, but it must be admitted that the greater portion of what the Exposition has is worth seeing.

At the north end of the grounds the Midway begins. It is much the same Midway that wailed, tooted and salaamed at Chicago and Buffalo, only greatly reduced in size. The Esquimaux and the Eastern dancers, both familiar, are unchanged; the menagerie is largely in evidence, and the shriek of the miniature locomotive is none the less piercing. Orient and Occident jostle each other, and the public is invited in stentorian tones to "pay, pay, pay."

A distinctive feature of the Exposition is the support given by the people of Charleston. This is a city of 60,000 population, fully two-thirds thereof colored. The hotel accommodations are naturally limited, and some of the best homes in Charleston have been thrown open to visitors. Nor are the rates exorbitant. Charleston cannot be charged with a desire to overreach visitors. To be in an Exposition town where rates have not been raised, and where there is no danger of being fleeced, is such a unique experience that it ranks with the Exposition itself in point of attractiveness. C. C. JOHNSON.

THE AUDITORIUM AT THE CHARLESTON EXPOSITION

of the building—a large, double brick arch, constructed by students of the State Colored College. So excellent is the brick-work, that the builders of the arch are likely to receive a special medal. Wagon-building, furniture-making, working in iron and steel—all these are in evidence, while the agricultural achievements are not forgotten.

The State buildings, with the exception of that of Maryland, are still in the hands of the workmen, although February 1 will see them all practically complete. The Liberty Bell, placed in position, the Philadelphia Building, which is partially a model of Independence Hall, will then be in order. Illinois has a comfortable and handsome structure, and the New York Building, now bristling with scaffolding, promises to present a fine architectural appearance.

an Exposition town where rates have not been raised, and where there is no danger of being fleeced, is such a unique experience that it ranks with the Exposition itself in point of attractiveness. C. C. JOHNSON.

Baptized in the Sacramento

When thousands were crossing the continent, recently, to attend the Epworth Convention in San Francisco, the first place of interest in the land of fruit and flowers was the capital of the golden state. Those who remained in Sacramento had an opportunity of witnessing a very impressive service. On the bank of the river, whose waters have been used for more than half a century to wash the precious metal, was a large gathering of devout worshippers. After a soul-stirring praise service, and while the company sang, "On Jordan's stormy bank I stand," four candidates for baptism were buried in the stream by Rev. W. Thompson, of the United Brethren Church.

"Wis' some one'd come,
I'm all alone."

"But I don't care,
I've pictures here."

"I'll call mamma,
Or dear papa."

The Order of "Old-Fashioned Women"

THE Order of Old-Fashioned Women came into existence in Atlanta, Ga., some nine years ago. Eight bright young matrons, who, as "society girls," had been good friends and great chums, were in the habit of meeting together on a certain day in each week, "just to have a good time reminiscing," as one put it. One day one of them said, "While we are having a happy time ourselves, why not be doing good to others? It seems so easy to do good; and while others are doing something for suffering humanity about us, why not we?" All agreed that their opportunities for benevolence were too good to be thrown away. "What shall we call ourselves?" was asked.

Then the name of "Old-Fashioned Women" was suggested and adopted. Their idea, at first, was simply to sew for the poor of the city at their merry weekly sessions. In their work, they said they would follow the customs of their grandmothers and great-grandmothers. An old-fashioned quilting party, to which they invited their friends of both sexes, was their first "broad venture" into the realm of raising funds for charitable purposes. It was a success, and the forerunner of others of equally fortunate results. Various quaint forms of entertainment besides were thought out and carried into effect.

These young matrons were none of them clubwomen in the ordinary sense of the word, nor were they card-players, in which particulars, as well as in their forms of work, they were very "old-fashioned." The Order has neither president nor vice-president. The duties of secretary, however, has devolved upon Mrs. Julian Field, who has always been an active factor. Mrs. Morris Brandon is the efficient treasurer, and she "likes to have her hands full," they merrily declare.

It must not be thought that they are doing charitable work frivolously or carelessly. The Order has shown a good business head; the members study ways, means and results, and their money is not spent on impracticable schemes. They come in actual touch with many of those for whom they work, and have proved in various ways their determination to do, and do well, whatever their hands find to do. Its sessions are held on Wednesday afternoon of each week, and no social function nor social obligation of any kind is ever allowed to interfere in any way with this meeting. They have made and invested for the good of humanity many thousands of dollars. Through their efforts, too, many of Atlanta's leading business men have been drawn into showing a practical interest in their schemes for doing good, and respond readily to their calls for aid.

A beautiful free Maternity Ward to Grady Hospital will soon stand as a monument to their faithfulness and devotion. This ward is to be a haven of refuge for destitute mothers, and for working-women who cannot be well cared for in their own poor abodes during their times of trial. Besides the Maternity Home, other institutions might be named which are in their debt, and which have benefited by their generosity and their labor.

Thus the Order of Old-Fashioned Women came into being and has wrought out its history. And thus these women, representing the wealth and aristocracy of the Gate City of the South, with their labor and of their bounty, provide for the relief of the wretched, and find time to visit the afflicted and to listen to the cry of distress. In doing these things, they have followed the natural, happy way of youth, and scattered joy for others along their own paths of innocent pleasure. There has never been a thought of self-glorification; their labors went on quietly for years before the outside world had any knowledge of them as serious philanthropists accomplishing dignified ends. Each name on the roll of the Order of Old-Fashioned Women has now become associated with some noble charity. Every member is doing heartily her part in making the world better and happier. "Blessed are the Happiness Makers" is indeed the fitting motto of the Order of Old-Fashioned Women. BELLE ROBINSON BUTLER.

Sympathy in Service

THE question came up lately at an afternoon tea, where a number of women were chatting over their fragrant cups of Oolong and Ceylon. One bright speaker declared that sympathy was enervating. She instanced the surgeon, whose steady hand did not falter when performing the most delicate and dangerous operation, and declared that for her part she wanted neither a sympathetic doctor nor a sympathetic nurse if she were in need of either. "Are you not confusing emotion with sympathy?" asked a friend. "Emotion, allowed its way, would unfit people for life's sterner duties in many cases, but sympathy is deeper, truer, more divine. Am I not right?" she said, appealing to an old lady who sat a little apart from the rest.

Madam Curtis smiled. "In a way," she replied, "you are both right. I am a Southerner, and like demonstration, but I think there are times and seasons for everything. A nurse who should feel acutely the pangs of the patient, who was so worn out with compassion that she could not properly care for the ailing child or fevered woman, would not be fit for a profession that demands constant and varied attention, and the giving out of great vitality. But nobody wants a woman of adamant to care for her in illness."

"Take it in Settlement Work," said pretty Mrs. Lucas. "When first I began to visit in the homes of my poor friends, I could see no lights nor shades. I was in distress, because their rooms were so cluttered, and the food so poor, and the whole environment so uncomfortable. But after awhile I learned that the poor did not crave pity, that they often resented it; that when they had work and wages and a foothold they were contented, and that their children, as eager and ambitious as mine, had as good a chance in this Republic as any others. I learned to go about gaily and cheerily, and to meet my self-respecting and independent friends in a friendly fashion."

"What we all need as an endowment," said the minister's wife, "is the heart of the Master, the great, warm, true heart of Jesus, throbbing in our own."

The Delights of the Snow

I DOUBT if a child ever is indifferent to the delight of the snow. When the white flakes come floating like so many feathers through the still air, the little watchers by the window are in rapture, and, indeed, older people love to see the wonder and the picture of the freshly fallen snow. One of Lowell's loveliest, most exquisite poems, describes a father, watching the snow with his little living daughter, and kissing her for her sister, fast asleep in a lowly grave under that pure coverlet. The snow has an amazing way of obliterating landmarks, and in the wild tempests which hurtle down on our Western plains, men sometimes lose their way and perish near their homes. Everything looks strange and unfamiliar when the snow heaps itself into hollows, powders trees and shrubs, packs all the crannies and crevices, and roofs the housetops anew with gleaming and stainless thatch from the skies.

It is a warm covering for the grasses and grains, which are kept from freezing under its blanket of softly-clinging ermine.

Some of us have our pensioners all winter, and take pains to feed the friendly birds which winter in the North, scattering crumbs for them, and dropping seeds and other food where the more timid can find their breakfast, when they are too timid to accept it from our hands. Naturalists tell us that a good many birds survive the cold of the North, and find places where they live, in sheltered spots, till spring returns.

The child who loves God's birds and tries to care for them, will be a happier child than the selfish little being who has no pets and no dependents in the big outdoor world.

I question whether many of us women enjoy winter as we ought. A cold day comes, and we barricade the doors, shut tight the windows, drive the fire in stove and furnace, and then—grumble. We manage to do a good deal of grumbling about the weather, first and last, finding it too wet or too dry, too hot or too cold, too this or too that, instead of taking it as God sends it, going forth into it and loving it. One winter, a friend of mine was living in the mountains, and, as her house was small and her family large, they could not all sleep under the same roof. "I had to go across the lot," she said, "to the little cabin where R. and I. slept, and often we took a lantern and walked there between walls of snow. Neither of us had a cold the whole season." Half at least of our misadventures are due to over much coddling. If we would "hup ourselves up," as our Scottish cousins say, and valiantly sally out into the cold, white, wintry world, we should gain in health and live longer. Whatever we do, let us not house our young women, or the children, blessings on them.

Equipped in warm woollen clothing with rubber boots, a healthy child may defy the snow. Have a night-cap thing such as the Canadians wear, or a cap with ear-flaps, and put that on the head, dress in a rig to suit the weather, and go out to the birds, the pine-trees and the snow.

When Does the School Age Begin?

THE merry little kindergarten, where the children, in the most cheerful of ways, with their patient and constructive, pretty exercises, and the pleasant, inductive methods by which they are added into the school life, must wait. Most parents think seven quite soon enough for a child to begin school days to begin, and it is taken for granted that a child who has not been taxed and forced and pushed into undue development, will learn rapidly enough after that milestone. In a former day, children were very much earlier pushed into the kindergarten. At four,

Massachusetts could read, and at three, Boston Murray McChesney had learned the Greek alphabet. At seven, a more up-to-day saint took to the literary world, was reading Greek, having mastered Euclid's treatise at three and a half. The writer of this paragraph could read fluently at four, and was studying English history with pleasure at six. In the old days, children's lives were very simple and not so exciting as now; they were sent early to bed, and they were so much in their parents' in so real a way that their minds were not weighted with the need of themselves, but their own. And now, with all this, the child is more symmetrical, more of an all-around child, and it tells less and dreams more. The natural training which begins in early childhood, adapted to modern children into a practical education. That keeps the mind of these hands as well as of their heads.

On many accounts, the first year of school-life is an advantage. It gives the child a little more of a life, and a life has so little time for play, childhood should have all the play possible. Play is essential. So, in the end, the mother, or said Henry and Harriet, has the schoolroom.

THE FIRST LESSON

Amy and Sister Marion are looking over a picture book, and Amy is spelling, word by word, and pointing to each. If Marion were an accurate reader, Amy would not learn to spell; she would learn to read. As it is, they are partners, and the child's learning is a slow, steady, and sure thing. Amy is learning her first lesson, and with her book, which Marion is slipping the key which unlocks all literature, the key of the alphabet. Watch the sweet intentness of little Amy's face as she traces the lines, and finds out what sounds are hidden in the letters.

A Jolly Junior Endeavor Social

Here comes a story from Iowa, where the Junior Endeavor had an apple social, one of the most successful ever held. Each child brought some kind of apple. The ladies furnished a little music, and there were interesting exercises, including the children's part. The day was the best of it. Some of the most beautiful things were seen, and the most beautiful to all, and with a crowd, which was very thoughtful. In the evening, the Junior Endeavor men, who have been to the social in the same way. Then the ladies, as apples, were given presents to the Methodist Hospital at Des Moines. The children's part, and their mothers, very very generous, brought them, and the children's capital was, and some very nice things, and good enough.

SEEKING PRAISE ON FALSE PRETENSES THE SIN OF LYING

INTERNATIONAL SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON FOR FEB. 9
ACTS 4: 32 TO 5: 11

By Dr. and Mrs. Wilbur F. Crafts

GOLDEN TEXT: "WHEREFORE, PUTTING AWAY LYING, SPEAK EVERY MAN TRUTH WITH HIS NEIGHBOR." EPH. 4: 25

The Lesson Story

AIN was "the first murderer," but to Ananias and Sapphira belongs the distinction of being the first liars and the first hypocrites in the Christian Church. God has put their story into his book, that we may know what an abomination lying lips are to him. Ananias and Sapphira were husband and wife. They must have been comparatively rich, because they had property to sell. When people sell something, they usually have in mind something they want to buy with the money they expect to receive. It was so with Ananias and Sapphira. They wanted to buy a good name, to be talked of as being very generous and kind. But what they did, shows that they were not willing to be what they wished to seem.

Let us look in on them when they have sold their property, and are sitting in their home, with bags of gold on the table between them. We hear a whisper. We cannot tell whether it comes from Ananias or Sapphira. The words are, "Let us keep back a part of the money for ourselves. The gift will be a large one, even if we do not give it all." "Yes," says the other, "but let us get the credit of giving it all." So they take off one bag and set it aside. Then Ananias takes what is left and starts to find Peter and John in the synagogue, that is, the church. Sapphira does not go with him. She stays at home to dig a hole in the ground and hide the money which they have kept for themselves. But she could not hide it in that way, you will find, as the story goes on. Ananias has come into the synagogue. It might have been the Lord's day, I think it was, because it was then that people gave money to the Church as they do now. Ananias lays the gold down at the feet of Peter and John and says, "My wife and I have sold some land, and what we have received for it we want to give to help the poor people in the church." He expected to hear Peter say, "How very generous you are to give so much." Ananias expected to see the people look surprised and hear them say, "What a good man Ananias is. He gives more than anybody else!" But he heard none of these things, for nobody said them. Instead, Peter said to him, "You are telling a lie to God that Satan has given you. You could have kept a part of the money for yourself without telling a lie about it, for it was all your own, to give or to keep as you pleased." How did Peter know it was a lie? God had told him. Peter has no sooner spoken these words than Ananias falls down dead at his feet. God has punished him with death. How dreadful to die such a death in the Church of God! For a rich man, Ananias had a very small and a very quick funeral, for at the command of Peter, four men carried him out at once and buried him.

Sapphira, at home, waited for her husband to come back and tell her how they were praised for their gift. But he did not come. You and I know why he did not. She stands in the doorway, and watches for him, but he does not come, and after three hours, she starts out to find out what is the matter. She comes into the synagogue, and sees the gold lying there which Ananias brought. She looks about, but does not see Ananias. She asks if anybody can tell her where he is. Peter, seeing her, points to the gold, and asks her, "Did you sell your land for so much?" She answers, "Yes, for so much." Peter says to her, "I see you agreed together to tell this lie to God, and you shall be punished with death as your husband has been." Then Sapphira knew what had become of Ananias. And God sent death to Sapphira, and there was another speedy death and small funeral, for the same four men who had carried out Ananias and buried him, carried out Sapphira, and buried her beside her husband, both in one grave. We would like to know what was done with the gold which lay on the floor. The Bible does not tell us about it; we might guess that it was not used to help God's church in any way, for it was God's law that a lamb that had any blemish, a broken limb or a spot of disease about it, could not be used for sacrifice. Surely, the gold of Ananias and Sapphira had a worse blemish. Perhaps a burying ground for poor people was bought with it. That would be the best way of burying the money, and it was what had been done with the money which Judas received for betraying Christ. We may be very sure that no one wanted to use the money which had been the false offering of Ananias and Sapphira. It was lie-money, and not the last entitled to that name.

Application and Illustration

Not one of them said that ought of the things which he possessed was his own, but they had all things common (Acts 4: 32).

Before we turn to Ananias, the hypocrite, let us view the scene that precedes his story when Barnabas and others sold their land and houses, and brought all the proceeds to the common treasury of that early Church, out of which all were supplied "as any one had need." It is useless to debate whether that example should have been followed in every church. It was not followed in any, even in apostolic times. But the spirit which prompted that brotherly generosity certainly should be in every church. No one, saint or sinner, can truly say that aught of the things he possesses is his own. The doctrine of "stewardship" has always been God's doctrine, and is now the people's doctrine also, in the case of rich men, at least.

President Roosevelt voices the nation's sentiment in saying: "When a man has made a large fortune through the opportunities and advantages offered him in this country, the people have at least a moral right to demand that the wealth be used in such a manner as to tell on the whole for good and not for evil." The Bible does not command us to repeat the beautiful communism of the Church of Jerusalem, but it does teach that we should give proportionately and regularly on the first day of the week (I. Cor. 16: 2); freely—"the Lord loveth an hilarious giver"—which is the literal rendering of II. Cor. 9: 7. Manifestly, the giving of the early Church was not an irksome duty, but a joy. Barnabas is mentioned by name, probably because he was rich and because it takes more grace for a rich man to give all than for the poor widow to do so, who gave the two mites—a grace which Ananias, with whom Barnabas is set in contrast, attempted but did not attain. Barnabas was originally called Joseph, but got the other surname, meaning son of consolation or exhortation, because of his brotherly words of cheer and helpfulness. It is clear, therefore, that he did not make his giving a substitute for personal service. Owning a field, he sold it, and laid all the proceeds at the apostle's feet, that is, at Jesus' feet. The story of the early Christians giving all they had, in their love for God and each other, certainly ought to shame us out of the modern habit, that has led someone to say that Christians "save their pennies for the Lord and the organ grinders." Few who devote an evening to sinful or even selfish pleasure, get off with less expense than a dollar; but Christians at evening church, receiving higher joys, average a penny apiece, as many giving less as more. It has been said, "One vice is as expensive as ten virtues." It is hardly themselves and give out of these earnings of their own. The battle with selfishness is a hard one, and should begin early. A boy being given two nickels, one for himself and one for the missionary cause, in tossing them carelessly lost one through a crack in the floor, and exclaimed, "Oh, there goes the missionary nickel." What a joy to ourselves and the world it would be if we could some way lose selfishness itself in childhood and never find it again! We do not need to go back nineteen hundred years, but only to the last Christmas month, when nearly everybody in our land seemed to be having secret joy for weeks in preparing gifts for friends and the poor and the Church, to see that "it is more blessed to give than to receive." The generous giving of the early Church is oftenest repeated in our days in the missionary field. It is like going back to the New Testament to go to Ceylon, where every tenth tree of the Christians is given to the Lord and marked "X," and where a tenth of other earnings and of work is also given, and even of the rice, as they cook each meal they throw a part into "the Lord's rice pot."

Ananias, with Sapphira his wife, kept back part of the price. As the first sin of Israel on entering the Land of Promise was prompted by the love of money, Achan's secret appropriation of the wedge of gold, a part of the spoils of Jericho, which he buried in his tent in vain, bringing judgment upon himself and family, so the first sin that clouded the spiritual land of promise into which the Christian Church had just entered, was the sin of Ananias and Sapphira, who coveted such applause for generosity as they had heard bestowed upon Barnabas, but were not willing to pay the price in an equally unreserved gift of the money they had obtained. The parable of the Sower, in its reference to the shallow soil upon the rock, is probably the correct interpretation of their characters. The preaching of Peter and the healing of the lame man took root in their hearts, but they had little depth of earth, and under it was the unbroken rock of covetousness. They tried to win reputation rather than character, which last is heart deep. "Reputation is what men think of us; character is what God knows of us." If we take care of character, reputation will take care of itself; but if we are chiefly anxious for reputation, we are in danger of substituting hypocrisy for character, and wrecking our lives as did Ananias and his wife. At first they planned only to act a lie, but this led to reiterated spoken lies, as one lie usually leads to another.

Lying is now so common, and is treated as so trivial an offense, that we may well bring the subject back to God's judgment bar and try it by the Book. What does the Bible say of lying and of truth? "They go astray as soon as they are born, speaking lies." "Thou desirest truth in the inward parts." "Putting away lying, speak every man truth with his neighbor." "Lying lips are an abomination to the Lord." "All liars shall have their part in the lake that burneth with fire and brimstone." What God thinks of the sin of lying is seen not only in this but also in the case of Gehazi, who lied to Naaman in order to get fine clothes, and got leprosy instead, whose loathsomeness pictured the moral ugliness of lying in the God's-eye view.

The frequent debate whether it is right to lie to save life, should be expressed rather in this way: Is it safer to trust a lie than to trust God? Abraham lied to save life in a case where it seemed as necessary as in the imaginary ones of modern debates; but he made the matter worse, and after sacrificing his wife's character would have lost his own life, and her's also probably, had not God miraculously interposed to save him from the consequences of his falsehood. There are many ways of lying. It is sometimes done in reporting a conversation, by interjecting one's own prejudices, as Eve did, in reporting God to the devil. God had said that Adam and Eve should not eat of the tree of knowledge, but Eve said to the devil, "God hath said, 'Ye shall not eat of it, neither shall ye touch it.'" Are we not sometimes guilty of enlarging the stories we tell in like manner? Another form of lying, and one of the worst, as it is also one of the most common, is in breaking promises which should be most sacredly kept, especially promises to children. A beautiful story is told of Sir William Napier's fidelity to a promise. He was one day walking in the country, when he met a little girl of five years sobbing over a broken bowl. In it she had taken her father's dinner, and had dropped it in returning, and was sure she would be beaten for the accident when she returned to her mother. As she told this, hope kindled at his look of sympathy, and she said, "But you can mend it, can't you?" "No," he said kindly, "but I will give you sixpence to buy another." On looking in his purse he found he had no change, and to soothe the child's renewed sorrow he said he would bring it to her at the same place and hour the next day. On returning to his own home, he found an invitation to dine that next day with a cherished friend, but as he could not keep his word with the child if he accepted, he declined, with the explanation that he had a "previous engagement."

Many Forms of Lying

so when one has in his "ten virtues" the beautiful grace of liberality.

Here is a story of a little girl, named Sarah, who showed in our day the very spirit of those early Christians. Her classmates in the Sabbath School were selling chickens and all sorts of things to get missionary money, but Sarah had nothing she could sell. She looked again and again at her pet cat, Tabby, glad that nobody would buy a cat. But calling one day with her mother on a Mrs. Bates, she heard Colonel Bates, the husband, say in the next room: "Such times as we are having with mice! I would give five dollars for a good mouser." Sarah knew that Col. Bates, who did not go to church, would not give that five dollars to missions in any other way, but she could not bear to think of giving up dear Tabby. But the next day she came around with the cat and asked for Col. Bates. "The five dollars, if you please; you said you would, you know, give for a good mouser; and Tabby is the best one that ever was, and Mamma says so; and the missionaries need the money—the heathen people do, you know—and I mustn't be selfish and keep Tabby. Will you be very good to her?" and a great tear, hot from little Sarah's blue eyes, splashed on the Colonel's hand. Colonel Bates had not really meant what he said. It was only his extravagant way of speaking; but when Sarah reminded him of what she had heard him say, he could not go back on his word, and so Sarah brought five dollars to the mission band, and was very happy to give so much, even at such a sacrifice.

The Missionary Cat

Hands that ope but to receive Empty close; they only live Richly who can richly give.

—J. G. WHITTIER.

The Bible teaches that giving is a part of worship, and so no one can do another's giving any more than his repenting. A little boy being at church for the first time, when the collection plate was passed, said to the collector politely, "Mamma will pay my fare." But children should be taught that parents can no more do their giving than their praying, and very early trained to earn money

"LITTLE SUNSHINE"

THE HAPPY HOME

THE TRUTHFUL HEART

THE SUNSHINE SOCIETY

The Good that "Sunshiners" Do

READERS of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD who have shown such kindly interest in the growth of the Sunshine Society, will be glad to learn something of its wonderful development in all the States of the Union and of its extension to other lands. The fact that the International has now over 100,000 members, and that hundreds of letters are daily received from every State and Territory and from many countries across the water, tells its own cheerful story of how the blessed Sunshine spreads.

There are more than sixty branches in New York City, not counting the hundred branches in Brooklyn and Long Island. Many prominent clubwomen are active in Sunshine work. Mrs. Denison, President of Sorosis, is Vice-President of the International organization. Mrs. Wm. Tod Helmuth, former President of the State Federation of Women's Clubs, is Sunshine State President. Mrs. Joseph Fairchild Knapp, formerly New York State President of Sunshine and chairman now of the Board of Directors, is well-known to everyone as a popular writer. Mrs. Edwin Knowles, Treasurer of the International Sunshine Society, lives in Brooklyn, where she is the president of several large clubs; she always manages to have several Sunshine Committees at work spreading "Good Cheer." She is much beloved by everybody. Buffalo, whose Sunshine Society ranks next in size to that of Greater New York, can boast a quicker and more remarkable growth in Sunshine work than any other city of the State. The city has now thirty separate branches. One branch in a single High School has 1,300 members, another 600. The 600 teachers of Buffalo all belong to Sunshine. Mrs. Chas. F. Kingsley, the chief organizer for Western New York and President of the Buffalo Review Sunshine Branch, can hardly keep track of the work, it grows so fast.

The Masten Park High School girls sent in their list of names, beautifully copied, in one long roll, like a monster petition to Congress. The Central High School girls are maintaining a Sunshine Day Nursery. They wanted $98 for this Nursery the other day, and in a short time a little fair was started that realized more than $400.

Sunshine work received quite an impetus from Exposition activities. Being a member of the Board of Women Managers, Mrs. Kingsley was largely instrumental in the happy issue of Sunshine Day, October 12, one of the most successful days at the Pan-American. There was a meeting in the Temple of Music, where over a thousand voices formed the chorus which sang the International and State Sunshine songs. From 4 to 6 P.M., the Woman's Building was thrown open, and the Board of Managers received all guests. In the evening, the New York State Building was devoted to the Sunshine Exercises, a reception being held in one part of the building, while speaking and singing formed the entertainment in another. Albany ranks third. Over a thousand members swell her in Sunshine growth—fifteen Circles or Branches. Mrs. John D. Wish is the chief organizer;

Mrs. Katharine Martin, President. It was in Albany that Mrs. Theodore Roosevelt, wife of the President of the United States, first became interested in Sunshine.

It would require many pages to give an account of the work in the other States. From the Boston Home Library Mission, a Sunshine member writes:

"I asked the little Italian and Irish children about having a 'sunny' day when they were alone. It was with hearty enthusiasm. They made sunny paper pictures and told us their names, and dressed themselves and ends from their mamma's scraps in 'sunny' clothes."

Mrs. Eleanor F. Tracy reports: "During the year just closed, the 'Hospital' Society has sent some large boxes of Sunshine contributions to the General Office, London, containing many valuable gifts from the various countries, as well as from the President. The President's Christmas gift to the British was a great deal of material and cake for the women inmates of the Home for the Blind, 400 Broadway, New York, where the 'Sunshine' work of the Branch is done. The President brings much brightness into the lives of those who cannot see the blessed Sunshine."

Thanks for Sunshine

A shut-in member in Dogwood, Ala., writes, that she wishes to thank the General Office for Sunshine gift received at Christmas. She is in need of any kindness which can be shown to her, for she has been a cripple for many years, and the gift means to procure the comforts of life.

WOMANLY LOVE

I saw a smile on a poor man's face
And I saw a tear in his eye;
The sun broke forth: I saw that smile in His eyes.
We are all here,
Gold of such love and mercy
It is the very light of day
In our lives.
I saw a
Footsore and cold,
A soft hand pressed his forehead
And he was Wrought from gold
Grew straight and shapely, and will be
To smiling at the golden throne
When he is
With his hands life's hours
Made whole flowers
Then every gentle deed we've done, or kind word given Wrought from gold, and made us whole and shapely.

A New Sunshine Day Nursery

The Sunshine Branch of the Organized Aid, Rooms at a Summer school, Jersey City, N. J., has for support and maintenance, a new room for the night school. These rooms will be used as a Day Nursery. It is the largest and best equipped in the city, and the children of the poor parents are being cared for, and the mothers are able to go to work. Mrs. John C. Collier, of Camden, N. J., who will pay the expenses of such gifts. The Sunshine Day Nursery is a beautiful work for the women of the city, and it is a great help to the mothers who are unable to care for their children. It is a place where the children are safe and happy, and the mothers are able to go to work and earn money for their families.

THE bright old lady looked fully able to justify her daughter's confidence in her wisdom, as one "who would know what to do," in any given circumstances. She welcomed 'Rastus and 'Elizabeth warmly, feeling now that she would have the solution of a problem that had troubled her. She reproached herself for letting that bright little boy go away by himself, and yet, it was so clearly not her fault. He had slipped away so quickly and noiselessly. But the kind soul did blame herself, and she was anxious to disarm the annoyance of this couple, who might be disposed to blame her. "Yes, yes, but do sit down and have a bit of dinner with us," she said hospitably. "I declare I've felt worried 'bout that child ever since he was here. He slipped out just like a shadow whilst me an' Em'line was busy with this naughty girl here. I says to father that night, 'you'd ought to hitch an' look for him,' I says. But he would have it that his folks wa'n't far away. So after a spell it kind of slipped my mind. An' so you found his hat! Well, well! I took notice 'at he didn't have no hat on, nor shoes an' stockin's neither."

"He had 'em on when he started," said Elizabeth, into whose ashen face a trace of color had crept. "But he liked to go barefoot, Manuel did."

"He prob'ly took 'em off," chirruped the old lady cheerfully. "I wouldn't worry a mite 'bout him if I was you."

"Wouldn't you if it was her?" asked Elizabeth, pointing to Hilda, who sat nursing her kitten on the doorstep.

"Land! I s'pose I would if 't was Hildy," admitted Mrs. Scott. "She's sech a little fidget, she's been with us sence her ma died," she continued, lowering her voice confidentially. "Her pa's my oldest son by my first husband". He sets great store by Hildy. I tell him he'll spile her if he don't look out."

Elizabeth had arisen and was standing rigidly erect. "I guess we'd better be goin'," she said.

"Why, Mis' Winch, you don't mean it. They've jest took the horses out, an' dinner'll be on the table in no time."

"I guess I'll be goin' anyhow," repeated Elizabeth doggedly. "'Rastus c'n stay to dinner; I'll go on. I—I couldn't eat nohow till I fin' out. Mebbe he's at the next house; an' mebbe—he's lost." The last words were spoken over her shoulder with a piteous smile. She was already half-way to the road.

"You'll tell 'Rastus 'at I'm goin'," she said, as she laid her hand upon the gate. "I couldn't wait nohow."

She walked stiffly without turning her head till a group of giant hickories hid the house, with the dismayed face of her hostess in the open door; then she gathered up her scant skirts in both hands and broke into an awkward run.

She stopped, where she saw standing back from the road an unpainted house, stained with weather, quiet and sad in the afternoon sunshine in the midst of its unpruned lilacs and syringas. Elizabeth stopped short in the narrow road fringed with the dusty white and gold of mayweed. Her breath came in great gasps; her bonnet hung grotesquely about her neck; wisps of gray hair straggled across her face. Presently she crept nearer. "If he was to see me this way it 'ud scare him," she muttered, and lifted her tremulous hands in a feeble attempt at readjustment.

No one answered her timid rap at the front door. "I guess mebbe she'd be washin' up the dinner dishes 'round back," she said to herself, as she stepped uncertainly onto the narrow, worn path. "They's folks been livin' here anyhow," she assured herself; "I c'n see a milk pail; an' there's bees." Repeated knockings brought no response. Whoever had lived there had evidently gone away, but had left things behind as if coming back. An uncurtained window next tempted the anxious eyes.

Half an hour later, when Erastus Winch drew up with a loud "Whoa, thar!" to his tired horses, he heard the sound of loud sobbing mingled with frantic knocking on a closed door.

"'Lizbeth! I say, 'Lizbeth!" he shouted. "What in all possess is the matter with ye? They ain't nobody livin' here now; I hurried arter ye to tell ye soon's I 'd et my dinner!" He caught the frenzied figure by the shoulder. "Say, 'Lizbeth, listen to me, will ye! Si Scott tol' me. An ol' man named Mose Armitage used to live here; but he sol' out his stock to Si las' week an' went off."

"Look, 'Rastus! look in there!" moaned Elizabeth; "it's his little shirt a-hangin' on a cheere; don't you see it?"

"Sho! I don't see no shirt. Listen to reason, can't ye? the ol' feller has lived here sole alone for the las' twenty year; I guess Si's folks 'ud know. Come now, we've got to git hum; it's nigh onto milkin' time, an' we a good ten mile f'om the cows. We'll try it agin some day, mebbe."

Elizabeth clung obstinately to the latch. "I ain't a-goin'!" she wailed. "I'm goin' to stay here till he gits back. I want 'Manuel!'"

Winch swore under his breath; then almost tenderly he lifted the frail figure in his arms and deposited it on the wagon-seat. "You're a-goin' hum," he said.

Chapter XII.—A Lawyer's Story

MR. CALEB SMALLEY, of the law firm of Trent & Smalley, looked up from the document which he was inspecting with a deepening of his habitual frown. "I believe, I said to you, Short, that I wished to be left un-interrupted to-day during the morning hours," he said, tightening his lips into a thousand austere puckers.

"Yes, sir, I had not forgotten, sir," said the clerk, with anxious humility. "But Mr. Hicks, sir, thought you would wish to see—" He finished his sentence neatly by laying a visiting card on the desk before his employer.

Mr. Smalley glanced at the card. Then he arose and straightened his spare figure. "Mr. Hicks was—ah—right," he said tentatively. "You may show the gentleman in at once."

The lawyer advanced to meet his visitor with interest, which deepened into an unpleasant feeling of surprise as his eyes rested upon the huge, picturesque figure, clad in rusty black, whose presence seemed to fill the small room to overflowing. "Mr. Moses Armitage, I believe," he said sharply, referring with automatic precision to the visiting card. "I have not before had the pleasure of your acquaintance, sir; though my father—now retired—will remember you."

Moses Armitage sat down, looking ruddier and more imposing than his wont by virtue of contrast with the gray tints of his surroundings, which included the meagre figure of the solicitor. He made no haste to speak, but sat looking about with a troubled expression in his clear, blue eyes.

Mr. Smalley frowned judicially, and accosted his visitor a second time, with a touch of incisive keenness in his smooth tones. "We have not had an opportunity of informing you of the exact circumstances connected with your brother's death," he said. "We had hoped that your interest in the estate as possible—indeed, I may say as probable—heir might lead you to communicate with us promptly."

"I have no interest in the estate," said Moses Armitage, with deliberation. "I am not here as an heir, either possible or probable. I will not inherit my father's money under any circumstances."

Mr. Smalley fell to studying his visitor with his head very much on one side and his eyes half closed. "That's a very singular notion of yours, Mr. Armitage," he observed at length, with some amusement evident in his voice; "in view of the fact that the property is an exceedingly handsome one. However—"

"I came," said the other, fixing his eyes with much earnestness upon the lawyer, "to find out if I have any kith or kin left alive."

"That," said Mr. Smalley, expanding his narrow chest, "is exactly what we cannot tell you. It is, in short, the point in question. You, I take it, have had very little communication with your family for some years."

"I have heard nothing from them for more than forty years."

"Ah, I thought as much," exclaimed Mr. Smalley, with apparent satisfaction. "What, may I ask, was the last word you had from your father?"

Moses Armitage started forward in his chair; his eyes blazed. "I had the last word from my father in this very room," he said, in a low, choked voice. "I was a boy of scarce twenty; I loved my father and my brother. They were all I had in the world. Your father sat where you are sitting now. He handed me an envelope; it contained a check—the half of my mother's money, and a letter—But, no, I will not tell you the words of that letter; they are best buried with the dead. Tell me what you know about the family, and be quick about it; the air of this place stifles me!" He leaned back and wiped the moisture from his forehead with a trembling hand.

Mr. Smalley regarded him attentively. "Thank you," he said civilly; "some identification was necessary, you know." He then proceeded to adjust the finger-tips of one hand against those of the other with the extreme nicety and precision, eyeing them with an attentive frown, as if they were so many legal instruments—which, indeed, they were.

"When your esteemed father deceased, some fifteen years ago," he began, punctuating his clauses with a silent opening and closing of his two forefingers, "he left the property unreservedly to his second son, Jonas, and his heirs. Mr. Jonas Armitage was at that time the head of quite a flourishing

A STRAIGHT SHOT

Brought About By Accident.

A lady who accidentally began eating Grape-Nuts and quickly discovered the strength that she gained, felt disposed to write regarding the food.

She says, "Grape-Nuts has done so much for me. When I came out of school I broken down in health from overwork nervousness. Every summer during the weather I have been practically exhausted and generally have lost five pounds or over."

Quite by accident I began using Grape-Nuts and thought I liked it very much first, but the taste grew on me so much I am extravagantly fond of it. I ate it last summer, and was surprised to find it kept up with plenty of strength, my nerve force increased, and I lost no flesh."

I know exactly what has sustained me. I have made no change in my way of living except to take on Grape-Nuts. I never of it. I always use it with cold cream, summer, and warm cream in winter. This a straightforward, honest letter, and I trust will be of service to you." Lucy J. Row, Cedar Falls, Ia.

III. Answers must be received at this office three weeks in advance of the date in which they are intended to appear.

IV. The editor reserves the right to condense accepted answers when necessary, and compensation will be based on the matter as printed.

V. Do not write inquiring if your material has been accepted. If it appears on this page, you will know that it has been accepted.

VI. We cannot return any MSS. sent to the Editor of THE MAIL-BAG—not even if stamps accompany them.

VII. Write only on one side of the sheet, and never send on the same sheet anything intended for any other department of the paper. Correspondents answering more than one question should append their name and address to each answer.

VIII. Address all communications intended for this department, Editor The Mail-Bag, The Christian Herald, Bible House, New York.

Readers are invited to forward new questions which they believe would be suitable for discussion in this department.

These Questions will be Answered Feb. 26

1. What is a "magic square?"
2. Does human nature naturally tend to the right or to the wrong? (This has no reference to "original sin.")
3. Why does a valley usually suffer earlier and more frequently from frosts than do the adjoining hills?
4. Would it conduce to the welfare of a church if the preacher were to shorten his discourse, say to twenty minutes?
5. Are Christian philanthropists justified in appealing to the public for the support of their institutions, or should they depend, as George Muller did, entirely on God's sending the means?

Questions of the Week

1. Name things in common use which are employed as symbols for the Word of God?

Food—(Job 23: 12), "I have esteemed the words of his mouth more than my necessary food;" (Jer. 15: 16), "Thy words were found and I did eat them." Water—(John 4: 14), "Whosoever drinketh of the water that I shall give him." Milk—(I. Peter 2: 2), "The sincere milk of the Word." Honey—(Ps. 19: 7-10), "The law (or doctrine) of the Lord sweeter than honey," etc. Honey-comb—(Ps. 119: 103), "How sweet are thy words, sweeter than honey." Hammer—(Jer. 23: 29), "Is not my Word like a hammer?" Fire—(Jer. 23: 29), "Is not my Word like a fire?" Lamp—(Ps. 119: 105), "Thy Word is a lamp." Light—(Ps. 119: 130), "Thy Word is a light." Sword—(Eph. 6: 17), "The sword of the spirit which is the Word of God." Two-edged Sword—(Heb. 4: 12), "The Word of God is sharper than any two-edged sword." Seed—(Matt. 13: 19, Mark 4: 14, Luke 8: 11), "The seed is the Word of God." Bow—(Hab. 3: 9), "Thy bow was made quite naked, even thy Word." Gold and silver—(Ps. 119: 72, 127), "The law of thy mouth . . . than gold and silver."

E. MUDGE.

2. What restrictions on immigration should be applied to prevent the coming of undesirable immigrants?

As an abstract principle of right, we cannot exclude from our shores immigrants seeking a home on the Western continent. If the earth is the Lord's and the fullness thereof, if God has made of one blood all nations, and if this country is to remain an asylum for the oppressed and unfortunate of all lands, as originally intended, then we ought not to desire to prevent from occupying this commodious, resourceful land, those who thus seek it to better their condition. Restriction on the ground of illiteracy, poverty, or immorality, is entirely unwarranted. Ignorance is no sin or crime, and we will educate the immigrant. Men come because they are poor, desirous of earning a livelihood and getting wealth, and if we have any faith at all in mankind, in ourselves, and in God, we should receive the morally degraded with all Christian kindness and brotherly consideration. The one point of missionary work alone should cause all Christians to oppose such a stultifying policy of exclusion, for herein is presented the grandest opportunity for evangelical work that any Christian people have ever had in any country, in any age of the world's history. There is absolutely naught to fear; let us do our duty, and trust God.

WALTER W. HUBBARD.

First, for the purpose of excluding paupers, or those likely to become such, immigrants should be required to possess a reasonable amount of property—an amount sufficient to begin life decently under American conditions. But this property test should be carefully framed, so as not to exclude desirable persons on account of transient poverty, who are capable of self-support. Second, no Anarchist, drunkard, or person suffering from insanity or contagious disease, or one who has ever been convicted of infamous crime, should be admitted. Third, for the protection of American labor, contract laborers should be rigidly debarred. Fourth, no immigrant should be admitted unless there is a reasonable presumption that he expects to become Americanized and establish a home or residence here; and no immigrant should land who, on becoming a citizen, could not contribute to the moral and material welfare of his adopted country. Fifth, and most important, a reasonable degree of education should be absolutely required. Prospective citizens should be capable of understanding something of our institutions, and be able to read and write some language, so that they may have the ability, at least, to become intelligent and good Americans. We cannot welcome too much good immigration to our shores; we cannot afford to permit any of the bad. Our present laws are too lax, and should be amended, as the character of our immigration has changed very much for the worse during late years. I believe if the above suggestions were made laws, our restrictions would be sufficient, yet not drastic.

JAMES BELL MAJOR.

3. What was the origin of the term "Star Chamber," as applied to a secret tribunal?

The famous Court of the Star Chamber, which flourished in England for about 150 years, is supposed to have been so named "from the gilded stars on the ceiling of the old council chamber of the palace of Westminster in which it sat." It was either identical with the king's council or composed of a committee having delegated powers. Its power, though varying somewhat, and at times seemingly modified, was always great, and doubtless sometimes exercised against the rights and liberties of the people. It was finally abolished by Act of Parliament in 1641.

S. FOSTER GRADY.

"Star Chamber" was the name given in the XV., XVI., and XVII. centuries to an English high court of justice, consisting of the members of the ordinary council, or of the privy council only, with the addition of certain judges, and exercising jurisdiction, mainly criminal, in certain cases. The origin and early history of the court are somewhat obscure. It is in the reign of Edward III. that we first hear of the "chancellor, treasurer, justices, and others," exercising jurisdiction in the "star-chamber" or "chambre de estoiles," at Westminster. In Henry VI.'s reign, one Damers was acquitted of a certain charge by the King's council "in camera stellata." The name is probably derived from the stars with which the roof of the chamber was painted; but it has also been derived from a Hebrew word shetar or sh'etar, a bond, on the supposition that the room was that in which the legal documents connected with the Jews were kept, prior to their expulsion by Edward I. It was abolished by the Long Parliament in 1641, and was never afterwards revived.

STANLEY M. ROLAND.

4. What is the simplest way of demonstrating that a beam of light will produce sound?

One of the most wonderful discoveries in science that has been made, is the fact that a beam of light produces sound. A beam of sunlight is thrown through a lens on a glass vessel that contains lampblack, colored silk or worsted, or other substances. A disk, having slits or openings cut in it, is made to revolve swiftly in this beam of light, so as to cut it up, thus making alternate flashes of light and shadow. On putting the ear to the glass vessel, strange sounds are heard so long as the flashing beam is falling on the vessel.

EDWIN C. RODDY.

5. What should be the attitude and practical course of the Christian Church toward the Zionist movement among the Jews, who are now agitating for the restoration of the Hebrew Commonwealth and the redemption of Palestine?

It should be one of friendly interest and encouragement. No active aid can be given, nor is it needed. Dr. Herzl has not fully disclosed the answer given by the Sultan to his proposals, but it was evidently of such a character as to justify him in raising the necessary funds. The present idea is to have a lease of the land for a term of years, if it cannot be obtained in perpetuity, the Sultan to receive rental for such portions as the Jews occupy, payment to be guaranteed by some responsible banking house. If we may judge by what the Jews can do wherever they settle, we may predict that a colony once established in Palestine, with such capital as Jewish bankers could furnish, would soon spread over the whole land and would become a quasi-independent nation. They very naturally desire to regain possession of their

THE PATHWAY TO PEACE*

A Sublime Bequest Producing Serenity that the World Cannot Disturb

WHEN a man makes his will, he takes into account the value of his property, the claims that certain persons have on him, and the character and extent of the bequest that he should assign to them respectively. Conscious that within twenty-four hours he must die, Christ made a bequest to his friends. Of worldly goods he had none to divide, but he left them that which was precious beyond price. "My peace I give unto you." Many a millionaire might count himself happy if he could exchange the whole of his possessions for such a treasure. Highly as we value money, keen as is our appreciation of the comforts and advantages it secures, it is a fact that the very rich man is seldom happy. Many of them have admitted that their wealth has entailed anxiety and worry and trouble. One enormously rich man in New York, who was showing his enterprises to a friend, who was lost in wonder at their variety and extent, asked him how much he would consider a fair compensation for managing so huge a property. The friend could not estimate it. "Would you do it for your board and clothes?" the millionaire asked. "No, certainly not," was the reply. "Well," said the millionaire, "that is all that I get." Poor people, too, have their miseries. The perpetual harass some of them have in getting the small sum needed for their support renders life a burden. To both the rich and the poor, the one thing that can bring happiness is the gift that Christ made to his people—his peace.

Christ's own life made the bequest all the more significant. Apparently, he had enjoyed very little peace. The mob in his own city tried to murder him; the rulers of his nation plotted to destroy him, one of his own followers betrayed him and all forsook him in his hour of trial. All through his ministry, he was opposed and cavilled at, yet, he could speak of his peace as of something which he had kept undisturbed. Surely a possession all need. It was not the peace of lazy indifference, for his life was full of activity. Nor the peace that avoids conflict with wrong and wickedness, for he openly denounced wrongdoing. Worried and harassed by his foes, and misunderstood by his friends, and on his way to a violent and cruel death, how profound must that peace have been to sustain him through it all. Who would not desire such peace that the ills and sorrows and anxieties of life could not disturb! How urgent is the need in all lives for such a sustaining power! The business man, distracted by the fluctuations of the market and the cruel competition of rivals; the head of the household distressed by the temper or misconduct of members of his family; the good man grieving over the wickedness of a community; the unemancipated man at war with himself, unable to do the things that he would and doing the things that he hates—all these need peace more than anything in the world, especially the kind of peace which Christ had and which he left as a precious legacy to his followers. It is not the peace of the ascetic who leaves the world and shuts his eyes to the evil that is rampant; nor the peace of one who feeling incapable of stemming the tide of iniquity rides with the stream; nor that of the man enslaved by evil habit who yields to it, hopeless of resisting; but the peace of the valiant fighter, who is true to the right and the good, in the world, but not of the world.

How may such peace be attained? How may this wonderful bequest of Christ be secured? Looking at his own life, we see that he had an abiding confidence in the love and guidance of his Father. He talked much of him, spent whole nights in communion with him, and declared that he did always the things which pleased him. Is it not probable that we have here the clue to his possession of peace? The old story of the child in a storm at sea, who was untroubled because his father was at the helm, shows the effect of unflinching trust. Christ had that confidence and had, besides, the consciousness of being in harmony with his Father and of loyally fulfilling his will. There must have been a deep restfulness in that condition. None of the storms that raged around him could disturb it. It is the peace that Paul described as coming from believing. This peace is our inheritance if we would only grasp it. Supreme, unflinching belief in Christ, earnest endeavor in all things to do the will of God, accepting cheerfully whatever changes in our lot may come, knowing that they come from his hand, and that whatever happens, his love abides sure and constant—that is the pathway to the peace which passes understanding.

An Enthusiastic Convention

The Twenty-eighth Convention of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union at Fort Worth, Tex.

SELDOM has the Woman's Christian Temperance Union had a more enthusiastic national Convention than its twenty-eighth, which was held at Fort Worth, Tex. An unusually large number of State Presidents and other ex-officio members traveled south to attend its sessions. The city gave the ladies a warm welcome, which was voiced by the Mayor, the Board of Trade, a deputation of the clergy, and of the Young Men's Christian Association.

The reports of the various officers were eminently satisfactory. The treasurer stated that the receipts had covered expenditures and left a small balance on the year's accounts. The total receipts were $24,452 and the expenses $23,916. The corresponding secretary announced that the Union had extended its operations during the past year to Mexico, Cuba, Porto Rico, Hawaii and Manila. In Cuba, a national W. C. T. U. has been organized by Mrs. J. K. Barney. In the Sunday School department an increase was reported in the number of signatures to pledges. Mrs. Mary H. Hunt called attention to the fact that sixteen million children in our public schools are now being taught by scientific demonstration the injurious effects of alcoholic drinking. Mrs. Martha M. Allen reported that the medical press had acted favorably in bringing to the notice of physicians the appeal issued by the Union, asking co-operation in the effort to teach mothers the baneful results of administering proprietary medicines, in which alcohol was an ingredient. All these reports showed substantial progress and were received with enthusiasm.

The churches gave the delegates a royal reception, and on convention Sunday many pulpits were occupied by the members. Miss Elizabeth Greenwood preached the annual sermon. All the officers of the Union were re-elected. No change was made in the superintendents, except that Mrs. Ada M. Shaw becomes Superintendent of Literature in place of Miss Morris, who resigned. The next Convention will, it is expected, be held at Portland, Maine.

The Y. M. C. A. in the Army

Secretary George A. Sanford, of the Army Branch Y. M. C. A., New York, writes:

"Thanks to the courtesy of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, we have received from a lady the gift of an Estey organ, which is opportune indeed. I wish the giver and yourselves, who have put us in touch with her, could see and hear how the soldiers enjoy singing. Our casemate at Fort Wadsworth will not begin to hold the men who will wish to come, for there are six hundred artillerymen there. We still have great need of an upright piano in one of our departments, which is located near a fort which has over one hundred saloons lying between the barracks and the New York ferry—a fierce gauntlet for a tempted man to run."

The Swoboda System

Restores to Health, Strengthens the Heart.

THE BEST LIFE INSURANCE

"Adds not only years to one's life, but life to one's years."

I AM TEACHING intelligent men, brain workers, the ideal principles of attaining and preserving perfect health. It is not a problematical theory, but a system of physiological exercise based upon absolutely correct scientific facts. And if you will follow my instructions for a few weeks I will promise you such a superb muscular development and such a degree of vigorous health as to forever convince you that intelligent direction of muscular effort is just as essential to success in life as intelligent mental effort. No pupil of mine will need to digest his food with pepsin nor assist nature with a dose of physic. I will give you an appetite and a strong stomach to take care of it; a digestive system that will fill your veins with rich blood; a strong heart that will regulate circulation and improve assimilation; a pair of lungs that will purify your blood; a liver that will work as nature designed it should; a set of nerves that will keep you up to the standard of physical and mental energy. I will increase your nervous force and capacity for mental labor, making your daily work a pleasure. You will sleep as a man ought to sleep. You will start the day as a mental worker must who would get the best of which his brain is capable. I can promise you all of this because it is common sense, rational and just as logical as that study improves the intellect.

I have devoted years to the study of anatomy, physiology, pathology, histology and hygiene; also to the effect and influence of physiological exercise upon the nervous system and the process of digestion and assimilation. This scientific and thorough study which I have made of the physiological effect of exercise, such as the physical and chemical changes which take place in the blood and every cell and tissue of the body, has never been undertaken by any other instructor or scientist. This knowledge combined with vast experience enables me to adapt my instructions successfully to all conditions of health, and to all ages of either sex. I have no book, no chart, no apparatus whatever. My system is for each individual; my instructions for you would be just as personal as if you were my only pupil. It is taught by mail only and with perfect success, requires but a few minutes' time in your own room just before retiring, and it is the only one which does not overtax the heart. I shall be pleased to send you free valuable information and detailed outline of my system, its principles and effects, together with testimonial letters from pupils.

KANSAS CITY, Mo., Dec. 22, 1899.

MR. ALOIS P. SWOBODA, Chicago, Ill.

My dear Mr. Swoboda: Although it is less than two months since I first commenced work at your system of physiological exercise I am most thoroughly convinced that your system is a decided success. A comparative statement of my measurements will show you what I have accomplished in the short period of less than two months.

WELLSVILLE, Ohio, Oct. 19, 1901.

ALOIS P. SWOBODA, Chicago.

Dear Sir: I have delayed writing you relative to the effects and advantages of your system until time had confirmed its promises and realities. I am now enabled to write you and give your system unstinted praise, and will be pleased to recommend your treatment wherever and whenever called upon. It is all you claim for it and only requires of your students a conscientious application. I have not had a headache since commencing the exercises under your direction and can say to all inquirers to "throw physic to the dogs."

You are welcome to this endorsement and hope that your business will meet with all the success it merits.

Yours truly,
(Signed) A. G. MACKENZIE

SCENES IN THE DANISH WEST INDIES

THE treaty between the United States and Denmark, under which the latter ceded to this Government its West Indian Island possessions, St. John, St. Thomas, and St. Croix, was signed at the State Department, Washington, on Jan. 24, the signatories being Secretary Hay, on behalf of the United States, and His Excellency, Constantine Brun, the Danish Minister for Denmark. In addition to ratification of the treaty by the Senate, the sale must receive the approval of both houses of Congress before any appropriation can be made. When this is done, the two governments can then exchange ratifications. Details of the transfer will be arranged afterward. It is understood that the price is $5,000,000, but this is not authoritative. All questions affecting the people of the islands (including tariff, political status, etc.), are left to Congress for adjustment. It is believed that a strong majority of the islanders favor the treaty. There was a rumor that in order to satisfy public opinion in Denmark, a plebiscite of the inhabitants of the island group might be taken, but this may not be done. St. Croix, the largest island of the group, is 135 square miles in extent, and has about 19,000 population; St. Thomas, 39 square miles, has 11,000, and St. John, 32 square miles, has only a little over 900 population. All three are remarkably rich in tropical products, have a delightful climate and many beautiful harbors.

A LAMA AND HIS TRUMPET

WORSHIPPING IN A LAMASERY

A TIBETAN PRIEST

IN THE WORLD'S DARKEST CORNER

William Carey's Story of a Journey Across Thibet, "the Forbidden Land"

THIBET, that wonderful "sealed land" of Asia, with its mysterious religion, its Grand Lama, its countless lamaseries, and its strange, silent people, has once more become a focus of public interest. Dr. Sven Hedin, the noted Swedish explorer, has lately returned to India, after two years spent in exploring in Thibet and the desert of Gobi. During that time he has been completely lost to the world, save for an occasional hint of his doings which he succeeded in sending to friends. It is said that he has mapped out a large part of Central Asia, and that he is possessed of a mass of information which will go far toward enlightening the world concerning Thibet and its people.

Another notable addition to the literature of travel and exploration in Thibet has just appeared, the author being the Rev. William Carey, a missionary teacher in India, a leader in Christian Endeavor work, and a great-grandson of William Carey, the pioneer of modern missions. Mr. Carey, not long ago, spent a month in Sikkim, the wedge between Nipal, Bhutan and Thibet, and this gave him an opportunity of crossing the Jelep La into Thibet and of visiting the famous missionary Annie Taylor, at Yatung. As the journey expanded, he found abundant material of a character never before published.

Thibet, Mr. Carey declares, is the most forbidding country on the globe. "It towers above the clouds, the largest and loftiest mass of rock in the world. Hidden behind ramparts of snow and ice, sparsely populated, swept by bitter winds, so cold that the common dress of its inhabitants is a huge sheepskin with the wool worn on the inner side, what wonder that its bleak aspect should repel the invader and make it, in the very heart of Asia, the least known and most mysterious area on the surface of the earth." From behind their rocky ramparts the people of this strange land have watched the procession of all the ages, the rise and fall of empires, the successive supremacy of Rajah, Mogul and Briton in India, and the slow turmoil of China. Bodland is the name by which Thibetans call their native land—a name wonderfully suggestive of Buddha-worship: yet Mr. Carey informs us that its inhabitants originally worshiped the forces of nature, conceived as destructive demons and appeased with cannibalistic rites.

But a thousand years ago, or longer, the Thibetan king married two Buddhist princesses from China and Nipal and since then the land has worshiped Buddha. Bodland, however, is still, to its own people at least, a land of demons and enchantment, of terrorizing brigands, of malignant spirits, devil-dancers, magicians, and of a simple and credulous peasantry.

Bodland is the most priest-ridden of countries, too, for its lamas (or monks) literally "possess the land." Herding together by thousands under a single roof, their monasteries or lamaseries are found everywhere throughout the kingdom. Every family has at least one lama among its members, and many have two or three. Every sixth person in Thibet is a lama; the education is strictly monkish: the whole land is in the power of the lamas. In the cloisters are the schools, where the children learn what the lamas teach and no more. They write with wooden pens on wooden tablets, smeared with fat and chalk, and when a pupil is lazy or delinquent, the teacher is caned!

One hundred and eight volumes of one thousand pages each constitute the Bible of the Thibetans, which is called the "Kah-gyur." "This colossal code," writes Mr. Carey, "requires a dozen yaks for its transport, and the carved wooden blocks from which it is printed need for their storage rows of houses like a good-sized village." Their Bible consists chiefly of translations from the Sanscrit and Chinese. There are also 225 volumes of commentaries. Just how much or how little of this ponderous and complex religious system enters into the daily life of the people can hardly be estimated.

Lhasa, the "holy city" of Thibet, casts its mysterious spell over the whole land. It is the centre of innumerable pilgrimages. For a very long time the city has been the goal of the "Lamas," whom they believe to be incarnate in the Dalai Lama. They call the "Lama, Dey, Ouy" in many forms, as one with many eyes and hands, indicating pity and compassion, and help for man. There is a special protection: his temple is covered with gold plates, that flash afar in the sunlight upon his humble worshippers. The city itself is a shrine and the living Grand Lama is his own god in Thibetan eyes. Mr. Carey thus describes him:

Such his worshipers are in Thibet, and it is only to those who are willing and high-spirited that some affliction afflicts even a foot of land in the city. The city is a shrine, and the living Grand Lama is his own god in Thibetan eyes. Mr. Carey thus describes him:

Such his worshipers are in Thibet, and it is only to those who are willing and high-spirited that some affliction afflicts even a foot of land in the city. The city is a shrine, and the living Grand Lama is his own god in Thibetan eyes. Mr. Carey thus describes him:

But the Grand Lama, or Pope of the Thibetans, is, after all, but a puppet in the hands of the priests. Travelers who have seen him invariably describe him as a child or a very young man, gentle in manner and

AN INSTRUMENT OF TEN STRINGS

TEXT—Psalms 33: 2:

"Sing unto him with a psaltery and an instrument of ten strings"

AN EASTERN HARPER

It enters into the richest symbolism of the Holy Scriptures. The captives in their sadness "hung their harps upon the willows." The raptures of heaven are represented under the figure of "harpers harping on their harps." We learn from coins and medals that in the Maccabean age the harp had only three strings. In other ages, it had eight strings. Jerome speaks of the harp as having twenty-four strings. David's harp had ten strings, and when his great soul was afire with the theme, his sympathetic voice, accompanied by exquisite vibration of the chords, must have been overpowering.

With as many things to complain about as any man ever had, David wrote more anthems than any other man ever wrote. He puts even the frosts and hail-storms and tempests and creeping things and flying fowl and the mountains and the hills and day and night into a chorus. Absalom's plotting and Ahithophel's treachery, and hosts of antagonists, and sleepless nights, and a running sore could not hush his psalmody. Indeed, the more his troubles, the mightier his sacred poems. The words "praise" and "song" are so often repeated in his psalms that one would think the type-setter's case containing the letters with which those words are spelled would be exhausted.

In my text David calls upon the people to praise the Lord with an instrument of ten strings like that which he was accustomed to finger. The simple fact is that the most of us, if we praise the Lord at all, play upon one string; or two strings, or three strings, when we ought to take a harp fully chorded and with glad fingers sweep all the strings. Instead of being grateful for here and there a blessing we happen to think of, we ought to rehearse all our blessings, and obey the injunction of my text to sing unto him with an instrument of ten strings.

Have you ever thanked God for delightful food? What vast multitudes are a-hungered from day to day, or are obliged to take food not toothsome or pleasant to the taste. What millions are in struggle for bread. A Confederate soldier went to the front, and his family were on the verge of starvation, but they were kept up by the faith of a child of that household, who, noticing that some supply was sure to come, exclaimed: "Mother, I think God hears when we scrape the bottom of the barrel."

Have you appreciated the fact that on most of your tables are luxuries that do not come to all? Have you realized what varieties of flavor often touch your tongue, and how the saccharine and the acid have been afforded your palate? What fruits, what nuts, what meats regale your appetite, while many would be glad to get the crusts and rinds and peelings that fall from your table. For the fine flavors and the luxurious viands you have enjoyed for a lifetime, perhaps you have never expressed to God a word of thanksgiving. That is one of the ten strings that you ought to have thrummed in praise to God, but you have never yet put it in vibration.

Have you thanked God for eyesight as originally given to you, or, after it was dimmed by age, for the glass that brought the page of the book within the compass of the vision? Have you realized the privation those suffer to whom the day is as black as the night, and who never see the face of father or mother or wife or child or friend? Through what painful surgery many have gone to get one glimpse of the light. The eyes—so delicate, and beautiful, and useful—that one of them is invaluable! And most of us have two of these wonders of divine mechanism. The man of millions of dollars who recently went blind from atrophy of optic nerve, would have been willing to give all his millions and become a day laborer, if he could have kept off the blindness that gradually crept over his vision.

You may have noticed how Christ's sympathies were stirred for the blind. Ophthalmia has always been prevalent in Palestine, the custom of sleeping on the house-tops, exposed to the dew and the flying dust of the dry season, inviting this dreadful disorder. A large percentage of the inhabitants could not tell the difference between twelve o'clock at noon and twelve o'clock at night. We are told of six of Christ's miracles for the cure of these sightless ones, but I suppose they were only specimens of hundreds of restored visions. What a pitiful spectacle Saul of Tarsus, the mighty man, three days led about in physical as well as spiritual darkness; he who afterwards made Felix tremble by his eloquence, and awed the Athenian philosophers on Mars Hill, and was the only cool-headed man in the Alexandria corn ship that went to pieces on the rocks of Miletus—once the mighty persecutor Saul—afterwards the glorious evangelist Paul, for three days not able to take a safe step without guidance!

Have you ever given thanks for two eyes—media between the soul inside and the world outside, media that no one but the infinite God could create? The eye—the window of our immortal nature, the gate through rolls its full diapason through the heavens does not startle the prolonged silence. The air, that has for us so many melodies, has no sweet sound for them. The live in a quietude that will not be broken until heaven breaks in upon them with its harmonies. The bird-voices of the springtime, the chatter of the children, the sublime chant of the sea, the solo of the cantatrice, and the psalmody of the great worshipping assemblies mean nothing to them. Have we devoutly thanked God for these two wonders of our hearing, with which we can now put ourselves under the charm of sweet sound, and also carry in our memories the infantile song with which our mothers put us to sleep; and the voices of the great prima donnas like Lind, and Patti, and Neilson; and the sound of instruments like the violin of the Swedish performer, or the cornet of Arbuckle, or the mighties of all instruments, with the hand of Morgan on the key, and his foot on the pedal; or some Sabbath-tune like "Coronation," in the acclaim of which you could hear the crowns of heaven coming down at the feet of Jesus. Many of us have never thanked God for this hearing apparatus of the soul. That is one of the ten strings of gratitude that we ought always to thrum after hearing the voice of a loved one, or the last strain of an oratorio or the clang of a cathedral tower.

Further, there are many who never recognize how much God gives them when he gives them sleep. In somnia is a calamity wider known in our land than in any other. By midlife, vast multitudes have their nerves so overwrought that slumber has to be coaxed and many are the victims of chloral and morphine. Sleeplessness is an American disorder. If it has not touched you, and you can rest for seven or eight hours without waking—if, for that length of time in every twenty-four hours, you can be free of all care and worry, and your nerves are retuned and your limbs escape from all fatigue, and the rising sun finds you a new man, body, mind and soul, you have an advantage that ought to be put in prayer and song and congratulation. The French financier, almost wealthy enough to purchase a kingdom, but the victim of insomnia, wrote, "No slumber to be bought in any market." He was right: sleep is a gratuity from Him who never sleeps.

O, the felicities of slumber! Let all who have this real benefaction, celebrate it. That is one of the sweetest strings in all the instrument of ten strings.

Further, let us gratefully acknowledge the power of physical locomotion. To be able to go where we wish, and all unaided—what a kindness! What multitudes have to call in the aid of cane and crutch and invalid's chair, and their whole life is a hindrance. How hard to get about with lack of strong and healthy and supple limbs. Congratulated ought you all to be if you have the usual physical endowment, and sympathized with ought all those be who can neither walk nor climb nor enter upon any great activities. That is one of the thousands of reasons why I hate war with a complete hatred. It takes off with bullet or shell or surgeon's knife the capacity of men to achieve their own livelihood or do the work for which they would otherwise be fully qualified. Brave men, self-sacrificing men, for the rest of their life are put on the limits, and strangely suffer in stormy weather from limbs amputated.

How much of the human family in every century has been cut up and shot to pieces and passed into mutilation. American manhood had hardly recovered from the lacerations of the War of the Revolution when it was called to be carved by the swords and stabbed with the bayonets and blackened with the gunpowder of 1812. Hardly recovered was our American manhood from that when the war with Mexico began its butchery. Hardly was American manhood recovered from that before Civil War took hold of it and dug its grave trench through the North and its grave trench through the South. Hardly was our American manhood recovered from that when the Spanish War came with its malaria and crowded hospitals. Thank God that now four of the greatest nations are allied in good understanding—the United States, England, Germany, and Russia—and if they will do the right thing they can forever stop national and international strife and put an end to wholesale amputation. There are enough accidents in time of peace to keep the race mutilated more than it ever ought to be, and the human family needs all its arms and hands and feet to do the work that God calls it to do.

Further, celebrate on the instrument of ten strings which all colors march, the picture gallery of the soul. Without the eye this world is a big dungeon. I fear that many of us have never given one hearty expression of gratitude for this treasure of sight, the loss of which is the greatest disaster possible, unless it be the loss of the mind. Those wondrous seven muscles that turn the eye, up or down, to right or left, or around. No one but God could have created the retina. If we have ever appreciated what God did when he gave us two eyes it was when we saw others with obliterated vision. Alas, that only through the privation of others we came to a realization of our own blessing! If you had harp in hand and swept all the strings of gratitude, you would have struck this, which is one of the most dulcet of the ten strings.

Further, notice how many pass through life in silence because the ear refuses to do its office. They never hear music, vocal or instrumental. The thunder that

THE SALOON'S DEFENDERS ANSWERED

What Our Leading Pastors and Christian Workers have to Say of the Saloon as The Working Man's Club

NATIONAL attention has been directed to the recent extraordinary utterances of Bishop Potter and Rev. Dr. Rainsford, of New York, on the saloon question. Substantially, the contention of these divines is:

- 1.—That the Saloon is the Working Man's Club, where he finds Rest and Recreation;
- 2.—That the Saloon is the Social Resort most available to the Working Man, by reason of his restricted means; and
- 3.—That the "Free Lunch" Feature in the Saloon supplies Excellent Food at a remarkably low figure.

BISHOP POTTER

REV. DR. RAINSFORD

Timely, Frank and Fearless Words in Condemnation, that Should be Read Everywhere

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, believing that this representation would not be accepted by any considerable number of thoughtful people, and, besides, that it grossly misrepresented the working men, invited a number of leading clergymen and others engaged in active Christian work, to express their views on the subject. Their letters, which appear below, are, in every case, the outcome of observation and personal experience. They paint the drinking saloon in its true colors, as the worst foe of industry, thrift, morality, home comfort, and good citizenship, a maker of debauchees, drunkards and ruined homes.

The Saloon Drains its Victims

I THINK there is great exaggeration concerning the saloon as the "working man's club." The important point in this whole discussion seems to me to be the character of the American saloon. It is confusing to identify it with the German beer garden. The question before us in this city must be decided with the practically certain foreknowledge of the character of the drinking resort.

In my opinion, the American "saloon" drains the working classes, financially, physically and morally. A great social change, like the abolition of the saloon in its present character, will not be accomplished suddenly, and can only be accomplished by the substitution of something better. I cannot, here, enter into that matter. It seems to me that the actual closing of the saloon on the Sabbath, if it can be accomplished, would be a mitigation of the evil, and I fear that legal opening of the saloon on the Sabbath would be an increase of the evil. The plan of having them legally closed, but practically open (side doors), as an announced principle of police action, seems to me to shock the public conscience—to be essentially immoral. There must be common sense and some elasticity in the application of law to fact, especially in excise questions.

I am inclined to favor the idea of local option, by Wards or smaller Election Districts, in a great city. I think that the benefits of legal restriction, honestly presented and enforced, would thereby become obvious.

REV. ANSON P. ATTERBURY,
Park Presbyterian Church, New York.

The Saloon an Unmixed Evil

THE saloon is an unmixed evil. It is not a place of rest and recreation, nor a social resort for the working man, unless he drinks. The saloon furnishes no free lunch to men who do not drink. All of its attractions are enticements to drink, and the good men who commend these baits, without seeing the man-trap behind them, are inexcusably short-sighted. Some of them, I happen to know, are not total abstainers, and are, I fear, blinded to the evils of drink by their own social habits.

REV. A. C. DIXON,
Ruggles St. Bapt. Ch., Boston.

The Poor Man's Foe

DO I believe the saloon is the working man's club, where he finds rest and recreation? No. I believe the saloon is the working man's calamity, where he finds poison for his stomach and moral degradation for his soul. The argument against the present excise law, which seems to discriminate in favor of the rich, contains this fallacy, that intoxicating liquors are essentially a good thing. It should be more clearly demonstrated that the club is a good thing for the rich man, before it is advocated or even recommended for the poor man.

2. Is the saloon the social resort most available to the working man by reason of his restricted means? No; but in nine cases out of ten it is the occasion of the poor man's restricted means. The saloon is the poor man's remorseless robber. It not only steals the last penny of his earnings, but the clothes off his children's back and the bread from their plate. Countless thousands of poor men would be rich to-day but for the saloon, and countless thousands of rich men are on the road to poverty through the same open door.

3. Does the "free lunch" feature of the saloon argue in favor of Sunday opening? No; this is simply a bait to induce men to drink—a cold-blooded business transaction utterly devoid of the least vestige of charity. For what saloon serves a second free lunch to the man who does not drink? This is a shrewd temptation worthy of the devil's ingenuity. I am thoroughly convinced that the saloon is the poor man's worst enemy, his conscienceless despoiler, physically, socially, intellectually and morally. Hence, as a friend of the poor man, my attitude has been and will be that of uncompromising hostility toward the saloon. From my point of view, the closing of the saloon, the rescue of men from drunkenness and the elevation of the poor, is not the "devil's work"—but the work of God.

No, the men who plead for an open saloon, and defame the noblest womanhood of the nation, and denounce as hypocrites honest reformers, and plead for the destruction of our American Sabbath—these are they who do the "devil's work," whether they be sensational clergymen, erratic politicians or high ecclesiastics.

REV. J. O. WILSON,
St. Andrew's Ch., N. Y. City.

The Sunday Law

TWO questions have become badly mixed in the public mind just now, and every effort ought to be made to disentangle them. One of the two questions reads, "How ought Sunday law to be enforced in cities?"—the other, "Is the saloon, in any shape or form, tolerable?" It appears to be believed by many that if they can show that the saloon has come to stay, they have made unnecessary any further argument in favor of Sunday opening; but this is doubtful reasoning. The fact that society has given the sanction of statute law to a special form of mercantile activity, by no means proves that Sunday law ought to be relaxed in favor of that particular line of business; else why not allow the whole machinery of commercial life to start up, so as to give every man a fair chance at money-making on seven days of the week? It has been publicly stated that we need not be apprehensive on this score, since the working men are abundantly able to take care of themselves in the matter of maintaining the rest-day as an institution. That may be true of certain well organized guilds and unions among working men; but what about bartenders, who constitute a huge contingent of this city's population? Brewers, distillers, and owners of saloons, could, no doubt, poll a large majority in favor of the open Sunday saloon; but does anybody doubt that the bartenders, as a body, would prefer a whole holiday once in a week, if they could get it; or does anybody suppose that, under existing conditions, they could get it if they tried? The whole Sunday side of the question hinges on whether the law of the rest-day be, or be not, an integral part of the ethical foundation upon which our entire social system, here in the United States, has been built up. If it be indeed a portion of that underlying bed-rock, then all infringements of it should be kept as near a minimum as possible. If it be not, then let all Sunday laws be repealed, and communities and individuals be left to get their needed periodic rest as best they can.

Turning now to the saloon side of the question: I am constrained to confess to a certain amount of agreement with those who believe that our effort should be directed to the displacement, rather than to the immediate or violent abolition of the saloon. There is no question that, in great cities, the gregarious instinct in man will assert itself and ought to assert itself. Doubtless the home is the best satisfaction for this need; but it must be remembered that a large portion of the human race are not so fortunate as to belong to homes. Places there must be where men can meet each other, and meet each other pleasantly, when off duty. No shouting "The Saloon must go!" will avail unless some, better thing comes. It is not enough to provide a "mission-room" and hang it about with scripture mottoes, however well selected and tastefully illuminated. It is not enough to provide reading-rooms and libraries, since even the highly educated are not found spending the bulk of their leisure time in the perusal of wholesome literature. In fact, this whole business of "providing" is of questionable expediency. Let the real "working man's club" grow up as the genuine product of voluntary action on the part of the working men themselves. Let labor unions and similar organizations of wage earners turn the energy and trained intelligence which they possess in abundance, to the building up of clubs that shall be actually superior to those possessed of buildings, not necessarily costly but buildings that shall be well adapted to forms of social recreation, and stored with such eatables and drinkables as the members, acting corporately, shall consider to be in accordance with their self-interest. In such club liquor may, at any rate for a time, have a place but the bar will not be what it is in the much called "poor man's club" of to-day, the central shrine; nor will the profits go into the pocket of some man or men who interest it is to have the alleged "club" drink as much as possible.

What the Saloon Really Is

RECENTLY, two men belonging to the same church, the one a bishop, the other a rector, have said that the saloon was a satisfactory institution. One of them has gone so far as to say that the saloon supplies a home to the homeless; that it gives food to the poor, and food that is "mighty good." He has gone so far as to say that the work of certain women endeavoring to neutralize the work of the effects of the saloon is the work of the devil.

I am opposed to the saloon, because it can be of advantage only to the brewer, the liquor dealer, the politician, and that class of Christian ministers who find more inspiration in a glass of wine than in the Spirit of God. And I might say that every Christian who loves his God, who loves his fellow man, should be outspoken and unqualified in his denunciation of it. Above all, every true Christian should be outspoken in his repudiation of the "Christian ministry" which glorifies the saloon, honors the bartender, breaks down the restrictions of the Lord's Day; would fill our streets with drunkards; gives us the disgraceful "continental Sunday," denounces men like John B. Gough, and, forgetting that the women of the Temperance Union have gone about their work like angels of mercy, classes

The Working Man and the Saloon

INTEMPERANCE is a broad subject, and needs to be handled in a cautious, conservative manner. Intemperate are not merely those who fall through strong drink. It is possible to palliate some great evil, or exterminate some hoary vice that is ruinous, in such words and phrases as to mark an intemperate spirit. When reformers or men of the sacred profession become apologists for any evil that has been known by its fruits to be a menace to the national good—an evil that has laid in ruins some of the loveliest homes and burdened the shores of history with the wreck of the most brilliant genius, and done more to populate perdition than war with all its horrors—then we are not at fault in saying these men are guilty of inebrity of speech!

It is deeply to be regretted that men who minister at church altars, should in any form apologize for the existence of the saloon, or attempt to show that it is a necessary evil. Evil is never a necessity. Christ came to destroy the works of darkness, and not to apologize for their existence. His servants must in like manner smash to shivers these bulwarks of Satan, if they are to be loyal to His cause. No greater wrong can be done to the kingdom of Jesus Christ than pleading for, or making advocacy of the drinking customs of society, or the open saloon on the Lord's Day! We are not at all ignorant of the specious pleas made in behalf of opening the saloons of our great cities on the Sabbath, and it is after careful investigation of these pleadings that we make this protest.

It is said that the saloon is a social factor, and the poor man's club room. That as a rule the homes of our working men are ill-furnished, ill-ventilated, small, and uncomfortable; and that the brilliantly lighted and decorated bar-room gives him such surcease from discouragement as to make life endurable. The music and hilarity of the places beguile the sons of toil of any sense of social injustice done them, and for that reason these so-called club rooms ought to be opened on the Lord's Day to our working men. But what is to be said of the wives and children, who must remain in these ill-ventilated, and over-crowded tenements? Why should this so-called club room—the saloon—not be opened to them also, and thus give all the money to the saloon-keeper for the still greater enrichment of his home, and clothing in rich raiment his children? If the money spent in the saloon was spent upon the home it would not be the over-crowded, ill-ventilated, and uncomfortable place, but could be easily made a hundred-fold more attractive than the most gaily furnished bar-room. Many of the club rooms, even for the rich, are neither good nor wholesome, if their whole history were laid bare. They alienate men from their homes, foster habits not at all conducive to good morals, such as gambling and secret drinking, and there ought to be no circle of so-called friends that a man cannot welcome to his home, and introduce to his family!

It is argued that the working man finds in these establishments and beer gardens both congenial society and an opportunity for moderate enjoyment, and that temperance reformers have misrepresented these so-called social centres—the saloons and beer gardens of our great cities. Have our clergymen, and other advocates of this form of sociability, frequented or even spent one whole evening in such places? Have they listened to the ribald jokes—the obscene jests—the filthy tales—the discussions about the inequalities of society, and dangerous sentiments so often voiced against capital and capitalists that become the germs of anarchism—the noise and oaths that rise from these so-called congenial centres; and remembering that what is seen and heard one evening is reproduced the year round, how can the servants of Christ advocate such a line of conduct for our working men? The enjoyment is not moderate (if it can be called enjoyment) but has always ended in immoderation, and every employer will testify, if he testifies to the truth, that no working man who patronizes these so-called club rooms for the poor man on the Lord's Day, is as valuable a servant on Monday morning as he would be were he to abstain from drink!

But it is said the food served at the saloons is not only cheap but excellent, and presented in a tempting manner to their patrons. The "free lunch" is the devil's bait on the hook to catch the victim of the drink habit. What is the food served that is so excellent? Enter any bar-room, and on the side table you will find some sour pickles, dry cheese, hard crackers, unsavory sausage, or bolognas strong enough to disgust a rat's stomach, and this is the free lunch served—or the better class saloons may dish up some hot broth called soup, but all intended to lure the patrons of the bar to drink what will prove final destruction to soul and body! No, gentlemen, you certainly have never patronized a free lunch, else you would never speak in such terms about "the excellent food served so cheap" and palatable at the saloon. Give any good American wife the price of two drinks and she will spread a table covered with more bounty than you can find on the side tables of ten bar-rooms. Granted even that such was the case, that the food was all a working man might desire, why is it a necessity that his meals should be partaken at a saloon at all? Open saloons on the Lord's Day means not only the desecration of the day, but the destruction of the home, and when the home is ruined, you have written Ichabod upon all the institutions of this great Republic!

In the overthrow of Tammany rule, it was the dream of thousands and tens of thousands that the great metropolis would be cleansed of many of its gigantic evils and social impurity, and that Christian influences would be more potent; but we find our hopes turning to ashes, when even the ambassadors of Christ become the apologists for the open saloon on the sacred Sabbath! All true philanthropists, reformers and Christian students of sociological science, know that the American saloon is just what John Wesley branded something else: "It is the sum of all villainies." To compromise with such iniquity is to insult God, and court the retributive consequences of such an insult.

To the working men of our great cities and throughout the land we say—Permit your Sabbaths to be made days of carousal, amusements and excursions, and you are permitting yourselves to become the veriest drudges of labor, for there is no work so hard or so expensive as a whole day of so-called enjoyment at resorts where the beer flows, and the dance hall is thronged. Besides, we hurl out once more the warning given to England's great agnostic, a man who had no kind words for evangelical Christianity, John Stuart Mill, "Break down the Sabbath, and you will soon have to give seven days' work for six days' pay." Fail to preserve your Sabbaths, and you will be the ultimate greater losers and suffer the most in every conceivable form.

This is the immediate, imperative, and individual choice before everyone who is a wage-earner to-day in our great cities, and especially in New York at present—whether they will do seven days' work for six days' pay, or get seven days' pay for six days' work?

Break down the American Sabbath, and open the saloons, and you have practically declared you are in favor of white slavery, and are willing to be remunerated for your labor upon the lowest scale of wage and poorest mode of living. Working men of the great metropolis of the Empire State, we wait for you to speak as American free men against the open saloon on the Sabbath, and that the advocates of such course are not wise in regarding themselves as the best friends of labor! All the best interests of American labor stand or fall with the American Sabbath! To your tents O Israel!!!

When the Prodigal Came Home

DID you ever think how different it would have been, when the prodigal went home, if there had been no heart of the loving and forgiving father waiting there to give him a welcome? No ring for his finger, or shoes for his feet, or best robe shaking fragrance from its rich folds, or dinner served in state, or father's embrace and kiss, but only a vacant chair, a cold hearth, an empty space, hollow echoes of the past, dreary sighs of the present, repentance in vain, tears dropping unheeded, and, perhaps, a contemptuous stranger, where once had been parents and home.

Well, that might happen in an earthly home, with changes. Dear forgiving parents might have lain dead in death, while the wanderer stayed away. Prodigals may return too late, in this world of mutation. But is not so, when the going back is to God. No door of a shut door here, nor of a cold, unfamiliar countenance. Not thus, from the far country, are God's prodigals ever met, with pain, disappointment, regret and bitter sorrow. Always, as in the beautiful parable, when the wanderer returns there is eager haste to anticipate his confession; there is unspeakable fullness of delight, that he has grown weary of the husks of the swine, and retracted his steps to the Father's home.

Our blessed Lord came to his own, and his own received him not. But never is this experience repeated by a single child of his, who, suddenly awakening to a sense of sinfulness and shame, has a vision of the Father of God. Plenty is there in the old home for everybody. Never a scarcity. The table is always spread. The Father is overflowing. "Make me as one of the hired servants," cries the remorseful heart, but the Father will say, "Not so. This my Son was dead and is alive again, was lost and is found."

There were ninety and nine that safely lay
In the shelter of the fold;
But one was lost on the hills away,
Far away from the gates of gold.

That lost one, the Shepherd went after. And, though the prodigal did not know it, the Father's heart was after him, in the wilderness and the want, and he would not have had the impulse to go home, if that yearning of the Father had not drawn him, as with cords of mighty love.

All over this world there are households which are shadowed by the wrong-doings of prodigal children. The mother's eyes have often a look of anguish, bravely hidden, but wofully plain to those who know her best. The father's head is bowed, his anxiety is wearing him out; the brothers and sisters pray for one whom they seldom name. Oh, prodigal son, and daughter, wherever you are, turn about and go home. Leave the land of want and sin. Forsake the evil company, and turn away from the shams and the lures. You have wasted your substance, and lost your birthright, but there are restoration and peace and pardon for you still. Come home! Come home!

Our Growing Country

IF you cross this continent, the days and nights of consecutive railroad travel will forever extirpate from your mind all fears that we are going to be overcrowded in this country. One pear tree alone, on a farm of a thousand acres, might as well shiver through all the leaves at the fear of not having room enough. Four hundred millions of people will not crowd us. Let the English come, five thousand a month. Let the Irish come. Let the French come. Let the Germans come. Let the Chinese come. Let all nations come. Plenty of room. If you do not believe it, take the Central Pacific or the Union Pacific railroad train. There are the great deserts, by artesian wells or tunnels from the snow-covered mountains, to be irrigated into gardens. The richest gardens on the American continent to-day are those growing where forty years ago there had never been one blade of grass. Irrigation! There is California, once on the map of our schoolboy days, and down as a mere strip of land, but really larger than the States of New York and Pennsylvania, with all the New England States added. Room for fifty nations between Omaha and Cheyenne. Room for more nations between Cheyenne and Ogden. Room for still more nations between Sacramento and Salt Lake City. Those who took Horace Greeley's advice about going West as a joke, stayed here, and consider themselves now fortunate if they can get a poor round of beef and no pudding; while many of those who took his advice in dead earnest are living to-day on venison and broiled pigeon.

death in his court and ordered the test to go on, the citizen was guilty that if he did not condemn the prosecution, he would have him arrested, assuming a felony. Of course a juror's function in the majority of the case must be empirical and the proposed settlement did not provide for that. Nonetheless, the magistrate was sorry to disappoint the people, but he could not evade the duty of maintaining the law. The court may ask the same of citizens as that which theologians have so often pointed out, which divine wisdom and love, solved by the incarnation and atonement of Christ, by which the sinner is not only pardoned but justified.

Two persons came near losing their lives in the Criminal Courts building in New York, a few days ago, through the playfulness of a friend. One of them was a relative of a former officer of the court. He received a visit from two young ladies and took them over the building to show them the new rooms. While they were down in the basement, he pointed out a large vault in the Coroner's offices, which had been constructed for the storage of documents and valuable property. One of the ladies said it looked like a dungeon, and showed some curiosity about the interior. The officer who was their guide took her inside, and instantly her companion shut the door on them. She did it in fun, but when she tried to open it, she could not. Then she became alarmed, and tugged at the handle with all her might, but it would not stir. She screamed for help, and called out to the other lady.

typical products. Heretofore the only means of conveying them to the coast has been by carriers—each in with his burden on his back. The railroad should therefore enormously develop the trade of the region, the facilities it provides for conveyance. It is probable, too, that from other districts farther in the interior, freight will come, as it will save time and money to send to the terminus of the railroad at Victoria Nyanza, thus shortening the long journey to the coast. If it proves as profitable an investment as is predicted, we may soon see other lines constructed, and so the region we have called the Dark Continent may become well-known to the world.

Their line is gone out through all the earth (Psalm 10: 4).

A pathetic scene was witnessed in a New York Police court last week. A detective brought before the magistrate a young man whom he charged with stealing four diamonds belonging to his employer, a jeweler in Harlem. The jeweler had reported his loss to the police, and the detectives were making inquiries at the pawnshops when the young man entered one of them and asked for a loan on two of the missing stones. The prisoner belonged to a very respectable family, and when his parents heard of his crime they went at once to the court to try to save their son from prison. The mother, who was handsomely dressed and was wearing two diamond ear-rings, called the jeweler aside and pleaded with him to withdraw from the prosecution. He consented, but when he returned with the mother to court, the magistrate noticed that the mother no longer had diamonds in her ears. He asked her what had become of them and she admitted that she had given them to the jeweler as the price of mercy to her son. The magistrate told her that no such bargain could be Happily, he was on duty, and ran down, though he doubted whether he could render help, as he did not know the combination. To the joy of both, the handle turned, and the door was opened. The two persons inside were almost prostrated by the lack of air. The janitor said that if the joker had happened to touch the combination ever so slightly, he would have had to send uptown for some one who knew the secret of the lock, and before the door could have been opened the two persons would have died. The thoughtless girl must have been very grateful that no serious results followed her foolish act. Similar heedlessness of word or deed has sometimes led to consequences worse than death. Men have been entrapped in the meshes of evil through their own rash conduct or that of another and have not known how to open the doors of their prison house, though Christ came to proclaim deliverance to them.

A generous gift for charitable purposes, equivalent to a million dollars, has been made to the King of Great Britain, by Sir Ernest Cassel, a well-known merchant of London. He recently attained the age of fifty years, and desiring to make a jubilee celebration, chose this method of doing so. The King cordially accepted the gift, and after consideration decided to spend the money in erecting a sanatorium for the treatment of consumption. He has appointed a committee of eight of the most celebrated physicians in the country to superintend the execution of the design. It has been arranged that the sanatorium shall accommodate one hundred patients, fifty male and fifty female. It will be built on a suitable site in extensive and well-wooded grounds: each patient will have a separate room, and the ac-

Persecuted, Yet Blessed

THE APOSTLES SENT TO PRISON FOR PREACHING CHRIST

GOLDEN TEXT:
Blessed are they which are persecuted for righteousness sake:
for theirs is the kingdom of heaven.
MATT. 5: 10

The Lesson Story

LET us think the lesson story in a series of pictures, and it will help our imagination to draw frames for them. In the first frame we see the graves of Ananias and Sapphira. Many people come to look at it, and others who, on passing, stop for a moment. Some of the people have anxious looks on their faces, for they, too, are wrongdoers, and fear they will be found out and punished. Others have good faces, but they look very thoughtful, for they are searching their hearts to see if there is any wicked way in them.

In the second picture, we see the streets of Jerusalem, particularly about the Temple, filled with sick people, some of them lying upon beds, who have been carried there by friends. Peter and the other apostles are passing from one to the other, and healing them all, as Jesus in heaven gives them power to do. With the work of healing, the apostles are also teaching the people to love and honor Jesus. So many friends are being made for Jesus that it would be hard to count them all.

Our next picture is a room in the Temple, where the High Priest and his court are gathered. They are saying, "What shall we do with these men, Peter and John and the other apostles, for they are getting to be too popular? We must put an end to their preaching and healing by putting them in prison."

In our next picture, the apostles are in prison. They are trusting in God, and do not fear what shall be done to them. The soldiers who were set to guard the prison are asleep. If the keeper of the prison knew it, they would be punished with death. Angels are opening the prison doors, and telling Peter and the other apostles to leave the prison, and, when it is morning, to go to the Temple, and begin again their work of healing and preaching in the Name of Jesus.

In our next picture, the High Priest and his court are in the Jerusalem, telling people that Jesus is the Son of God, and wherever they find sick ones, they will heal them.

PROGRESS ALWAYS OCCASIONS PERSECUTION. Dr. Talmage happily illustrates this, by the fact that there is little stir about a steamship's prow when it is making but seven knots an hour in a fog, but there is a great commotion about the cutwater when, in clear weather, the ship accelerates its speed to four hundred miles a day. This is the story of persecution in personal history and in Church history alike. Whenever the Christian or the Church has put aside lethargy and gone forward with new zeal, there has been an outburst of persecution. This is the most frequent occurrence in the lessons of this quarter and the next, which might well be supplemented, as well as illustrated, by extended readings from the first three centuries of Church history, which Dr. George P. Fisher describes as its "heroic age." Its facts are stranger than fiction, and young and old alike may be stirred to admiration and emulation of the heroes of faith, some of whom were women and children. Such readings would remind many who have too exclusively associated courage with courage, that "peace hath her victories no less renowned than war."

Illustration and Application

What points in this story need to be illustrated to make them clearer and more impressive?

Persecution is blessed, that is, beneficial in testing our earnestness, promoting humility, revealing our own weakness, giving us sympathy with Christ and our suffering fellow-men.

It is wise to fear God, but foolish to fear anything else.

Even though one's life is spent in doing good, he cannot expect to escape persecution.

Whoever wins the favor of God or man will also win the envy and hatred of those who vainly desire it.

So-called courts of justice have sometimes, in almost to seeking out the reasons he gives why we are not to fear and the all-inclusive circumstances in which he says we are not to fear; see how we are to fear nothing, and no one, a never, and nowhere; see how he himself is in every case a foundation and the grand reason of his command, his presence and his power always behind it; and then shall we hesitate to say, 'I will fear no evil, for thou art with me?' Shall we even fancy there is any answer to those grand and forever unanswered questions, 'The Lord is my light and my salvation; whom shall I fear?' 'The Lord is the strength of my life of whom shall I be afraid?'

Once more let us recall also the words of George MacDonald, "Why should we fear anything with Him looking us?"

What Are They Like in Nature?

Nature in all its beauties of landscape and pictured rocks, and gold, and gems, and minds us that the best things come out of the fire. The earthquake and glacier shaped the most beautiful hills and valleys. The vein-marble is more beautiful than granite only because its fire was hotter. The struggle for life has given strength and beauty in the vegetable and animal kingdom alike. A nature, therefore, bids us expect that pain and struggle will bring blessing in the spiritual kingdom also. Dr. Albert Barnes, despite his faith, was strangely afraid of the sea. When his health failed at one time and his physician prescribed an ocean voyage, it was with the greatest difficulty that his friends persuaded him to undertake it. To him the ocean was an awful abyss whose chief business was to swallow up men. The beauty and blessing of the sea as it sung in the 104th Psalm he could not appreciate. Equal foolish are other fears in those of us who have found the sea a healing friend and a highway of universal brotherhood.

To be peaceful and serene in every-day troubles, shows

Temple again, waiting for Peter and the other apostles to be brought from the prison. The officers they have sent to bring them have come back, and told the wonderful story that the apostles are not in the prison and cannot be found. And now other men have come in to tell that the apostles are again preaching in the Temple, and healing the sick in the Name of Jesus. How surprised and how angry are the faces of the High Priest and his court! They will presently send the captain of the Temple to bring them.

In the next picture, Peter and the other disciples are standing in the court of the High Priest. If we could only hear what people in pictures say we should hear the High Priest saying to the apostles, "Did we not tell you that you should not talk to the people about Jesus?" And we would hear Peter answer, "But God in heaven tells us that we must do it, and we choose to obey God rather than you." And in this moving picture we next see the seventy-one men in this Sanhedrin court all talking at once, and in loud tones, saying, "These men ought to be killed." Did I say all? I see one man with a wise face, who is not saying that. And when he speaks, all of the rest are still. He is saying, "Have these men taken out, so that we may talk together about what should be done with them."

In our next picture, Gamaliel, for that is the name of the wise man, is standing up talking, and all of the others are listening. He is saying, "I would advise that we let these men go. If they are teaching something bad, the people will not long listen to them. But if they are really doing as God tells them to do, to try to stop them would only be fighting against God." The men of the court are nodding their heads for "Yes, yes."

In the next picture, Peter and the other apostles are again in the court room, where, at the command of the High Priest and the court, they have been beaten with cruel whips which have covered them with blood. They have been told that they can go, but that they must not teach and heal in the name of Jesus. How brave the faces of the apostles look! They are glad even that they can suffer for Jesus, because he has suffered so much for them. You can see that they will not obey the command to cease preaching. We come now to the last picture. Peter is standing in the porch of the Temple, teaching and healing in the name of Jesus, obeying God rather than men, and the other apostles are starting out to go from house to house all through the city of every country on earth, been courts of flagrant injustice.

The world's great moral leaders have oftener been sent to the prison than to the palace.

Free speech was bought for us at a great cost of suffering, but it is worth all it cost.

"We fought to obey God rather than man."

If our work be of God, men cannot overthrow it.

The first-born of the human race killed his brother because God had shown him greater favor, which was due to the fact that Abel came to God in penitence, as the bleeding sacrifice signified, while Cain would bring only a thank-offering in the spirit of the Pharisee, "Lord, I thank thee that I am not as other men." Thus began the long list of persecutions of good men by others who also observed the forms of worship.

Joseph was persecuted by Potiphar's wife because he would not join her in sinning against God. David was persecuted by Saul because the former was more in favor with God and with the people also. So Elijah was persecuted because he rebuked the sins of Ahab and Jezebel. How bravely Jeremiah told unwelcome truth and uttered unwelcome warnings despite imprisonment? Daniel was persecuted because God's favor made him more a favorite with the king than the other courtiers, who therefore got him sentenced to the lion's den by a trick. In all Babylon's army there were no such heroes as the three Hebrews who stood by their convictions despite the fiery furnace close at hand, through which, like the iron ore for which it was doubtless used, they went through unharmed. And in the New Testament, what glory shines in John the Baptist, who dared to rebuke a ruler's sin. Christ was crucified by men envious of his hold on the people and angry at his lancing of their own secret sins. In all these cases the persecution was wholly in vain. In all God illustrated the golden text, "Blessed are they that are persecuted for righteousness sake." And yet we are so fearful, that God says to us in the Bible eighty-five times, "Fear not." It is a commandment, oftener repeated than any other because we are "so fearful." "At the sight of a glowworm the timid cry, 'Fire.'" One who is fearful may well hunt out, by aid of his concordance, all the cases where God bade even his most persecuted ones not to fear. In the words of Frances Ridley Havergal: "Only give half an hour strength of character that may be trusted to triumph in greater conflicts also, such as the apostle encountered in this lesson. One day a boy who was taking his first lesson in sliding down hill got his dirty boots against a lady's silk dress. The little gentleman greatly mortified, sprang from his sled, and began an apology. "I beg your pardon, ma'am; I am very sorry. 'Never mind,' said the lady, 'you feel worse about it than do.' 'But your dress is ruined,' said the boy. 'Better have soiled dress than a ruffled temper,' said the good lady, as she passed on."

In the Civil War, during revival meetings in the army when soldiers were kneeling at the altar of penitence, sometimes the sudden command would ring in their ears, "Fall in for the front!" So the apostles in the midst of worship and healing, were suddenly called to the very front of battle, and were not found wanting. And so must we to day be willing to watch and fight as well as pray, to endure hardness as good soldiers of Jesus Christ. But our best examples of moral courage come from civil life, where opportunities of courage as great as that of the soldier are often presented. One who was with John Burns, now a representative of labor in the British Parliament, when he was a workman in Africa, tells that when they were journeying on a creek of the Brass River in a steam launch, the propeller blades fell into the stream. The situation was serious, for the creek teemed with sharks, and nearby was a cannibal village. Burns refused to allow his companion to dive, insisting on doing it himself because he was unmarried. He found one of the blades, and so they escaped. When we are called to brave deeds to save men's souls, shall we be less heroic?

In our pictures, the centre one represents a scene in early Christian history, in which a beautiful girl, condemned to death for being a Christian, resists the pleadings of friends, who beg her to save her life by making an offering to the heathen goddess Diana. The one on the right represents a girl trying to tie on her Protestant lover's arm the scarf, which would secure his safety in the massacre of St. Bartholomew's day. The scarf was the sign that a man was a Catholic. The picture on the left represents the scene described in Daniel 3: 14-27.

Churchmen to Meet President Roosevelt

THE NATIONAL FEDERATION OF CHURCHES AND CHRISTIAN WORKERS IN SESSION AT WASHINGTON

SEE COLORED ILLUSTRATION ON FIRST PAGE

ELDOM has the Executive Mansion in Washington been the scene of a gathering more significant than that which is to assemble in its walls to-day. At the invitation of President Roosevelt, a deputation of clergymen, representing many denominations, will wait on him to inform him of the progress of the association in which they are united, and in which he has long taken a deep interest. This is the National Federation of Churches and Christian Workers, which this year is holding its annual conference in Washington, D. C. The common idea of clergymen of different denominations is that they are rivals, if not enemies; but that they must receive a check from the spectacle of so large an assembly conferring together in unity on the common interests of the Church of Christ. This is the second annual Conference of the Federation. The first was held in February, 1901, in Philadelphia. The numbers now assembled show how great has been the progress made during the past year. The obvious advantages of co-operation in Christian work, as represented by Dr. E. B. Sanford in various centres, have appealed to the leaders of all denominations and have secured their active and cordial acceptance. The Conference opened on February 4 in the Hall of the Young Men's Christian Association. The programme for that day included an address of welcome by Rev. John G. Butler, Pastor of Luther Memorial Church, Washington, D. C., and response by Mr. J. Cleveland Cady, the President of the Federation; the report of the year's work, presented by Dr. E. B. Sanford, the Secretary; address by Dr. L. C. Barnes, Pastor of the First Baptist Church, Pittsburg, Pa., on "The Possible and Impossible in Church Federation." At the afternoon session addresses on "Local Federations and Their Work," by Mr. Hugh Cork, of Pittsburg, Pa., on "How the Churches Can Unite in Social Work," by Dr. E. Walpole Warren, Rector of St. James Protestant Episcopal Church, New York, and on "Church Federation and the Poor," by Dr. John Bancroft Devins, of New York. At the evening session, the general topic was "Church Federation in the Interests of Social and Civic Righteousness," discussed by Bishop John F. Hurst, of the Methodist Episcopal Church; Donald Sage Mackay, D.D., Pastor of the Collegiate (Reformed) Church, Fifth Avenue, New York; George C. Lorimer, D.D., LL.D., Pastor of the Madison Avenue Baptist Church, New York.

ON Wednesday, the second day of the Conference, the topic for the morning session is "The Work of State Federations." Among those who take part in this discussion are J. W. Hughes, D.D., President Ohio Wesleyan University, and President of the Ohio Federation of Churches; Charles H. Matthews, D.D., Pastor of the Central Congregational Church, Philadelphia, and President of the Pennsylvania Federation of Churches. In the afternoon, Dr. S. M. Dick, Pastor of the Mathewson Street M. E. Church, Providence, and President of the Federation of Churches in Rhode Island, will deliver a paper on "New England Churches and Social Work." Mr. Charles E. Hughes, of New York, will present "Federation from a Layman's Standpoint," and addresses on "Co-operation in Home and City Mission Work," will be given by Wm. A. Rice, D.D., Newark, N. J., and Mrs. George E. Talmage, New York, N. Y. The importance of such a union of prominent ministers as this, can be realized from the fact that no less than 100,000,000 of the population of the United States is estimated to be nearly 10,000,000 persons. Many of these, of course, are not familiar with

LESSON III.—Long Vowels

There are six simple long vowels in the English language, namely:—

Lingual.			Labial.
AH.	EH.	EE.	AW.	OH.	OO.
as heard in the words
Alms.	Ail.	Eel.	All.	Oak.	Ooze.
They should be pronounced as single sounds; thus, ah as in ah (not a-ah); eh as in ape ; ee as in ee ; aw as in awe (not aw-ee); oh as in oh ; oo as in oo . They may be remembered by repeating the following sentence:
Pa	may	we	all	go	too
ah.	eh.	ee.	aw.	oh.	oo.

They are sounded in the larynx or voice-box by the vocal cords on the outgoing stream of air, with simultaneous adaptation of the position of the tongue and lips. The order of the vowels in each group corresponds to the order of their utterance by the vocal organs, each vowel commencing with the most open ending with the most closed sound. The first three vowels, represented in shorthand by a heavy dot (•), are called Lingual, because their production the tongue is mainly concerned; the last three, represented by a short heavy dash (—), are called Labial, because in their production the lips are mainly concerned.

The dots and dashes, representing the long vowels, are numbered 1, 2, and 3, thus:

1. ah •	1. aw —
2. eh •	2. oh —
3. ee •	3. oo —

They are hence called first place, second place, and third place, respectively.

There are three distinct positions at the side of each consonant where the respective vowel signs may be placed, namely, at the beginning, the middle, and the end. These are also numbered 1, 2, and 3. They are numbered on the point where the consonant begins. In the case of down strokes, the vowel places count from the top downwards, thus ah 1, eh 2, ee 3; in the case of up strokes, the vowel places count from the bottom upwards, thus aw 1, oh 2, oo 3; in the case of horizontal strokes from left to right, thus ah 1, eh 2, ee 3.

The vowel signs are put in the places which correspond with their numbers; thus lah (1), leh (2), lee (3), law (1), low (2), loo (3), lah (1), lay (2), lee (3), law (1), low (2), loo (3).

24. The vowel signs must be written at a little distance from the consonant. If allowed to touch (except in a few cases which will be mentioned hereafter), they would give rise to mistakes. A dash vowel may be written at any angle that is distinct, the right angle being generally most convenient, thus: lor or two; lor or foe; lor or Joe.

25. When a vowel is placed on the left-hand side of a consonant, or sloping consonant, it is read before the consonant, as ape, ate, age. When a vowel is placed on the right-hand side of a consonant, or sloping consonant, it is read after the consonant, as pay, Tay, jay.

26. When a vowel is placed above a horizontal consonant, it is read before the consonant, as ache, eke, oven. When a vowel is placed below a horizontal consonant it is read after the consonant, as key, key, no.

27. The following Diagrams further illustrate the positions of the vowels, as explained in paragraphs 21-26:

28. In writing, the student should strike the consonant first, and then fill in the vowel in its proper place.

Exercise 4

- Write the following words in shorthand, using the vowel signs in the places which correspond with their numbers:
1. ah, day, ate, may, oh, no.
 2. eh, low, key, no, oh, no.
 3. ee, low, key, no, oh, no.
 4. ah, low, key, no, oh, no.

Exercise 5

Write the following words in shorthand, using the vowel signs in the places which correspond with their numbers:

1. ah, day, ate, may, oh, no.
2. eh, low, key, no, oh, no.
3. ee, low, key, no, oh, no.
4. ah, low, key, no, oh, no.
5. eh, low, key, no, oh, no.
6. ee, low, key, no, oh, no.

REVIEW

1. How many long vowels are there?
2. Name the two groups into which they are divided, and explain the reason for this division.
3. By what signs are they represented?
4. How are they distinguished?
5. How are they placed on the vowel sign?
6. How are they placed on the vowel sign?
7. How are they placed on the vowel sign?
8. How are they placed on the vowel sign?
9. How are they placed on the vowel sign?
10. How are they placed on the vowel sign?

Joined Consonants

When two consonants are joined together, they should be written without a space between them, and the vowel sign should be placed between them, as in the following examples:

ah, eh, ee, aw, oh, oo, ah, eh, ee, aw, oh, oo, ah, eh, ee, aw, oh, oo.

30. Consonants when joined together should be written without a space between them, and the vowel sign should be placed between them, as in the following examples:

ah, eh, ee, aw, oh, oo, ah, eh, ee, aw, oh, oo, ah, eh, ee, aw, oh, oo.

31. When two consonants are joined together, they should be written without a space between them, and the vowel sign should be placed between them, as in the following examples:

ah, eh, ee, aw, oh, oo, ah, eh, ee, aw, oh, oo, ah, eh, ee, aw, oh, oo.

32. When two consonants are joined together, they should be written without a space between them, and the vowel sign should be placed between them, as in the following examples:

ah, eh, ee, aw, oh, oo, ah, eh, ee, aw, oh, oo, ah, eh, ee, aw, oh, oo.

33. When two consonants are joined together, they should be written without a space between them, and the vowel sign should be placed between them, as in the following examples:

ah, eh, ee, aw, oh, oo, ah, eh, ee, aw, oh, oo, ah, eh, ee, aw, oh, oo.

GEMS FROM THE WORLD'S GREAT PULPITS

Living Thoughts from the Recent Sermons of Eminent Preachers of Many Denominations

SINS OF OMISSION

REV. DONALD SAGE MACKAY, COLLEGIATE REFORMED CHURCH, NEW YORK

DO you remember on what kind of sins the last indictment before the judgment seat of Christ is to be based? Do you realize that what Christ is going to call you and me to account for then is not our sins of commission, but our sins of omission? It is not the big things we may have done, but the little things we did not do, that in Christ's thought will condemn us at the last. How does the indictment read? We shall not be taken unawares by it. Christ has served it upon us in ample time for us to remedy it if we choose: "I was a hungered and ye gave me no meat; I was thirsty and ye gave me no drink; I was a stranger and ye took me not in; naked and ye clothed me not; and inasmuch as ye did it not unto one of the least of these, my brethren, ye did it not unto me." It will be the disobedience of inaction that at the last will finally condemn many a self-sacrificed, self-centred Pharisee in this house to-day. The disobedience of inaction; the selfish torpidity of somnolent souls; the sluggish indifference of earth-blinded men; these are the things that arouse the wrath of the Lamb and bring down the judgment of heaven. It is a startling truth, but not the less truth. The mistakes of our life may be many, but it is not our mistakes, but our neglects that at the last will shut us out from the kingdom of light. What says the apostle? "How shall we escape if we neglect so great salvation?" Men die spiritually by simply neglecting the great salvation.

THE GROWTH OF THE KINGDOM

REV. F. W. NORRIS, ST. MATTHEW'S PROTESTANT EPISCOPAL CHURCH, BROOKLYN

THE kingdom of God is within us. There it begins; there it is rooted and grounded, but it must make itself manifest in external fruitage. It is to permeate the heart and mind and will of him who is its subject. The feelings and thoughts and deeds issuing therefrom shall reproduce the qualities in kind, if not in degree, of Him who is foe to all forms of tyranny, falsehood and corruption, and friend to truth in all its departments of government—art, science and religion. The extension of the kingdom, so as to include in its influence every sphere of human activity and thought emerges as the bounden duty of every one inspired by its spirit. The prophet's cry is a call to action—"Enlarge the place of thy tent and let them stretch forth the curtains of thine habitations; spare not, lengthen thy cords and strengthen thy stakes; for thou shalt spread abroad on the right hand and on the left; and thy seed shall possess the nations." Christ's commission to the apostles defines the limits of its application: "Go ye, therefore, and teach all nations."

THE BROADENED HORIZON

DR. E. TRUMBULL LEE, CINCINNATI, O.

KNOWLEDGE determines the world in which anybody lives. An ignorant man does not live in the same world with a philosopher, or scientist, though both stand on the same globe. Similarly a natural man does not live in the same world with a spiritual man, though both are on earth. One distinguishing difference is in scope of knowledge. The more knowledge a man gets the greater his world. And an overflow of knowledge creates a new and better world for the possessor of that overflow, and makes a full man of large possibilities of blessing. This is especially true with attainment of Christian knowledge. For this reason, unlettered men, as Peter, have produced profound impressions on the thought of the world. Men marvel, as they marvelled at our Lord, saying: "How knoweth this man learning, never having learned?" The reason is that they have been taught of God. Christian truth broadens the understanding, and strengthens the intellect.

SPIRITUAL GROWTH

REV. J. P. GERRIE, SECRETARY CANADIAN CONG. UNION

WE are ever entering upon richer experiences and wider opportunities. The days come and go, bringing and leaving lessons of the greatest value. In the school of life we are gathering discipline, training and knowledge, which should equip us for growing service. Blessings countless in number, and beyond all price, are our daily gifts. In view of all this, we must not be content with the best of a year ago, or even that of yesterday. If once we served with murmuring, we now should serve with gladness. If in the past we brought no gift, we should in the present bring an offering, and if possible, the costly spikenard. Should strength and resources fail us in what we long to do, we can give ourselves more unreservedly into the Master's keeping. In some way we can bring and give a costlier offering, and do a better service. In some way we can enter a larger and nobler life.

CHRIST'S AUTHORITY

REV. GEORGE JACKSON, OF THE EDINBURGH WESLEYAN MISSION

THERE is not, and there never has been, and there never can be salvation by ethics or by example alone, even though they be the ethics and the example of Jesus. Men qualify the Master's words. But what is it that has given to the words of Jesus the unique power over men's hearts and minds that they have? Is it not the fact that they are his words, the words of him whom John saw?—"we beheld his glory, the glory as of the only begotten Son of the Father?" And if you separate the words from him who spoke the words you make them ineffectual and inoperative. It was in the revelation not only of what Christ said, but in what he did, the revelation of his life and death, not less than of his words, that men in all the ages have found hope, and healing, and peace. It was not a clever epigram simply, but a profound truth which Dr. Dale uttered when he said: "Jesus Christ came not so much to preach a Gospel as that there might be a Gospel to preach." And, brethren, until we have grasped that truth, the New Testament is a sealed book to us. Read the words of Paul, and of Peter, and of John, and all those who write of their Master, and you shall find that the subject upon which they spend their thought, and time, and words is not the moral precepts of Jesus; it is upon himself and the mighty works that he wrought that they fix their adoring eyes. Christ's coming into the world meant something far more than an issue of a revised and enlarged edition of the moral law; it was the coming amongst us of a new power that made for righteousness, it was the pouring of a new tide of spiritual life into the veins of the world.

REV. J. ROSS STEVENSON, D.D.

PROFESSOR OF CHURCH HISTORY IN MCCORMICK SEMINARY

Invited to the Pastorate of Fifth Avenue Presbyterian Church, New York

WOMAN'S POWER

DR. GEORGE LORIMER, MADISON AVE. BAPTIST CHURCH, NEW YORK

WOMEN, you have discernment, have you not? You have influence, have you not? But remember, your discernment and your influence measure your responsibility before God. You say, "Why, what can we do?" Go speak to your husband, tell him of his need of a Saviour; speak to your son and warn him. I do not say warn him carelessly and thoughtlessly and without due regard to that womanly tact that you know so well how to employ in great emergencies, but with all your woman's love and all your woman's grace try to make very precious and real to him the religion of Jesus Christ. For do you discern what religion is? It is formulated in this vision of a just man, for all religion consists in a just Saviour, and then in a body of people bound to him by love and justice as well. We speak of Christ's love. I believe it was love that gave him to the world.

SPIRITUAL FORCES

REV. J. H. JOWETT, CARR'S LANE CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH, BIRMINGHAM, ENG.

WE are not bold enough in our thinking concerning spiritual realities. We do not associate with every mode of the consecrated spirit the mighty energy of God. We too often oust from our practical calculations some of the strongest and most aggressive allies of the saintly life. Meekness is more than the absence of self-assertion: it is the manifestations of the might power of God. To the Apostle Paul love expressed more than a relationship. It was an energy productive of abundant labors. Faith was more than an attitude. It was an energy creative of mighty endeavor. Hope was more than a posture. It was an energy generative of a most endearing patience. All these are dynamics, to be counted as active allies, co-operating in the ministry of the Kingdom. And so the epistles abound in the recital of mystic ministries at work. The Holy Spirit worketh! Grace worketh! Faith worketh! Love worketh! Hope worketh! Prayer worketh! And there are other allies robed in less attractive garb, "Tribulation worketh." "This light affliction worketh." "Godly sorrow worketh." On every side of him the apostle conceives co-operative and friendly powers. "The mountain is full of horses and chariots of fire round about him." He exults in the consciousness of abundant resources. He discovers the friends of God in things which find no place among the scheduled powers of the world. He finds God's raw material in the world's discarded waste. "Weak things!" "base things!" "things that are despised!" "things that are not," mere nothing,—among these he discovers the operative agents of the mighty God! Is it any wonder that in this man, possessed of such a wealthy consciousness of multiple resources, the spirit of a cheery optimism should be enthroned?

CHRIST IN DISGUISE

REV. NEWELL DWIGHT HILLIS, PLYMOUTH CHURCH, BROOKLYN

NOT simply do good men entertain angels unaware but sometimes they entertain unawares the Christ himself, who comes, wearing strange disguise. Those two disciples who met that stranger on the way to Emmaus, recognized not even their own Master. He talked with them indeed with his old fire and eloquence. As was his wont, he threw light upon problems that had been dark. He breathed into them a new hope, but not until a long time had passed did they realize that the hearts had burned within them as they talked by the way. At last in the breaking of bread he was made known unto them. And he who once came in physical disguise, now comes disguised in events. He makes weakness his minister. He makes troubles and defeat his messengers. He makes old age, yea, suffering and death itself, to mean deliverance. He knocks at the door of the house of man's soul, and the keeper of the door trembles, suspecting the coming of an enemy, but in the hour when men fear most of all the approach of death itself, behold, behind the mask is one whose face is filled with light, the Lord of life and death, who comes bringing release, convoy, and guidance homeward.

THE SECRET OF POWER

DR. DAVID J. BURRELL, MARBLE COLLEGIATE CHURCH, NEW YORK

THE Christian who neglects his Bible to feed on dreams and visions must expect to lament, "O, my leanness!" But he who shows himself in sympathetic accord with the Master's prayer, "Sanctify them by thy word," becomes partaker of the divine nature and grows more and more unto the stature of the fullness of Christ. The Holy Ghost called the Spirit of Power. His influence is the great moral dynamic. The Lord said to his disciples on his departure: "Tarry ye at Jerusalem until ye be endued with power." The waited ten days, with one accord, in prayer, until it came. It came from heaven with a sound as of a rushing mighty wind and there appeared unto them cloven tongues, like as of fire, and they were all filled with the Holy Ghost (Acts 2:4). This was their qualification for the work of the kingdom. It seems to me that we have only slightly apprehended as yet the full significance of this manifestation of the tongues of fire. The kingdom is to come through the propagation of truth, and this will never be accomplished until the eloquence of the Church, not in preaching only but in holy living, is a veritable gospel of flame. The time will come when men shall speak the Gospel, "as the Spirit gives them utterance," in like manner; when the eloquence of truth shall be heated to the burning point; when they shall utter, as Milton said, "thoughts that breathe in words that burn." This is preaching; all else is empty speech.

HAPPY DAYS

DR. THEODORE L. CUYLER, LAFAYETTE AVE. PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH, BROOKLYN

ARE you sure you have as many happy days as you might have, "fully pressed down, running over"? You may have them if you will. I will give you a prescription: Take a huge draught of faith every morning; throw open your heart's doors to the promises of the Master; take a few words of honest prayer and add an act of kindness to some one that needs a word to uplift him. It will do more to brighten your countenance and help your digestion than all the prescriptions of the doctors, if you want to get aches and pains out of sight. Bear in mind that your happiness is yet much of your making or marring. There is no luck in religion. You cannot create spiritual sunshine any more than you can create the sun in the heavens. But you can put yourself in the sunshine of tried confidence. It will be all sunshine when we get up yonder, for there shall be no evening and "no night there."

INDIVIDUAL RESPONSIBILITY

DR. H. O. ROWLANDS, FIRST BAPTIST CHURCH, LINCOLN, NEB.

HYPNOTISM has become so common and so much power is attributed to it that evil-doers often seek it as a shield for their crimes. The defense is that men are so constituted by heredity and surroundings that they are incapacitated for moral and religious obligations, hence are no responsible and should be excused, and God will overlook their sins. Let no one deceive you into the idea that you are not responsible for your life and conduct. Influenced indeed we may be by powers outside of us; but to each one God has given a will which can choose the character we shall build and the destiny for which we are making. Heaven is not a "windfall" of good luck when a man dies, but it is the choice of man and the end of a life devoted to seek it. "Choose ye whom ye will serve."

THE COMING CORONATION

CAPT. CLARK

HON. WHITELAW REID

GEN. JAS. H. WILSON

OUR SPECIAL AMBASSADORS TO ATTEND THE CORONATION

At the coronation next summer of King Edward VII, every country and government will be represented. The Special Embassy from our own, appointed by President Roosevelt, is as follows: Special Ambassador, Mr. Whitelaw Reid, of New York; representative of the army, Gen. James H. Wilson, of Delaware; representative of the navy, Captain Charles E. Clark; secretaries, J. P. Morgan, Jr., Edward Lincoln Baylies, of New York, and William Wetmore, of Rhode Island. Mr. Reid has represented us before as Special Ambassador to the English sovereign, the former occasion being Queen Victoria's diamond jubilee. General Wilson, as soldier, traveler and writer, is well known to the public. He rendered distinguished service in the Civil War, and as Major-General of Volunteers, took part in our Porto Rican campaign. In 1900, the Government sent him to China as military adviser to Minister Conger, and Special United States Commissioner Rockhill. The appointment of Captain Clark is due, it is said, to the President's desire to show further recognition than has yet been accorded of his splendid services as commander of the Oregon during the Spanish-American war; he may be raised to the rank of Rear-Admiral before his departure. Mr. Morgan is son of the noted banker; Mr. Baylies is Vice-President of the Pacific Cable Company; Mr. Wetmore is son of the Senator from Rhode Island.

Already London is filling with the crowd gathering for the coronation. Rooms are being taken at hotels months in advance. Many who are flocking to the great Metropolis expect to witness only the procession, and not the ceremony itself, the number of those privileged to observe the latter being subject to limitations. The King will be crowned in Westminster Abbey, kneeling before the Archbishop of Canterbury. The Archbishop of York claims the right to crown the Queen. After the coronation their Majesties receive the sacrament. The oath of office, which precedes the coronation, will be administered by Lord Alverstone, Lord Chief Justice of England. The Dean of Westminster will instruct the King and Queen in their duties. These are busy times in Britain. The Duke of Norfolk, as Earl Marshal, has his hands full directing the preliminary arrangements. The Dukes of Norfolk have performed such service as this for their sovereigns for four hundred years. It is said that the honors which the King proposes to bestow on the occasion of his coronation will be of a most striking character. Merit and long and distinguished service to Great Britain are to govern awards, and not political or party lines.

There is no doubt that the procession and the coronation will constitute a magnificent pageant, and one that will be impressive and solemn to all who realize what is involved in a monarch's duties, opportunities, responsibilities—and perils. The last sovereign who knelt in Westminster to receive a crown was a girl of eighteen. All the world loved her then; all the world loved her when she died; few are there but would say she was well called the "Lord's anointed." All Christian people will pray that her son's reign may be inspired by as conscientious and pious a spirit as animated that of Victoria, the Good.

Mr. Sankey's Gospel Work

Mr. Ira D. Sankey, our Musical Editor, since his return from Great Britain, has been devoting much of his time to addressing young men's meetings throughout the country, under the auspices of the Y.M.C.A. His lectures, entitled: "Sacred Song and Story," "Memories of Moody," and "Singing thro' Egypt and Palestine," have been delivered in the largest churches in all the places visited. His audiences have been very large and deeply interested. While thus engaged, he is constantly on the lookout for young men with exceptional voices, and who are disposed to consecrate themselves to the service of Christian Song. It is one of his cherished hopes that he may find some young men who have the necessary qualification to take up the work of Gospel singing, as he did forty years ago, and as others have done, with so much blessing to the cause of evangelism.

A remarkable feature in connection with Mr. Sankey's Gospel work in recent years is his success as a speaker. Not only does he hold his audiences by the familiar charm of his wonderful voice, but his addresses display an equal power of fascination. He is always interesting and helpful, and often eloquent; and this new gift, developed late in life, is a delightful surprise to those who have heretofore known him only as an exponent of the Gospel of Song. His addresses to young men are usually delivered in the morning and those to both men and women in the evening.

Mission Work in Venezuela

Last summer, the Rev. Gerard A. Bailly and a little band of missionary workers, left New York for Caracas, Venezuela. Mr.

Bailly writes to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, announcing that the work is now fairly under way, and in spite of the disturbed condition of affairs, owing to the war, the workers have made substantial progress. The Mission Hall is directly opposite President Castro's palace and headquarters, and is a centre of attraction for soldiers, peasants and others. All the material and supplies imported for the mission were allowed to be landed free of duty. It is proposed to establish an Orphan Industrial Home, for which $1,500 will be needed.

"HUNGRY FOR THE GOSPEL"

Chinese Women Crowd the American Mission at Wuhu

WHAT a scene it was that we may worship God! It is a question that was asked by a missionary only a few days ago. At that time was over this woman, with several others who were intensely interested in the souls, gathered about, inquiring further what they must do to be saved. Their faces beamed with joy as the light broke in upon their darkened souls, and they said: "Until recently we did not know of this great salvation, and if you had not come to tell us, we should yet be in the darkness."

PAGODA AND TEMPLE NEAR WUHU

This is but an instance of the heart-hunger for the Gospel, and the call for help which is so needed by countless multitudes in China today. A number of very poor women have said to us: "It is better for you to give us the Gospel than to give us rice, for then we can have peace in our hearts."

As we compare the peace and prosperity of the work in China now, with the sorrow and difficulties of a year ago, when the missionaries were only just beginning to return, we praise God for his outstretched arm to save these people, and for the mighty answers given to prayer.

GENERAL AND MINNIE QUADT

The Coming of the Prince

PUBLIC interest in the visit to this country of the Kaiser's brother, Prince Henry, of Prussia, increases as the time of his arrival approaches. The American people are eager to show in more ways than the brief term of his visit permits, their hospitable feeling towards the Prince himself and their warm regard for the great nation he represents. A number of our large cities have expressed desire to be included in the royal itinerary, pledging fitting welcome. As Prince Henry's sojourn here is limited to two weeks, it will be impossible for him to visit all the cities which have extended invitations, but his imperial brother and himself have expressed hearty appreciation of the friendly sentiment inspiring such overtures. According to programmes announced, Chicago, Milwaukee, Cincinnati, St. Louis, Niagara Falls and Boston will be included in the Prince's tour.

The Reception committee appointed by the President consists of Assistant Secretary of State Hull, General Canby, Admiral Evans, and Colonel Bingham; Counsellor Quadt, of the German Embassy, being present at their sessions. Through Dr. von Holleben, German Ambassador, the various plans have been cabled to Berlin for the Kaiser's approval. The Kronprinz Wilhelm, which brings Prince Henry, is due Feb. 22. In New York, the Prince will be officially welcomed by the President's representatives, the Governor of New York and Mayor Low. February 24 or 25, the Kaiser's new yacht Meteor will be launched from Shooter's Island, Miss Alice Roosevelt, the President's daughter, standing sponsor. February 25, the Prince dines with Mayor Low and attends a reception in his honor by the Press Club. February 26, he and his suite proceed to Washington, where there will be an interchange of courtesies between himself and the President. The Prince dining at the White House on February 27, he and his suite will attend the joint sessions of Congress and the Senate, when Secretary Hay will deliver the memorial address on President McKinley. February 28, he starts West.

Chap. XIII. -Tracing the Wanderer

THE boy Immanuel was waiting in the lawyer's outer office, his short legs dangling uncomfortably from the high stool to which one of the clerks had lifted him. He greeted Mr. Armitage with sparkling eyes and a joyous sigh of relief.

"Are you tired, my child?" asked the old man, tenderly; "I was a long time in there—yes, a long, weary time—and what a story!" He was speaking to himself now, unconsciously quickening his steps till the child at his side was forced into a run to keep up with the irregular strides.

"Where are we going now, my father?" said the boy breathlessly, looking up into the ruddy face, where pain and anger struggled for the mastery.

Moses Armitage looked down at the questioner, and his eyes brightened. "Why, here I am running your little legs off, boy! Why didn't you pull me up, as I do Nelly, when she has eaten too many oats? I'll tell you where we are going; we are going on a boat for a fine ride, but first we shall see what they can give us to eat in this pretty shop. I see some cakes in the window, which look as if they were made for a boy like you."

An hour later they were climbing a rickety staircase, whereon endless processions of slatternly women, ragged children, and slouching men passed up and down. Loud, discordant voices filled the intervals between slamming doors. A vague, sickening odor, lowered in the half darkness like a cloud.

"This isn't a nice house," said Immanuel, "Why do we come here?"

Moses Armitage regarded him with thoughtful eyes. "You see, there are children who stay here all the time," he said; "but you and I will go away very soon."

It was Mrs. Bridget Kelly, her that had stopped nine years on the top floor, that could tell the gentleman what he wished to know if anyone could, so said a big woman with half a dozen children clinging to her ragged skirts. And up five flights of the dirty stairs, through dark, ill-smelling passages, they went, escorted by an ever-increasing swarm of pallid, eager-eyed children.

"It's the second door to yer right, sir; the wan wid th' hole in it," volunteered a small girl, who carried a big baby. "Twas Mike Kelly wot kicked it thru whin he wor drunk las' week."

"An' ye c'n shet yer dirty mouth, Kitty McGuire," cried a shrill voice from the door in question. "What yer doin' on me landin', the lave av yez? Git out or I'll tak' me poker to yez!" The speaker turned to her visitors with a broad smile of welcome. "Ye c'n walk in, sur," she said, apologetically; "they ain't no manners—the kids in this house."

When Moses Armitage had made known his errand, Mrs. Kelly heaved a reminiscent sigh. "Oh, yis," she said, "I mind it all as if it was yiste'day. She an' her man—a mere shlip av a boy he was, an' sick-lookin', thin; she come to me an' sez, 'We hav' n't any furnitur,' she sez, 'an' on'y a little money.' She showed me what she had, poor dear, 'An' c'ud we board wid you,' she sez, 'till I gits a letter I'm expectin'?"

"I had tuk boarders off an' on, fur I've always lived respectable, an' in them days I had three rooms. So I tuk him. Her man cud n't git no work, try as he w'ud; an' after awhile she towld me as how they wud git their own victuals. But sorra a bit she iver cooked, though I offered her the lave av me stove."

Mrs. Kelly paused to wipe her eyes on her apron. "I towld this same to a bit av a spalpeen as was here tree weeks gone," she said, "An' fur what do they want the poor thing? She was a lady, if iver I see wan; an' sure an' I ought to know, for before me marriage to Mike Kelly I lived out wid many a lady."

"I am Mrs. Rossi's uncle," said Moses Armitage.

"Oh—her uncle? Lord, save us! thin you'll happen be the wan she wint to see afther her man died! He war tuk suddint wid fever an' on'y lived five days. Poor young thing—an' she that delicate herself. We all done what we c'ud to help her, an' he was buried by the city; it c'ud n't be helped. The day av the fun'ral I sez to her, 'What you goin' to do whin your own time comes, Mis' Rossi?' I sez. She hadn't paid me no money for the room in tin days, but I w'ud n't bring it up to her thin. 'I don't know,' she sez, an' wrung her bits av white han's. 'If my letter w'ud on'y come!' she sez. 'Why don't I git my letter?'

"Well, I sez, 'Billy' w'ud give it to ye in a minit if they was wan,' I sez. Billy McGuire, he was the pos'man, an' an elegant, respectable man; I've knowed his wife these tin years. 'If they was wan,' I sez, 'Billy' w'ud surely give it to yez, an' so I guess there ain't none."

"That same day she slipped out, an' whin she comes in she had some money in her han'. I tuk notice at her weddin' ring was gone. 'I'll pay you for the room now,' she sez, 'thin I'm goin'.' The nex' mornin' whin I got up she was gone, an' that was the las' I seen av her."

"Did you ask her where she was going, when she spoke of leaving the day before?" asked Moses Armitage, anxiously.

"I did that!" said Mrs. Kelly, nodding her head emphatically, "but it was n't me 'at 'ud let on to the man that was here before, for, to tell you the straight truth, I didn't like the luk av him. But you bein' her uncle is different. I sez to her, 'Where you goin', Mis' Rossi, dear,' I sez. For as sure as I set in this chair I was that sorry for the woman I meant to keep her till afther her trouble. 'Don't go,' I sez, 'till you're better.' 'I'm goin' to me uncle,' she sez; 'I know he'll tak' me in. I know where he lives, too, for I heard father say.' 'In that case,' I sez, 'you're a-doin' sensible.' I was manin' to ask her more perticular before she wint; but as I tol' yez, she was gone come mornin'. I've never forgot the poor thing."

The woman's eyes had wandered often during this recital to the face of the child, who leaned shyly against the great shoulder of his guardian. "I suppose," she continued, again wiping her eyes, that this is her babby; six—ain't he? An' a fine, big boy av his age! I'd ha' knowed it widout your tellin', for he's the livin' image av her. I seen it whin I first laid eyes on him! What's your name, little feller?"

"My name's Manuel," answered the child, shyly.

"Av course it is, afther his pa! Many's the time I heard her callin' him that same!"

"But, my good woman," said Moses Armitage, "I never saw my niece. I do not know that I am the uncle she referred to. She did not come to me."

"She never come to you?" echoed the woman shrilly. "The saints defin'd an' guard us! an' ain't this her babby thin?"

"No," said Moses Armitage. Then he sprang to his feet so suddenly as to upset the rickety chair upon which he had been sitting. A strange thought had flashed across his brain. He thrust a piece of money into the woman's hand. "I shall not forget your kindness to her," he said. Seizing the child in his arms he made his way down the unsteady staircases in a fashion which called alarmed faces to doors and windows.

Chapter XIV.—In the Valley

IT had rained in the valley for more than a week. The heavy midsummer vegetation drooped earthward, rank and dark. Grain mildewed in the sodden fields; in closets and cellars livid fungus started out on the dank walls; sharp, penetrating odors of damp and mold crept from closed parlors and "spare" bedrooms. Under the dense masses of drifting vapors people sickened here and there.

"It is an unusually unhealthy season," declared Mr. Eliphalet Dundor, and he became proportionately cheerful, while the discouraged farmers grumbled, and their overworked wives took to their beds

A MINISTER'S WIFE AND A CHURCH DEBT

A minister's wife in Buffalo writes:

"Our church was encumbered with a mortgage. THE LADIES' HOME JOURNAL and THE SATURDAY EVENING POST seemed to offer a chance to accomplish something for the work, and I took the matter to the Ladies' Aid Society. I proposed that each member should enter her subscription, and try to secure other names. My plan was received enthusiastically. In addition to our own members we obtained subscriptions from many not connected with the church. Everywhere we went we talked JOURNAL and church mortgage. Soon we had subscriptions enough to reduce the mortgage considerably, and with very little work."

th neuralgia, lumbago and what not, according to their varied constitutions and edilections. The village doctor, wiser than he knew, went about administering his favorite nostrums impartially. Mr. Dundor and Mr. Wirt, laboring amicably in their several callings for the weal of the community, paused in theuddy road one wet morning for a social interchange of news. Dr. Wirt opined gely that if the weather did not clear, he ould shortly have the bulk of the community on his hands for treatment. Mr. Dundor inquired, with professional propriety, if any of the cases were likely prove fatal; and expressed profound regret when informed that Mrs. Erastus Winch was not likely to survive the day. "It ain't altogether the dampness that is affected her," quoth the doctor with a own. "Neuralgia I can cure, and a weak stomach I can strengthen; but when comes to a patient fretting herself to death, why it ain't in my books." "Course it ain't," acquiesced Mr. Dundor complacently, as he leaned forward to sledge an over greedy horsefly with his nip handle. "I s'pose 'twas losin' that y. Queer thing, wa'n't it?" "Mighty queer," agreed the doctor, uthering up his reins. "Physic don't ouch the case. Good day, sir." "Hold on a minute, doc," cried the untaker excitedly. "Say, ain't that the y now in the wagon a-comin'? I don't ow the man, though." The doctor leaned out of his buggy and ared over the top of his spectacles at e approaching vehicle. Then as he ned out to make room in the narrow ad he cried, "How do do, Mr. Armitage. old on a minute, will you, and tell me ow you came by that boy. I need him r one of my patients to-day more'n lls." Moses Armitage pulled up sharply. "Do you know him?" he asked. "Why, yes, I know him," said the docr dryly. "He b'longs to a family named Winch over on the river road. You'd etter take him home, I guess; his mother n't likely to live through the day." Moses Armitage's ruddy face had anched to a curious dusky pallor. "He as lost," he said briefly. "He came to y house." "I guess the kid's a kin' of a tramp. me's his mother," put in Mr. Dundor ith a wink. "She took to the road when e'd been better off to home, an' died in Winch's barn. Ain't you never heard the ory, stranger? Most the folks in these arts knew 'bout it at the time." Moses Armitage glanced at the child, is face was pinched with fear; his eyes limmed over. "I want to see munny," e whispered. "To get to Winch's," volunteered the ctor, "you want to turn 'round and go ack 'bout quarter of a mile; take your rst left, then follow the river-road for bout a mile an' a half. The boy 'll know e place." A rasping scrape of wheels, a spatter f mud and the quick plunge of hoofs acnowledged these kindly directions. "Why didn't you tell me your name, y boy?" asked Moses Armitage, lookg down at the little figure at his side. "I would have taken you home long ago I had known." The child nestled closer to the broad oulder. "I wanted you," he said, tremously. There was a long silence filled with the monotonous slush—slush of the mare's eet in the liquid mud. "Munny lives there," said the boy at ast, in a subdued voice. He ran eagerly p the gate when the man lifted him down, hen stopped and turned with a scared ace. "I see him," he whispered; "he's n the porch. Won't you come?" "I'm coming, boy, when I've hitched felly," said Moses Armitage. His face ore a curious expression as he glanced harpily at the slouching figure clad in ue jeans, which leaned against the house nder the shelter of the narrow porch. Moses Armitage accosted this passive gure with stereotyped greetings. "I have just learned," he added "that the (100) who wandered to my door some weeks ago belongs to you." A wicked light leaped up in the dull eyes. "Then ye heerd what ain't so," was the response in a savage guttural. "Is n't your name Winch, sir?" asked Moses Armitage. "I met a couple of men near the village who directed me to this house; they told me—" "Oh, yas, I persoom so," sneered the other. "My name's Winch; but I don't lay no claim to that boy. My wife, 'Liz'-beth, she's a-dyin' in thar," he continued, his voice breaking in a husky quaver. "My wife—'Liz'-beth—an' all along o' that beggar brat! You c'n take him away!" "That is what I wish to do; but your wife—she is ill, you say. You will allow the child to see her, of course. I am not aware of the circumstances, but—" Neither of the men had paid much heed to the child, who, during this short parley, had crept nearer and nearer to the door. "I want munny!" he cried shrilly, and on a sudden flung the door wide and darted in. A great broken cry answered the words, and Moses Armitage, who had unhesitatingly followed, beheld a piteous sight. The cold gray light of the weeping day fell full upon the grayer face of a woman who clasped the child in close embrace. "Oh, Manuel—Manuel!" she murmured. "Manuel—Manuel—Manuel!" "I've come back, munny!" cried the child, joyously. "I was looking for my father, an' I found him!" The woman had fallen back exhausted upon her pillow; but she fixed her glazing eyes upon the man who stood with bared head at her bedside. "Yes—yes!" she said eagerly, as if answering some question. "I know him! I knowed him in a minute! I'm—mighty glad! The book—he'd ought to—" A stout woman in a sunbonnet bustled in from the kitchen. "Land! I wouldn't ha' gone even for a minute if I'd suspicioned she'd go off into another of her spells! Here, Mis' Winch, take this." She slipped her arm under the sick woman's pillow and held a teaspoon to the blue lips. The gray head moved feebly from side to side. "Manuel," gasped the faint voice, "give him—the—book!" The stout woman presently faced about and straightened herself with an air of professional authority. "I guess you'd better all go out now," she said crisply. "Tain't any more'n I expected all 'long; but I'm reel sorry the minister wa'n't here an' the doctor." Erastus Winch started forward: his haggard eyes asked the question which his tongue refused to utter. "Yes, she's gone," said the woman, raising her apron to her face. "Slipped away jes' like a shadder, to a better lan', I trust." She glanced curiously at Moses Armitage. "I s'pose mebbe you'r a relashun," she began uncertainly. "If you c'd not ly the—Land of love! if it ain't that boy! I declare you'd ought to be 'shamed o' yourself! But this ain't no time to speak. I guess you'd better take him away afore he—" The last words were uttered in a sibilant whisper, which seemed to penetrate the ears of the man who leaned against the wall, staring unblinkingly at the quiet face on the pillow. "She's dead—'Liz'-beth is—dead! 'Liz'-beth's dead!" He uttered these words in a dull monotone. Then he straightened his limp shoulders with a jerk. "Give me the boy," he said thickly; "he done it! 'Twas him she was callin' fer, an' he never come till 'twas too late." His terrible eyes seemed to devour the shrinking little figure; his great hands reached for it, where it cowered beside the dead woman. Moses Armitage seized the boy in his arms. "Stop!" he cried. "You are crazed with grief, man! You don't know what you're saying." He turned and strode out of the house, the child struggling violently in his embrace. "I want munny," wailed the little voice; "I want to see my munny!"

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS

The usual five new questions are omitted this week, in order that other letters to "The Mail-Bag," many of them long delayed, may receive attention. Hereafter, once a month, the entire page will be devoted to this class of letters.

Readers are invited to forward new questions which they believe would be suitable for discussion in this department.

Letters addressed to the Mail-Bag must contain the names and addresses of the writers, not for publication, but in order that answers may be sent by mail when that mode is preferable.

Subscriber, Red Bluff, Calif. Is it necessary, and is it the general custom among Christian people, to say "grace" at every meal and to have evening prayers? I know some observe these customs yet; but is it necessary to do so?

The true Christian recognizes God as the source of every blessing, and "ceases not to give thanks" at all times. The saying of "grace," or a brief expression of grateful acknowledgment for food, is one of the most ancient forms of expressing a feeling of devotion, and is as proper to-day as in the times of the patriarchs or of the apostles. Christ himself emphasized the giving of thanks by his own divine example. See Matt. 26: 27; Luke 22: 17; Mark 14: 23, etc. See also I. Chron. 23: 30; Psalm 134: 1; 92: 1; 116: 17; 140: 13; I. Tim. 4: 4; Eph. 5: 4. With regard to evening prayer, it is equally the custom in all Christian households to have prayers, some with the entire family assembled, and others where, after reading a portion of Scripture, each member offers his individual petition in the privacy of his own room. We cannot conceive of any one who truly desires progress in the spiritual life, neglecting the privilege of prayer.

James R., Algomac, Miss. Who was Melchizedek?

He was both the king of Salem and the "priest of the most high God," who went forth to meet Abraham on his return from the defeat of the allied kings. It was not uncommon in patriarchal times for a ruler to be both priest and king. In the writings of the early Christian fathers, there was much dispute concerning Melchizedek, some holding that he was an angel, others the Messiah, others the Holy Ghost, and a few declaring him to be none other than Shem. He seems to have been a leading person among the Canaanites, a descendant of Noah, and eminent for holiness and justice. In Hebrews 7: 3, it is intimated that he was of obscure parentage.

J. H. G., East Clarendon, Vt. Can a church live, when those attending play cards and use profane language?

Such practices are incompatible with a Christian profession. At the same time, even in a church so afflicted, there may be a leaven of righteousness that will keep the church alive, although these and kindred vices, unless checked, will ultimately destroy spiritual life.

A. L. G., Walsburg, Kan. A young couple, after engagement, find that neither is willing to attend the other's church. On all other points they are agreed. What should be done?

If their religious differences are important, (different faiths, for example), it might be wise for them to reconsider their engagement, as it is almost certain that permanent dissatisfaction will result from a union under such circumstances. If, however, the differences are merely denominational, they should be able to agree. Where there is any concession to be made, the man ought, naturally, to be the first to offer it.

E. E. K., Pope, N. Y. What can you tell us about Miss Stone and her friend, Mme. Tsilka, about both of whom we have been so anxious?

The latest information is to the effect that their release has been definitely agreed upon, the amount of ransom being fixed at $61,000. They may be freed any day.

M. A., Greenboro, N. Y. Who named the days of the week as we have them now?

The English names of the days of the week are of Saxon origin. The Saxons borrowed their idea of the seven-day division of time from the Orient, and substituted the names of their gods for those of the Greeks after which the days of the week were called. With the Greeks, the days ran thus: Day of the Sun, Day of the Moon, Day of Mars, Day of Mercury, Day of Jove, Day of Venus, Day of Saturn; the Saxons called them: Sun's Day, Moon's Day, Tiw's Day, Woden's Day, Thor's Day, Friga's Day, Seterne's Day. Our word Sabbath, comes from the Hebrew Shabbath, derived from Shabath, meaning to rest from labor.

Rev. Joseph Hamilton, of Minico, Can., one of our readers, lately received a most interesting letter from the wife of Admiral

Sampson, in response to a note of inquiry concerning his health. The letter says:

My Dear Mr. Hamilton:—I cannot bear to let your most kind letter to Admiral Sampson go unanswered, though he is too ill even to understand its receipt. But its kind words do reach him by ministering unto me—a conundrum which I am sure you can solve. Admiral Sampson is indeed very ill, though I cannot yet give up the hope that he will improve with the spring days, and renew something of his former strength.

Washington, D. C. ELIZABETH B. SAMPSON.

Inquiring Reader, Paterson, N. J. In what respect do the Jews regard the gathering of sticks or the kindling of fires on their Sabbath day as a sin?

The sin of gathering sticks on the Sabbath day (as related in Num. 15: 32-36) is made more clear in the original Hebrew, with the aid of the Talmud and commentaries. In the Hebrew, instead of "gathering sticks," it is "gathering wood" or trees. The word Etsim is the plural of Ets, which means tree. The Seephree, a commentary on the Talmud, declares that the man referred to in Numbers tore up the wood, or tree, from the soil. It further shows, from the Hebrew construction, that Moses had assigned watchers to guard against Sabbath-breakers, and these watchers had warned the culprit, and when he ignored their warning, "they brought him unto Moses and Aaron, and unto all the congregation." The breaking of any commandment, after being warned, intensified the crime. All the Hebrew sages agree that this particular Sabbath-breaker sinned on the second Sabbath after the Sinaitic revelation. It created such commotion, that it seems even Moses did not know how to deal with the culprit, though he knew that it was a capital offense, calling for one of the four biblical modes of execution. Rabbi Akivah, one of the greatest Talmudical sages, asserts that the stick-gatherer was Zelaphehad, the father of the five daughters who claimed his inheritance. A. B.

S. T. B., Haverhill, Mass. Can you tell me the origin and significance of the loving-cup?

In ancient festivals of state, it was customary to pass a large cup, with many handles, from guest to guest, till all had drunk of it. Drinking from the same cup was considered symbolical of good-will, of readiness to share the same fortune, to fight and die for the same cause. It may have had a use besides this, of rather sinister suggestion in those old days, where poison might be treacherously administered at a banquet. At ordinary meals, it was sometimes customary in Britain, and perhaps other countries, to pass just after grace, a large silver cup, filled with spiced wine, from which all sipped. This was called the Grace-Cup. The origin of the loving-cup is too remote to be clearly traced. It seems to have been sometimes the case at the Jewish Passover for a common "cup of blessing" to be passed around the board. The modern loving-cup is rarely intended for use; as a rule, it is a large, handsome ornament, with two handles, and is given for its symbolical meaning and not as a drinking-vessel.

A. D., Englishtown, N. J. We received the Art Portfolio, and are very much pleased with it. We should like to know what suggested the picture, "Handel's First Efforts."

A pretty story, found in all books giving the history of Handel's childhood, formed the basis of Margaret Dicksee's beautiful picture. The little Handel was "music-mad." In the nursery, the only toys which interested him were trumpets, drums, flutes, etc. His father, a prosperous merchant, ambitious for his son, felt that he must put an end to the boy's craze, for music was not a paying profession. He had all musical instruments sent out of his house, and took the boy from grammar school because music was taught there. There happened to be an old clavicord or spinet in the garret. Some say his aunt Anna or his mother had a hand in its being there. Any way, little Handel used to steal up there at night, and practise when everybody was asleep, and at last he was discovered. About this time, his father went to visit his grandson, Georg Christian, valet to the Duke of Saxe Weissenfels. Handel went with him, and made friends with the Duke's choir-master, who allowed him to play the voluntary at the conclusion of a service attended by the Duke. The Duke was amazed and interested; and a way was opened for the little player to develop the wonderful gifts with which God endowed him, and which later rendered to the world the "Messiah" and other beautiful oratorios.

Reader, Camden, N. J. Who are the women referred to in Tennyson's "Dream of Fair Women?"

She referred to as "Daughter of the Gods, divinely tall and most divinely fair," is Helen of Troy. Next, "Blasted by a Curse," of which Helen was the cause, is Iphigenia, daughter of Agamemnon, king of Argolis; she

THE ANTICHRIST*

...Characteristics, Claims and Career of the Impersonation of Evil in the Last Days

BY REV. SHOLTO D. C. DOUGLASS

HAVING called attention to the passages of Scripture describing the being who before the final consummation of this dispensation will gather into one force all that opposes Christ in the world, and as an incarnation of Satan, will make one supreme effort to gain possession of this globe; having spoken of the condition of the world at his appearance; of his character and history; of his assumption of divine honor; of his destruction and that of his capital; and of the titles and emblems used in relation to him, let me now remind you of a startling resemblance furnished by comparatively recent history.

There have been men who, like Alexander and Caesar, have aimed at the subjugation of the whole world to their sway. There have been potentates, too, who have had the temerity to defy God and openly insult him, like Pharaoh, Nebuchadnezzar and Antiochus Epiphanes; but none of these in character, scope of ambition and overleaping personal vanity, so resembles the Antichrist, as that scourge of Europe in the beginning of the nineteenth century, Napoleon I.

It will be noticed that he made an attempt to restore the Roman Empire in the precise manner that it will eventually be restored by the Antichrist. On December 2, 1804, he caused himself to be crowned Emperor of the French at Notre Dame, the ceremony being performed by Pope Pius VIII., whom he had induced to visit Paris for that purpose. His idea of his empire, is revealed in the fact that he had procured the iron crown of Charlemagne for the coronation, although at that time a large portion of the dominions of Charlemagne owed allegiance to the Emperor of Austria. But, in 1806, he made use of his victory in Austerlitz, to wrest these provinces from the protectorate of Austria, and to unite them to his own sway under the title of the Confederation of the Rhine. At the same time, he was arranging to establish some of his brothers and generals as vassal kings over other countries of Europe. His intentions in so doing are thus explained by one of his latest biographers:

"Thus far, then, Napoleon aimed at the restoration of the Western Empire, through a combination of confederated nations under himself as emperor. In a despatch to the Pope during the same year he thus expresses himself: 'Your Holiness is the sovereign of Rome, but I am her emperor.' In 1809 he annexed the Papal States, and styled Rome the second city of the empire; and in 1811 he chose the title of King of Rome for his infant son.

"The principal reason which directed the mighty conqueror to Moscow, instead of to St. Petersburg, was the secret project that he entertained of placing on his brow the diadem of the Eastern Empire. This project he had in view from very early times, and is said, when only a subaltern officer of artillery, to have nourished the hope of being King of Jerusalem. Strange that he should have wished for that which heathen soothsayers predicted as the destiny of Nero. Satan will never rest until he has insulted and profaned the city of the great King by making it the throne of the Beast. And at last he will succeed; but his success will fill up the measure of his iniquities.

"Napoleon made overtures to the Jews, and took them, to some extent, under his protection. In July, 1806, he invited them to hold their great Sanhedrin in Paris; and in March, 1807, seventy-one doctors and leading men of the Hebrew race assembled in that city, and formed themselves into a national council, the like of which had not been held for more than seventeen hundred years—not, indeed, since the destruction of Jerusalem by Titus. The immediate cause of his interest in them may, no doubt, be found in his desire to conciliate the wealthy Jews of old Prussia, Poland, and the southern provinces of Russia. But they looked upon him as their deliverer, and styled him 'the Lord's anointed Cyrus;' and since we know his designs in regard to the East, we may be quite sure that he had also some ulterior plan for utilizing them in their own country.

"He displayed the names of blasphemy. When he was in Egypt he openly regretted that he could not, like Alexander, give himself out to be the son of Jupiter Ammon. But what he could do he did, as may be seen by the following proclamation, issued after the suppression of a revolt at Cairo:

"Shieks, Ulemas, Orators of the Mosque, teach the people that those who become my enemies shall have no refuge in this world or the next. Is there any one so blind as not to see that I am the Man of Destiny? Make the people understand that from the beginning of time it was ordained that, having destroyed the enemies of Islam, and vanquished the Cross, I should come from the distant parts of the west to accomplish my destined task. Show them that in twenty passages of the Koran my coming is foretold."

"Throughout the whole of his career he showed a desire to be considered something more than human, and while many of the addresses presented to him recognized him as a sort of divinity, it is not on record that he ever imitated the noble conduct of Canute. On the contrary, he excused many unscrupulous and outrageous proceedings, by the assertion that he was acting as the arm of God. He loved to be addressed by the title of Votre Providence; and Lanfrey, after quoting one of his letters to the Pope, remarks: 'These singular expressions show that Napoleon already considered himself as something more than the Pope's suzerain; for he went nearly so far as to dispute with him his title of Vicar of God.'

"In the hall in which the Sanhedrin met at Paris, the cipher of Napoleon's name and that of Josephine's were blended with the name of God, and placed over the Ark of the Covenant. But a still more fearful instance of blasphemy is given by Madame de Remusat, in her Memoirs: 'Some years later, at another fete given by the city of Paris to the emperor, the repertory of inscriptions being exhausted, a brilliant device was resorted to. Over the throne which he was to occupy were placed, in letters of gold, the following words from the Holy Scriptures, 'I am that I am.' And no one seemed to be scandalized.'

"Surely, the miserable man, by permitting so appalling a crime, denied both the Father and the Son, and showed a disposition to exalt himself, as Antichrist will do, above all that is called God, or that is worshipped."

EATING IN HAVANA.

Yankees Club Together

In Havana it is the custom to serve only bread and coffee for breakfast. A little colony of Americans that felt they could not do their work until noon on this kind of a diet clubbed together and began importing Grape-Nuts Breakfast Food.

One of them, writing about the matter, says, "The modern cooking range had never been known in Cuba until the American occupation, and even now they are scarce, so that a ready-cooked food like Grape-Nuts recommends itself to start with; then the Yankees were accustomed to the food and felt they could hardly get along without it. They began buying in five case lots and one by one the larger grocery stores began keeping Grape-Nuts in stock so the business spread until now great quantities of Grape-Nuts are used in Cuba, and it is not only used by the Americans, but the other inhabitants as well."

This is an illustration of the way the famous food has pushed itself into all parts of the world. Wherever English speaking people go they demand Grape-Nuts. They can be found in South Africa, Egypt, India, China, Japan, Australia and South America.

Many Americans speak of the homelike feeling it gives them to see the numberless busses in the streets of London decorated with great blue signs with the word, "Grape-Nuts," done in yellow letters, and all over England the great purveying shops distribute Grape-Nuts.

English roast beef has largely given way to American roast beef, and the old-fashioned English breakfast of bacon and potatoes is now supplemented with Grape-Nuts and cream. The change was made for a reason. It has been discovered that almost magical power rests within the little granules, and this power is set free in the body that makes use of the famous food.

STARK TREES SUCCEED WHERE OTHERS FAIL.
STARK BROS., LORRAINE, Md.; DARTMOUTH, N.

TEMPTED AND TRIED*

Temptation an Education and a Discipline to be Overcome in Divine Strength

FEW persons have lived long in the world without wishing that they could be beyond the reach of temptation. There is in every one some vulnerable spot, at which sin is liable to enter. The old mythology describes Achilles as being invulnerable everywhere, except his heel, by which his mother held him when she dipped him in the river Styx. So it is with all, and in some way the vulnerable spot seems to be known and to become the target for assault. Some men might have free access to enormous sums of money without experiencing any desire to steal, while they might succumb to a temptation to vice; and others, who have no vicious propensities, are susceptible to the temptations of wealth. Well it is for the man who knows his own weakness and sets a double guard on that part of the fortress. It is useless to inquire what is the origin of evil and why temptation is permitted to assail us; the wise course is to recognize the evil and to be watchful against attack. That is a weird scene in the life of our Lord, before he began his ministry, of his going into the wilderness to be tempted. Even he, the pure and holy One, must in taking on our humanity, undergo the ordeal that is before us all. And see the dexterity with which the assault was directed. In the weakness that followed his long fast, he was urged to turn the stones into bread. In his confidence in the care of his Father, he was urged to put it to a presumptuous test. In his realization of the difficulties of his mission, he was offered a short and easy mode of accomplishing it. So skillfully adapted to our personal mood and the circumstances of the hour are the temptations which come to Christ's followers to this day.

It is important to remember that it is not sinful to be tempted, nor must we cherish the delusion that temptation is beyond our power to resist. There is always the danger of the tempted one feeling that the assault of temptation implies evil in himself, and a constitutional predisposition which makes him inevitably a victim. Especially if the temptation has succeeded once or twice, it approaches with the confidence of a victor. We have the apostle's assurance that there is no temptation that is invincible. There is always a way of escape. It never comes armed with a strength beyond our own, if we will only put forth our strength in confident reliance on divine help. It is the man who dallies with temptation, who dwells upon it and broods over it, and fights half-heartedly, who falls, or it is the man who is off his guard and is taken by surprise. In either case, the temptation has the advantage of attack. Constant vigilance and unfaltering faith and courage are the means by which the victory may be won. The foe is a defeated enemy, who has been overcome many times and may be overcome again. It is ignoble to yield, and it makes matters worse to become a slave after defeat, instead of renewing the fight. Who can tell whether the temptation may not be such as assailed Job, an ordeal to prove the soul's integrity, to fail in which would be reproach to Christ? To win a victory over such temptations is a glory to the conqueror. The victor has been tried and proved in the sight of Him who knows its power and our own weakness, and rejoices in his servant's fidelity.

It was no part of Christ's plan for his people that they should be removed beyond the power of temptation. He said explicitly that he did not pray that they should be taken out of the world, but that they should be kept from the evil. That would be a poor virtue that could not bear the assault of temptation. It is the man who has been tried and tested and has overcome, who has proved his mettle. That fact may be an encouragement in the hardest fights. Not that we should seek temptation for the glory of vanquishing it. The man who courts the struggle, is liable to fall, for it may be God's way with him to show him his own weakness and make him humble. The self-confident Peter, who was sure that though all men deserted the Lord, he would not, was precisely the man to fail most miserably and to fail in that field in which he counted himself strongest. It is the strength that God gives to the valiant fighter that is the sure source of victory, and that strength is not given to one who relies on his own powers. Temptation, therefore, is educational and disciplinary and has accomplished the purpose for which it was permitted, when its attack has been repulsed. Let the poor, weak, harassed being who has often fallen, and who despairs of ever overcoming, cease repining over his failures, cease to lament his own weakness, and, confident in the help God has promised him, renew the struggle, and he will find to his amazement that, by the irresistible power imparted by Christ, victory is possible.

Admire the Art Portfolio

The Art Portfolio is very interesting, and any family may well feel proud of it. Our young folks, especially, admire it. It is worthy of a place in any family. The Red Letter Testament is more of a gem than I expected. Every Bible student would be benefited by having one for a ready reference.

TURNED OUT TRUE.

Coffee Drinking Responsible.

"At a dinner party a number of years ago a physician made this statement, 'Coffee drinking is responsible for more ills than any other one thing, but it is impossible for me to make my patients believe it.'

Neither would I believe him but continued to drink my coffee with sweet content. After a time I became aware of the fact that I was frequently lying awake nearly all night without any apparent reason, and the morning found me tired out and nervous.

The insomnia increased, then came a dull pain at the base of the brain and severe pressure at my heart. My outside work was given up for I could hardly bear the little fatigue of the day. 'Nervous prostration brought on by overwork,' the Doctor said. I thought of the words of old Dr. Bagley, 'Coffee is the poison that is responsible,' etc., etc.

I had heard of Postum Food Coffee and determined to try it. The first cup was so weak and flat that it was not fit to drink. The next time it was prepared I looked after it myself to see that the directions were followed properly. The result was a revelation. I found it a delicious beverage.

The cure was not wrought in a day, but little by little my nerves became strong, the pain ceased, and again I could sleep like a tired child.

I am now completely restored to health by Postum Food Coffee used in place of ordinary coffee, have regained the fresh complexion of girlhood, and I can realize the truth of the old doctor's statement. I wish people could understand that truth before they permit coffee to break them down.

I have known of several others who have been restored to health by leaving off coffee and taking up Postum Food Coffee. Please do not publish my name, but I am willing to answer letters of inquiry if stamp is inclosed." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

A Little Mountain Student

KEN O. O. HOWARD, to whose energetic efforts is largely due the founding of the Lincoln Memorial University, at Cumberland Gap, Tenn., gives the following incident as an illustration of the character of the educational work done by the college among the remote and neglected mountaineers and their sons and daughters. The story is that of a young girl named Lottie Seilaz, who was born at Knoxville, Tenn., a few miles from the place where her grandparents settled when they came to America. "My ancestors were French Protestants," Lottie explains, "and went to live in Switzerland after the invasion by the Germans. I have been told that after the expulsion of the monks, my great grandfather bought a monastery, the one in which William Farrell preached during the Reformation. It was a great stone building, with underground passages, which they could fill with the waters of a fountain, a small stream that flowed near by. For the love of liberty of speech and worship, which was not then tolerated, my grandfather came to this country, and several others who shared his views came with him. They purchased farms in this mountain land and prospered. The Civil War opened, when, of course, living where both great armies passed, nearly everything was lost. I have often heard my mother tell of those days, and how they had to pay $100 for a pair of boots, and $3 per yard for calico for dresses, and how they had to weave cloth for their own dresses. I was only three months old when my father died, and we had to live out on a part of my grandmother's farm. There we worked together to support ourselves, and I found time to attend school that taught eight grades. But how to advance from that was a serious question till we heard of the Lincoln Memorial College, and the School of Practice there at Grant and Lee Hall. We read of it in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, and I became a student. I am only fourteen years of age, and do not know yet just what I would like to do, but I hope to be fitted for a useful life. I shall ever be thankful to the kind friends who, by their benefactions, have made it possible for such as myself to turn our way, and to become earnest educated Christian women."

Lottie Seilaz and a schoolmate. Lottie is on the right, leaning upon her friend.

A Singular Experience

Mr. H. H. McL., San Antonio, Tex., sends this interesting incident: "From one of your recent issues was an account of a young lady who was hypnotized by a snake, and it extremely was so different from that of my own of more than sixty years ago, that I am led to believe it is then given me. In a stream called Leatherwood, near Bedford, Md., there was a pool where we went swimming, and reach it we usually followed a path down quite a bluff, and on one such occasion my chum had the strange notion to go. He was suddenly seized by the flash of brilliant colors, and with expanded wings grew in gorgeousness and variety, producing most pleasing and fascinating sensations. And these sensations were so peculiar, and from the sensations, the thought came to him that he must be a snake, and he called it a snake. A postscript by snake, and he exerted all his willpower to throw his position, and with it from his eyes. For other cause, the charm was broken, he did not know. But when freed from it, he saw gliding away a large blacksnake. He said he never could think of the occurrence without a feeling of dread coming over him, and yet with the desire to retain the remembrance of those indescribable sensations, and to view those gorgeous colors again."

"The Premiums are Beautiful!" Mrs. C. I. H., Hamilton, Ga., writes: "I received my Red Letter Bible two days since, and I am delighted with it. It is complete in every particular. The Art Portfolio is beautiful. You certainly divide your profits among your subscribers."

Anything You Want

HOW TO GET ALMOST WITHOUT SPENDING A PENNY

We Have Paid $170,000 to 55,000 Ladies

We have paid it in valuable premiums, and you can have one as well as they. These ladies simply wrote us a letter, and we sent each one a pair of Hold Fast Skirt and Waist Supporters. Each sold as many as she chose to her friends and sent us the money, and we sent her, freight prepaid, her choice from our hundred premiums. We will do the same with you. The premium shows the Supporter. It is the only valuable supporter ever introduced. No black goods, no buttons, no sewing of any kind. You ladies know what a convenience that means. There are one million and a half women wearing them now, and every woman who sees them wants one. There was never an easier article to sell, as the price is only 25 cents each. Simply show the Supporters to your friends and they will sell themselves. You will sell as many in each family as there are women and girls, and each one sold as a mother. You can thus earn a premium that will last you a lifetime. In a few odd moments that would otherwise be wasted. Just your own one million of the Supporters were sold in this way. We have premiums for selling any quantity, from a half dozen up to a gross. You can sell as few or as many as you choose, and get a premium accordingly. Try it and see how easy it is. See what a pleasant opportunity this is for spending your leisure profitably. Write today before someone else sells to your friends.

JAMIESON, FAUSSET & BROWN'S BIBLE COMMENTARY

By Robert Jamieson, D.D., St. Paul's, Glasgow; Rev. A. R. Fausset, A.M., St. Cuthbert's, York, and David Brown, D.D., Professor of Theology, Aberdeen.

A complete commentary, critical, explanatory and practical on the Old and New Testaments, 1380 pages, bound in cloth. Former Price, $7.50. The body of the work consists of notes that are concise, learned, free from verbiage and easily understood, that elucidate and explain difficult passages of Scripture, or whose import is not readily apprehended. Far in advance of the older works now in use, it is also the most practical, suggestive and scientific.

Rev. H. Clay Trumbull, Editor of the Sunday School Times: "I do not know of its equal, within its scope and cost."

Rev. J. H. Vincent, Bishop M. E. Church: "It deserves a place on the table of every Bible student."

CRITICAL AND EXPOSITORY BIBLE CYCLOPEDIA

Compiled and written by Rev. A. R. Fausset, A.M., joint author of the Jamieson, Fausset & Brown Bible Commentary. It contains 750 three-column pages; 600 illustrations. Regular Price, cloth binding, $5.00.

This great work is the result of seven years of labor by the author, contains three thousand seven hundred articles and presents a completeness, conciseness and thoroughness, such as to make it a perfect Bible Cyclopaedia. It sets forth briefly and suggestively those doctrinal and experimental truths which are contained in the Written Word itself.

J. W. Bashford, D.D., President Ohio Wesleyan University: "It is a most admirable aid. I hope ten thousand teachers will use it inside the next six months."

Rev. Dr. T. De Witt Talmage: "It is in advance of all books in that line—unique, learned, accurate and valuable."

THE COMPLETE WORKS OF FLAVIUS JOSEPHUS

The celebrated Jewish Historian, translated from the Original Greek by William Whiston, A.M. Large Octavo Cloth, 1056 pages, nearly 100 illustrations. Former Price $4.00.

In this great work is contained the History and Antiquities of the Jews, Destruction of Jerusalem by the Romans; also Dissertations concerning Jesus Christ, John the Baptist, James the Just, and the Sacrifice of Isaac.

OXFORD TEACHER'S BIBLE

This new edition of the self-pronouncing Oxford Bible is bound in American Morocco, divinity circuit, full, flexible, red under gold edges, measures 14 x 5 3/4 x 1 1/2 inches. It is a model of clear printing, large type, and contains besides the accurate text of the Authorized Version of the Old and New Testaments, about 500 pages of New Hebrew to Bible Study, which include Notes and Tables illustrative of Scriptural History and Antiquities, Chronology and Harmony of the Gospels, Dictionary of the Scriptures, Proper Names, a Biblical Index, Concordance, and a New Series of 15 colored maps. This is the Genuine Oxford Bible which formerly sold for $1.75.

EDERSHEIM'S LIFE AND TIMES OF JESUS THE MESSIAH

(2 Vols.) The Authorized American Edition. By Alfred Edersheim, M.A., Oxon., D.D., Lecturer Oxford University.

Two Volumes. Former Price, $6.00. Royal 8vo. 1,524 pages, handsomely bound in silk cloth. Gives a full account of the society, life and development—intellectual and religious—in Palestine, to serve as a frame and background for the picture of Christ. The fresh study of the text of the Gospels makes the book a historical commentary on the Four Gospels.

The Sunday School Times recommends it: "It is positively refreshing to read a life of the Saviour which is critical in the best and truest sense of the word, and is biblical at the same time."

CONCISE CYCLOPEDIA OF RELIGIOUS KNOWLEDGE

Biblical, Biographical, Theological, Historical, Geographical and Practical. Edited by Rev. E. B. Sanford, D.D., assisted by a brilliant galaxy of Biblical Scholars and Divines. Complete in one volume, nearly 1,000 pages, beautifully illustrated. Regular Price, cloth binding, $3.50.

To the seekers after knowledge this work will prove a surprising storehouse of information regarding Church History, Bible History, Bible Names, Places, Customs, Doctrines, Creeds, Denominations, The Early Church, The Story of the Reformation, the various Young People's Societies, Theologians, Scholars, Cathedrals, Churches, etc. The Golden Rule, Boston: "Knowledge is here available for which many have not known just where to turn."

SMITH'S DICTIONARY OF THE BIBLE

Edited by William Smith, LL.D., Classical Examiner of University of London. It formerly sold for $4.50.

Contains 1,014 large octavo pages printed on excellent paper, finely illustrated and handsomely and strongly bound in cloth. An indispensable aid to ministers, teachers, families, Sunday School superintendents and Bible readers generally. This is, undoubtedly, the best work of its kind in the English language.

THE LIFE AND EPISTLES OF ST. PAUL

By the Rev. W. J. Conybeare, M.A., of Cambridge, and J. S. Howson, D.D., of Liverpool. Formerly sold for $4.50.

Contains 1,014 large octavo pages, many fine illustrations, maps, charts, etc., is printed on the same quality of paper and is the same in size as Smith's Dictionary of the Bible, and bound in uniform style. There is no work that will compare with this in giving a life-like picture of the great apostle and the work which he did.

CRUDEN'S COMPLETE CONCORDANCE

By Alexander Cruden, M.A. Former Price $1.50.

Contains 756 large octavo pages, clearly printed and handsomely and strongly bound in cloth. Scripture is the best interpreter of Scripture, and, next to the Bible, no volume is of greater value to the Bible student than Cruden's Concordance.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS

I. These questions are printed Four weeks in advance so as to afford our readers an opportunity to answer them.

II. For answers to the questions which appear below, when accepted, we will allow compensation for the matter used at the rate of One Dollar a hundred words. Answers should so far as possible be limited to one hundred words.

III. Answers must be received at this office three weeks in advance of the date in which they are intended to appear.

IV. The editor reserves the right to condense accepted answers when necessary, and compensation will be based on the matter as printed.

V. Do not write inquiring if your material has been accepted. If it appears on this page, you will know that it has been accepted.

VI. We cannot return any MSS. sent to the Editor of THE MAIL-BAG—not even if stamps accompany them.

VII. Write only on one side of the sheet, and never send on the same sheet anything intended for any other department of the paper. Correspondents answering more than one question should append their name and address to each answer.

VIII. Address all communications intended for this department, Editor The Mail-Bag, The Christian Herald, Bible House, New York.

Readers are invited to forward new questions which they believe would be suitable for discussion in this department.

Letters addressed to the Mail-Bag must contain the names and addresses of the writers, not for publication, but in order that answers may be sent by mail when that mode is preferable.

These Questions will be Answered Mar. 12

1. In what sense may eunuch, bridge whist, and similar games be considered helpful or hurtful to social life in well-regulated, church-going communities?
2. Can a professed Christian, who has been blessed with marked success in business and has accumulated wealth, consistently use his money for the purpose of increasing the cost of the necessities of life?
3. Is there such a thing as "harmless flirtation"?
4. "If the sun is always shining" through the fields of ether beyond our atmosphere, and if the light we see in the planets be reflected sunlight, why is not the ether beyond us distinctly luminous by night, as well as by day?"
5. Why was it right to discriminate in the pay of the laborers in the parable in Matt. 20: 1-16?

Questions of the Week

1. Is it in accord with civilization or justice that the bandits who imprisoned Miss Stone should be permitted wholly to escape punishment? Ought a pledge, given under stress and intimidation, to such outlaws, to be honored as though given voluntarily?

It is most certainly not in accord with civilization or justice to allow such outlaws to escape punishment. If these outlaws are allowed to escape the penalty for their crime, it will tend to make other outlaws of this class more bold and avaricious, so that soon no missionary will be safe. A pledge ought always to be honored when given without any undue influence being used; but a pledge given, as in Miss Stone's case, when her life was at stake, under stress and intimidation, ought not to be honored as one given voluntarily.

A. J. HAIST.

No thoroughly civilized country will permit troops of bandits to roam at large and prey upon persons traveling through the country. The bandits who captured Miss Stone must be punished. Miss Stone is a citizen of the United States. This Government must protect its citizens abroad. Miss Stone's release should be obtained, at whatever cost. This Government should then compel Turkey to capture and punish the bandits, and to pay this nation sufficient ransom to cover all expenses connected with her release, and to pay Miss Stone for the treatment she received at the hands of Turkish subjects. Miss Stone cannot be held responsible for any pledge she may have made to the bandits.

CHARLES F. COOPER.

The imprisonment of Miss Stone by the bandits is a high crime against both civilization and justice, therefore it cannot be in accord with either of these, if they are permitted to escape just punishment. As to the pledge, it ought to be honored, for such is the solemnity of a pledge, and such the importance of its inviolable sanctity being preserved, that it is better to suffer injustice than that a pledge should be broken. The Bible pronounces the man blessed who "sweareth to his own hurt and changes not." (Ps. 15: 4). When the Israelites conquered Canaan the Gibeonites, who dwelt in the land, sent delegates to Joshua, pretending that they were from a far country; and on that ground Joshua made a league with them, and the princes of the congregation swore unto them. But when the deception was discovered the people clamored for their extermination. But the princes said unto all the congregation, "We have sworn unto them by the Lord God of Israel; now therefore, we may not touch them." (II. Sam. 21: 1). If a pledge obtained by deceit is binding, equally so is one obtained by threat.

R. E. HOUGH.

A pledge given under stress and intimidation to such outlaws by Christian people, should be honored and kept just as though it had been given to them voluntarily—for should the Christians break their pledge with them, they would set the bandits and others a bad example and also disobey the Scripture, which says: "He that sweareth to his own hurt and changeth not shall abide in the tabernacle, or house of the Lord." Besides, the Scriptures forbid us from doing evil that good may come of it.

G. H. ROGERS.

The double question is a square proposition in logic, for if it be admitted that to permit the bandits to escape punishment would not be in accord with civilization or justice, then any people or government which facilitates that escape from punishment, would be abetting an outrage on justice and civilization. But the divine law, which overrules the human, here steps in with the command: "Forgive your enemies." "He that sweareth to his own hurt and changeth not," says the Psalmist, describing the character of the man whom God loves. "Better that thou shouldst not vow, than that thou shouldst vow and not consciousness of need that leads one to seek the grace of God in Jesus Christ. The publican who prayed, "God be merciful to me a sinner," is a good illustration of those "poor in spirit," whose is the kingdom of heaven.

3. What kind of preaching is best suited to the spiritual needs of the average congregation, as being adapted to the development of sturdy Christian character?

In the first place, a congregation must know of what a sturdy Christian character consists. The preacher in his sermons should fully define and thoroughly illustrate what constitutes a Christian life. The average congregation is in its infancy in spiritual matters. The newly-converted Christian does not understand this new world into which he has just been born—the spiritual world. He needs instruction. He needs explanation. He needs experience. The pastor, who has already lived in this spiritual world, should unfold its mysteries before his congregation. He should make plain each Christian's duty in this life. They must know what to do, before they can be expected to do it. The pastor should be a teacher in this spiritual school—the Church. The members—his pupils. The pastor should study Christ as the great example of a spiritual life. In the second place, the preacher should point out the spiritual weaknesses of his flock. He should study the spiritual need of each Cuba, in part, said: "I ask the Congress to authorize... the President to take measures... bringing about an immediate termination of hostilities... and to secure... the establishment of a stable government." The message was referred in both Houses to their respective committees on foreign affairs, who declared: "That the people of Cuba are, and of right ought to be, free and independent... that the government of Spain at once relinquish its authority... in Cuba; that the United States hereby disclaims any... intention to exercise sovereignty... over said island, except for the pacification thereof, and asserts its determination, when that is accomplished, to leave the government and control of the island to its people." This expresses things plainly. As hostilities have ceased, "a stable government" ought to be established by the United States, and when this is done, leave the full control of the island to its people, with the full assurance from the United States, that, in case any interference is made by any country, with Cuba, the United States will protect it until it is strong enough to protect itself.

A. E. ANDERSON.

5. To what extent, if any, is the study of prophecy discredited or discouraged by predictions based on the movements of the planets, of approaching calamities or the end of this dispensation?

Such predictions ought not to discourage any one from studying the prophecies, but there is only too much reason to fear that they do. If the men who make those predictions would limit them strictly to the celestial phenomena, and the physical results that they expect, not much mischief would be done. As time passes, and the world is not burnt up, nor drawn from its orbit, nor hurt in any way, by the conjunction of planet from which evil was expected, the prophet alone would be discredited; but they usually attempt to prove that the prophecies of Daniel and Revelation coincide with the astronomical predictions and then they impress people who know little of science, but have great reverence for the Bible. Such believers are apt, when the predictions do not come true, to feel that the Bible prophecies have failed, and so their faith is shaken. Others, who notice the excesses and the follies which have resulted from ignorant belief in the predictions of approaching calamities, have refrained from earnestly studying the prophecies of the Bible, or giving them the attention they deserve.

Miscellaneous Questions

S. R. A., Vesta, Minn. My husband left the Catholic Church before our marriage. He did not become a Protestant, and now he is wholly in different to religion and does not like to have me go to church either. What ought I to do? I feel that in quitting his church for my sake he has made me in some degree responsible for his soul.

You should by all means plead continually with God for his salvation. You should lead a life so consistent, so faithful and so holy that he will respect the religion that gives you the power to be so lovable. Do not weary him with argument, but let him see that it will please you to have him accompany you to church. Love is the strongest power in the world and your love may win him to Christ. Your chief reliance, however, must be on the Holy Spirit, which in answer to your earnest prayer may come upon him.

C. C. S., Passaic, N. J. If Christ had a divine nature, how could he be tempted? Could the divine nature sin?

The union of the two natures in Christ is a mystery the theologians have never been able to explain. There are, however, abundant and cogent reasons for believing that he was divinity in human form. In taking on human nature, he took it with its frailties and liabilities. We cannot suppose that the temptation was other than genuine. It is not conceivable that the Father would have subjected him to mere farce. The grandeur of his resistance showed that the temptation was real.

2. What is the true meaning or definition of the phrase "poor in spirit," as it occurs in the Beatitudes?

Poor in spirit denotes, not circumstances, but inward character; not a condition of life, but a state and temper of mind. To be beaten utterly out of conceit with one's own strength, goodness, and wisdom; to feel that apart from God's grace we are nothing, can do nothing. It is he who feels most poignantly his need of all, who will most heartily hail the promise of the free gift of all. Our Saviour says, we are happy, blessed, in proportion as we feel our own want, our own emptiness, in things spiritual. The more we are poor, the more we are rich. This poverty of spirit being the condition of every blessing, therefore to it is attached the promise of the kingdom of heaven, which is inclusive of all blessings.

A. H. BARROWS.

The word for "poor" means utter destitution, and "in spirit" defines the sphere of destitution. Some interpret this, "destitute of the wealth of learning and intellectual culture which the schools offered, because men of this class readily gave themselves up to Christ's teaching, and proved themselves fitted to lay hold of the heavenly treasure." Others make the idea more inward and ethical, that is, destitute of spiritual blessings. This is better. But shall we read, "poor in the spirit," that is, poor in spiritual treasures, or "poor in their spirit," that is, conscious of their spiritual need? There is no virtue in poverty. The church at Laodicea was "poor, and blind, and naked," but was rebuked by Christ. They thought they were rich and had need of nothing. So it is better to read, conscious of their spiritual need. It is this con-individual member. He must know their faults before he can preach their correction. Not all preaching can be done from the pulpit. Some members must have individual sermons. It is the pastor's duty to know these members. He is responsible for their spiritual food. He is the commissary of subsistence in this spiritual army—the Church.

C. F. C.

The same kind of preaching is needed now that has ever been needed since apostolic times. Peter's sermon on the day of Pentecost is still, in its main features, a good model. The main features of that sermon were, that it brought home to the conscience a conviction of sin, and then showed the way of forgiveness and redemption. The result was a large accession to the Church of genuine believers. And although those conversions were sudden, the new converts did not fall away. We read that "they continued steadfastly in the apostles' doctrine and fellowship, and in breaking of bread and of prayers." Now, human nature has not changed since that time. The same kind of preaching in the main is needed still. It is not literature, or science, or current events, or sensationalism, that will accomplish Pentecostal effects. Of course, there will be variety in sermons, varying with men's different talents and temperament; but the great facts of sin and salvation must be presented, with an humble reliance on the Divine Spirit to make the truth effectual.

The DeWitt Moore Gospel Association and its Work Among the Laboring Classes—A Great Social Hive

It is somewhat surprising, in this age of increased Christian activities, when our live churches are outstripping each other in their social, philanthropic and benevolent work, that there should still be found some doubting Thomases to cavil at and criticise such work as a departure from Gospel standards and an injury to the cause of Christianity generally. These critics would seem to overlook the fact that the ministry of Jesus—the divine pattern for all others—was very largely of this character. He went about doing good; he fed the hungry, consoled the depressed, healed the sick and cheered and brightened all with whom he came into contact. He asked them to believe on Him, if for no other reason, then for the very work's sake." He lived among the poor, and his Judean ministry gave to the lower ranks of society everywhere the first real uplift they had ever received. Our churches and church societies, in the new development involved in institutional work, are faithfully following his example. Their ministry to the sick, and to those in prison; their helping hand held out to the poor, or to those who have been cruelly crowded to the wall in the battle of life; their industrial work and training classes; their various aids to social betterment, and the brightening of the home life of tenement dwellers—all are in the same direction and are, in very many instances, the most effective way of preaching the Gospel.

In 1875, a small band of godly men and women connected with the Second Reform Church, Philadelphia (of which Rev. Dr. Talmage was once pastor), met and organized the DeWitt Moore Mission. It was the outcome of a notable revival in the church. In the party were Mrs. Emily H. Thorne, Mrs. Bond, Misses Fisher, Moore and Newcomer, and Messrs. Harry Taylor, Thomas H. Marston, and J. H. Junyon. From that early effort there grew the DeWitt Moore Gospel Association, a chartered institution. Several of the founders are still actively engaged in Christian work and Mr. Taylor is a regularly ordained pastor. During the mill strike of 1893, when thousands of Kensington millhands were thrown idle, the Association collected and distributed food and other necessities, by these means, saving hundreds of families from starvation.

Recently the People's Church, No. 2032 Germantown avenue, Philadelphia, which was founded under the auspices of the DeWitt Moore Gospel Association and of which Rev. Mr. Taylor is pastor, made a new departure in religious work. It has so grown and expanded in Christian activities, that it may be truly said to touch almost every field occupied by the modern institutional church. These are its branches:

Germantown Door of Hope, a home for all questions, 140 Queen street, Germantown.

School of Domestic Science, 2032 Germantown avenue, a school for the practical teaching of housework to working girls and women of Kensington, with classes for cooking, dressmaking and millinery.

A Saving Fund, in which $5.00 is saved each week, 10 cents per week. Money is loaned out at interest and the whole proceeds divided annually.

A Cheap Coal Fund, in which the poor are enabled to buy their fuel two-thirds cheaper than if purchased at retail.

A Free Medical Dispensary is projected. The Association will shortly erect a large building, in which the Dispensary can be conducted and free of charge.

Although several of the new departments have not been opened they are already a tremendous success. The School of Domestic Science, Cooking, Dressmaking and Millinery branches, as well as the others, are under the care of thoroughly trained instructors, and women, come in large numbers to witness the skill which the pupils display, thereby in the work. Several photographs specially taken for THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, and which are reproduced on this page, furnish some idea of the character and extent of this excellent work. When completed, the new Mission House will represent an entire new system. It is an extension of Mr. Taylor's study of conditions among the poorer classes in London, Manchester and Liverpool, as well as in times at home. It will include some of the best features of the mission in the London East-end districts and will be soon known to all.

The building will contain a gymnasium, a large dining hall and gymnasium for men, bath for women, a model kitchen and a large entertainment room. Immediately above will be the auditorium, seating 500, and rooms for Bible Union and other classes. The second floor will contain a reception and music room, library, apartment room, while the third and fourth floors will be devoted to reading, sewing, etc. The roof garden will be used for both religious and secular work, and will be an important feature of the mission house. As a whole, the Mission will be a large, simple, educational and industrial home on Gospel lines, and a most valuable help to the working classes and the deserving poor of that section of Philadelphia. A whole new system of religious and social life, the spiritual and material uplift.

Ever since its organization, the work of the DeWitt Moore Association has been consecrated by prayer and divinely guided at every step. It has already been made a mission to thousands of lives, and in the large hall, upon which it is now erecting its new home, will undoubtedly be made a mission to many more. It is mainly supported by the working people themselves, but is underwritten by the new Mission building. It is a most timely measure, the practical cooperation of all are in harmony with these efforts for the social and industrial betterment of the condition of the poor and the uplifting and brightening of a multitude of human lives.

Any reader who desires to know more of the work of the DeWitt Moore Mission, may write Mr. John P. Barclay, Treasurer, DeWitt Moore Mission, 2032 Germantown avenue, Philadelphia, Pa., or Harry Taylor, 3215 Locust street, Philadelphia, Pa.

A GLORIOUS SUNSET

TEXT—Zechariah 14: 7:

"At eventime it shall be light"

WHILE "night," in all languages, is the symbol for gloom and suffering, it is often really cheerful, bright, and impressive. I speak not of such nights as come down with no star pouring light from above, or silvered wave tossing up light from beneath—murky, hurtling, portentous, but such as you often see when the pomp and magnificence of heaven turn out on night-parade; and it seems as though the song which the morning stars began so long ago were chiming yet among the constellations, and the sons of God were shouting for joy. Such nights the sailor blesses from the fore-castle, and the trapper on vast prairie, and the belated traveler by the roadside, and the soldier from the tent, earthly hosts gazing upon heavenly, and shepherds guarding their flocks afield, while angel hands above them set the silver bells a ringing: "Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace; good will toward men."

What a solemn and glorious thing is night in the wilderness! Night among the mountains! Night on the ocean! Fragrant night among tropical groves! Flashing night amid arctic severities! Calm night on Roman Campagna! Awful night among the Cordilleras! Glorious night mid sea after a tempest! Thank God for the night! The moon and the stars which rule it are lighthouses on the coast, towards which I hope we are all sailing, and blind mariners are we if, with so many beaming, burning, flaming glories to guide us, we cannot find our way into the harbor.

My text may well suggest that, as the natural evening is often luminous, so it shall be light in the evening of our sorrows—of old age—of the world's history—of the Christian life. "At eventime it shall be light."

In the Shadow of Sorrow

This prophecy will be fulfilled in the evening of Christian sorrow. For a long time it is broad daylight. The sun rides high. Innumerable activities go ahead with a thousand feet, and work with a thousand arms, and the pickaxe struck a mine, and the battery made a discovery, and the investment yielded its twenty per cent., and the book came to its twentieth edition, and the farm quadrupled in value, and sudden fortune hoisted to high position, and children were praised, and friends without number swarmed into the family hive, and prosperity sang in the music and stepped in the dance, and glowed in the wine, and ate at the banquet, and all the gods of music and ease and gratification gathered around this Jupiter holding in his hands so many thunderbolts of power. But every sun must set, and the brightest day must have its twilight. Suddenly the sky was overcast. The fountain dried up. The song hushed. The wolf broke into the family fold and carried off the best lamb. A deep howl of woe came crashing down through the joyous symphonies. At one rough twang of the hand of disaster the harpstrings all broke. Down went the strong business firm! Away went long-established credit! Up flew a flock of calamities! The new book would not sell! A patent could not be secured for the invention. Stocks sank like lead. The insurance company exploded. "How much," says the sheriff, "will you bid for this piano?" "How much for this library?" "How much for this family picture?" "How much? Will you let it go at less than half-price? Going—going—gone!" Will the grace of God hold one up in such circumstances? What have become of the great multitude of God's children who have been pounded of the flail, and crushed under the wheel, and trampled under the hoof? Did they lie down in the dust, weeping, wailing and gnashing their teeth? Did they, when they were afflicted like Job, curse God, and want to die? When the rod of fatherly chastisement struck them, did they strike back? Because they found one bitter cup on the table of God's supply, did they upset the whole table? Did they kneel down at their empty money vault and say, "All my treasures are gone?" Did they stand by the grave of their dead, saying, "There never will be a resurrection?"

Did they bemoan their thwarted plans and say, "The stocks are down—would God I were dead?" Did the night of their disaster come upon them moonless, starless, dank, and howling, smothering and choking their life out? No! No! At eventime it was light. The swift promises overtook them. The eternal constellations, from their circuit about God's throne, poured down an infinite lustre. Under their shining the billows of trouble took on crests, and plumes of gold, and jasper, and amethyst and flame. All the trees of life rustled in the midsummer air of God's love. The night-blooming assurances of Christ's sympathy filled all the atmosphere with heaven. The soul at every step seemed to start up from its feet bright-winged joys, warbling heavenward. "It is good that I have been afflicted," cried David. "The Lord gave, and the Lord hath taken away," exclaims Job. "Sorrowful, yet always rejoicing," says St. Paul. "And God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes," exclaims John, in apocalyptic vision. At eventime it was light. Light from the cross! Light from the promises! Light from the throne! Streaming, joyous, outgushing, everlasting light!

In the Evening of Life

Again, the text shall find fulfilment in the time of old age. It is a grand thing to be young—to have the sight clear, and the hearing acute, and the step elastic, and all our pulses marching on to the drumming of a stout heart. Mid-life and old age will be denied many of us, but youth—we all know what that is. Those wrinkles were not always on your brow. That snow was not always on your head. That brawny muscle did not always bunch your arm. You have not always worn spectacles. Grave and dignified as you now are, you once went coasting down the hillside, or threw off your hat for the race, or sent the ball flying skyhigh. But youth will not always last. It stays only long enough to give us exuberant spirits, and broad shoulders for burden-carrying, and an arm with which to battle our way through difficulties. Life's path, if you follow it long enough, will come under frowning crag and cross trembling causeway. Blessed old age, if you let it come naturally. You cannot hide it. You may try to cover the wrinkles, but you cannot cover the wrinkles. If the time has come for you to be old, be not ashamed to be old. The grandest things in all the universe are old. Old mountains, old rivers, old seas, old stars, and an old eternity. Then do not be ashamed to be old, unless you are older than the mountains, and older than the stars.

How men and women will lie! They say they are forty, but they are sixty. They say they are twenty, but they are thirty. They say they are sixty, but they are eighty. Glorious old age, if found in the way of righteousness! How beautiful the old age of Jacob, leaning on the top of his staff; of John Quincy Adams, falling with the harness on; of Washington Irving, sitting pen in hand, amid the scenes himself had made classical; of John Angell James, to the last proclaiming the Gospel to the masses of Birmingham; of Theodore Frelinghuysen, down to feebleness and emaciation devoting his illustrious faculties to the kingdom of God. At eventime it was light!

See that you do honor to the aged. A philosopher stood at the corner of the street day after day, saying to the passers-by, "You will be an old man; you will be an old man." "You will be an old woman; you will be an old woman." People thought that he was crazy. I do not think that he was. Smooth the way for that mother's feet; they have not many more steps to take. Steady those tottering limbs;

They Will Soon be at Rest

Plough not up that face with any more wrinkles; trouble and care have marked it full enough. Thrust no thorn into that old heart; it will soon cease to beat. "The eye that mocketh its father, and refuseth to obey its mother, the ravens of the valley shall pick it out, and the young eagles shall eat it." The bright morning and hot noonday of life have passed with many. It is four o'clock! five o'clock! six o'clock! The shadows fall longer and thicker, and faster. Seven o'clock! eight o'clock! The sun has dipped below the horizon; the warmth has gone out of the air. Nine o'clock! ten o'clock! The heavy dews are falling; the activities of life's day are all hushed; it is time to go to bed. Eleven o'clock! twelve o'clock! The patriarch sleeps, the blessed sleep, the cool sleep, the long sleep. Heaven's messengers of light have kindled bonfires of victory all over the heavens. At eventime it is light. LIGHT!

Again. My text shall find fulfilment in the latter day of the Church. Only a few missionaries, a few churches, a few good men, compared with the institutions leprous and putrid. It is early yet in the history of every thing good. Civilization and Christianity are just getting out of the cradle. The light of martyr-stakes, flashing all up and down the sky, is but the flaming of the morning; but when the evening of the world shall come, glory to God's conquering truth, it shall be light. War's sword clanging back in the scabbard; intemperance buried under ten thousand broken decanters; the world's impurity turning its brow heavenward for the benediction, "Blessed are the pure in heart;" the last vestige of selfishness submerged in heaven-descending charities and China worshipping Dr. Abel's Saviour; all India believing in Henry Martyn's Bible; aboriginal superstition acknowledging David Brainerd's piety; human bondage delivered through Thomas Clarkson's Christianity; vagrancy coming back from its polluting at the call of Elizabeth Fry's Redeemer; the mountains coming down; the valleys going up: "holiness" scribed on horse's bell, and silkworm's thread, and brown-thrasher's wing, and shell's tinge, and manufacturer's shuttle, and chemist's laboratory, and king's sceptre, and nation's Magna Charta. Not a hospital for there are no wounds; not an asylum, for there are no orphans; not a prison, for there are no criminals; not an almshouse, for there are no paupers; not a tear for there are no sorrows. The long dirge of earth lamentation has ended in the triumphal march of deemed empires, the forests harping it on vine-strut branches, the water chanting it among the gorges, and thunders drumming it among the hills, the ocean giving it forth with its organs, trade-winds touching the keel and Euroclydon's foot on the pedal. I want to see John Howard when the last prisoner is reformed; I want to see Florence Nightingale when the last sabre wound has stopped hurting; I want to see William Penn when the last Indian has been civilized; I want to see John Huss when the last flame of persecution has been extinguished; I want to see John Bunyan after the last pilgrim has come to the gate of the celestial city; above all, I want to see Jesus after the last saint has left his throne, and has begun to sing his triumph.

Peace After Sunset

You have watched the calmness and the glory of the evening hour. The laborers have come from the field. The heavens are glowing with an indescribable effulgence, as though the sun in departing had forgotten to shut the gate after it. All the beauty of cloud and leucism in the lake. For a star in the sky, a star in the water; heaven above, and heaven beneath. Not a leaf rustling, or a bee humming, or a grasshopper chirping. Silence in the meadow; silence among the hills. The bright and beautiful shall be the evening of the world. The heats of earthly conflict are cool. The glory of heaven fills all the scene with love, joy, and peace. At eventime it is light! LIGHT!

Finally, my text shall find fulfilment at the end of the Christian's life. You know how short a winter's day it is and how little work you can do. Now, my friends, life is a short winter's day. The sun rises at eight and sets at four. The birth-angel and the death-angel fly only a little way apart. Baptism and burial are near together. With one hand the mother rocks the cradle, and with the other she touches a grave.

I went into the house of one of my parishioners on Thanksgiving day. The little child of the household was bright and glad, and with it I bounded up and down the hall. Christmas day came, and the light of that household had perished. We stood, with black book, reading over the grave, "Ashes to ashes, dust to dust."

But I hurl away this darkness. I cannot have you weep. Thanks be unto God, who giveth us the victory at eventime it shall be light! I have seen many Christians die. I never saw any of them die in darkness. What if the billows of death do rise above our girdle who does not love to bathe? What though other lights do go out in the blast, what do we want of them when all the gates of glory swing open before us, and from a myriad voices, a myriad harps, a myriad thrones, a myriad palaces, there dash upon us "Hosannah! Hosannah!" "Throw back the shutters and let the sun in," said dying Scoville McCullum, one of my Sabbath School boys. "Throw back the shutters and let the sun in." You can see Paul putting on robes and wings of ascension as he exclaims: "I have fought the good fight; I have finished my course; I have kept the faith."

Hugh McKail went to one side of the scaffold of martyrdom and cried:

"Farewell Sun, Moon and Stars!

farewell all earthly delights!" Then went to the other side of the scaffold and cried: "Welcome, God and Father! Welcome, sweet Jesus Christ, the Mediator of the covenant! Welcome death! Welcome glory!" A minister of Christ, in Philadelphia, dying, said in his last moments: "I move into the light!" They did not go down doubting, and fearing, and shivering, but their battle cry rang through all the caverns of the sepulchre, and was echoed back from all the thrones of heaven: "O death! where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory?" Sing, my soul, of joys to come.

I saw a beautiful being wandering up and down the earth. She touched the aged, and they became young. She touched the poor, and they became rich. I said: "Who is this beautiful being wandering up and down the earth?" They told me that her name was Death. What a strange thrill of joy when the palsied Christian

A LAYMAN OF ELOQUENT LIPS AND LIFE * THE ARREST OF STEPHEN

INTERNATIONAL SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON FOR FEB. 23
ACTS 6: 7-15

By Dr. and Mrs. Wilbur F. Crafts

GOLDEN TEXT: "FEAR NOT THEM WHICH KILL THE BODY,
BUT ARE NOT ABLE TO KILL THE SOUL." MATT. 10: 28

The Lesson Story

WHAT great heroes we make out of generals who capture cities, and of admirals who destroy the fleets of enemies! We have God's Word for it that there are even greater heroes than these: "He that is slow to anger is better than the mighty, and he that ruleth his spirit, than he that taketh a city" (Prov. 16: 32). We have such a hero as this in Stephen. Let us give him his title: "Deacon Stephen." He was brought into battle when tongues were the weapons. The mouth is an arsenal, its teeth are "spears," its tongue is a "sword," and its words are sometimes bitter and poisoned "arrows." Deacon Stephen found all this to be true when he tried to talk to the people about Jesus being the Son of God, and their Saviour. There were men who did not love Jesus, and who would not love him; who came when Stephen was talking and answered him back, and tried to make the people think that Stephen was not telling the truth, but lies. But Stephen spoke so wisely, God being his helper, that the men had to go away in shame. We can even now almost seem to hear the people laughing at them, and shaking their heads. But they did not give up the battle, they looked about to secure "reinforcements." That is what generals do when they see they are being defeated. Those enemies of Stephen went to some of the wisest men among the Jews, the elders and the scribes, and with the poisoned arrows of their words, they made them think that Stephen was bringing dishonor upon the Jewish religion. The "bullets" they used in the battle were money which they paid men to tell lies to the elders and scribes, saying that they had heard Stephen speak words against their great leader and law-giver, Moses. Then Stephen was arrested and brought into the Sanhedrin, the High Priest's court that we have been hearing so much about in other lessons.

Have you ever seen anybody sharpen a knife or an ax before using it? We call that "whetting." Well, those false witnesses whetted their tongues like a sword, and bent their bows to shoot their arrows of bitter words. What did Stephen while they were speaking? He listened. He did not fire back any bitter words; there was not even a flash of fire from his eyes, for we are told in God's Book that his face was as the face of an angel. What a hero he was showing himself to be in thus controlling his spirit! When the High Priest said to him, "Are these things so?" it gave to Stephen the opportunity to open fire on his accusers. Did he do it?

Do you know what a flag of truce is? It is a white flag that causes fighting to cease for a time until peace can be talked about. The words which Stephen spoke were like a flag of truce, and he waved it long, for he had a long story to tell about how the Jewish people had been greatly honored of God in having Abraham for their father, and Isaac and Jacob and Joseph and Moses for their wise leaders, and also King David and King Solomon. The wise men in the court must have been pleased to hear Stephen speak such words. But when he added the name of Jesus, they were ready to battle with their tongues, and Stephen saw that he must put away the truce of words and do battle with the sword of his tongue. Even then, he had the face of an angel—the Avenging Angel, who goes forth with fire at the bidding of the Lord. Stephen spoke true words to them, and without the bitterness of anger, when he told them that they had caused the death of Jesus the Son of God, and that they themselves had brought the greatest dishonor upon the Jewish religion. Did they of the court control their spirits and prove themselves heroes? Not much; there was a broadside attack of spears, for we are told that they "gnashed upon Stephen with their teeth."

Illustration and Application

There arose a murmuring (Acts 6: 1). A church quarrel so soon after Pentecost! Yes, and good Christians on both sides! This fact ought to steady us when a church quarrel comes on in these days. Many a young Christian has almost lost faith in Christianity when he has seen church people, who yesterday called each other "brothers" and "sisters," calling each other "liars" and "hypocrites." Such quarreling is not Christian, but those who so quarrel may be Christians still, only their trolleys are off, and the live wires that ought to be making things go are hissing in the road. They will be all right again presently, with something gained out of their childish pother, perhaps, as in the case we are studying. One who is surprised and shocked almost into infidelity by a church quarrel, exclaims: "Christian brothers and sisters, who pretend to love each other, quarreling! Did anybody ever see the like?" Everybody has seen the like among blood brothers in many homes, who quarrel often, and love all the while. And in the early church, even the apostles had some quarrels. Peter and Paul, for instance, the greatest of all, contended passionately over contrary convictions of duty. The Epistles give us glimpses of church quarrels, for example, at Corinth, where they had boisterous disputes at prayer and conference meetings. This lesson carries us back to the first quarrel in the Christian Church, due to the charge by the Hellenists, who were half Jew and half Greek, that their widows did not get so much as the Jewish widows in the distribution of the church benevolence. The apostles were surely guiltless of any such intention, for, as they gave their time mostly to preaching and healing, they were liable to such mistakes in administering the finances, and so they accepted the criticism as a good ground for organizing a new department of church finance, which was to be managed by laymen, to be known as deacons. Thus they initiated church organization and, unconsciously, denominationalism also, which would grow out of efforts to imitate the apostolic churches, that Congregationalists and Baptists would regard as independent democracies, while Episcopalians and Methodists would regard them as joined in an Episcopacy, and Presbyterians as in presbyterial union. Deacons are only custodians of the poor fund in Presbyterian churches. In Congregational churches they are the chief lay officers, expected to aid in word as well as benevolence. In Methodist churches, deacons are preachers on trial, following Stephen and Philip in preaching, but with no financial duties. About these differences of church government and others of doctrine, good men quarreled bitterly in the days of Luther and Wesley, wasting energy that might have been put to better use, but illustrating again that we should not, because of a church quarrel, lose faith in God or in Christianity. Toplady and Charles Wesley contended bitterly about God's foreordinations and man's free will, as if only one, not both, could be true. In parting, they agreed, it is said, to put their experience of salvation, as distinguished from their philosophy, into hymns. The result was Wesley's

Jesus, lover of my soul,
Let me to thy bosom fly,
and Toplady's
Rock of ages, cleft for me,
Let me hide myself in thee,
the two greatest hymns and most alike.

"THEY CAME UPON HIM, AND CAUGHT HIM, AND BROUGHT HIM TO THE COUNCIL"

More than one deadly engagement has taken place between different squadrons of the same army and between ships of the same navy. In the night, one British ship mistook another British ship for a foe. Several were wounded, and both ships were much damaged. When the day broke, each ship was surprised to see the British flag upon the other. They saluted, and there was mutual regret over the needless conflict. Such have been the sectarian conflicts of the past, which, in the clearer light of to-day, we regret and renounce. And yet, out of these conflicts, as out of that of our lesson, God has brought some betterments for his Church.

There is suggestiveness in the mistake of the bishop who opened his address to a clerical and lay audience with the words: "Lerical and clay brethren." God remembers that we are dust, but we sometimes fail to allow for the human element in the Church, and so are too much disturbed by controversy which is less to be feared than a comatose indifference. Let us, by all means, avoid quarreling everywhere, but let us also remember to be "first pure, then peaceable."

Here it is appropriate to note that church forms tend to fossilize, and care needs to be taken in every case to keep a "spirit in the wheels." A recent despatch relates that geologists have recently discovered fossils of tropical fruits in the coal of arctic Spitzbergen, a proof that what is now a frigid land, was once radiant with tropical plants and flowers. So the church forms that almost freeze us in some cold churches, were once the warm expression of spiritual life. We need, also, to beware lest our secret prayers become fossil flowers with no fragrant incense of real gratitude and devotion.

Look ye out among you seven men (Acts 6: 3). Whom they set before the apostles. Hitherto the only officers in the Church had been apostles. They did not monopolize preaching. All disciples of Christ had "gone everywhere preaching the Word." There is nothing in the Bible to censure any disciple from giving, when there is opportunity, so testimony as he is able to give. Two of those first deacons appointed, Stephen and Philip, were lay evangelists, Moodys of their time. They did not, like too many laymen to-day, think they had done their whole duty when they had administered the church finances. Philip had a great revival in Samaria. Four of his daughters also "prophesied," that they told the Gospel story as missionary women do to-day. It will be a timely fact to consider in connection with this lesson, that the Methodist Episcopal Church has just admitted laymen, including women, to an equal part with preachers in the government of the church. Whatever may be thought of this act, few will question that we ought to have more lay households like Philip's in our churches.

Stephen, a man full of faith and of the Holy Spirit. He we have the secret of Stephen's glorious history. The spirit of God gave him courage to preach Christ to his crucifiers. When the arrested him, that Spirit gave him breadth of view that enabled him to see and show that God's plan was not merely to deliver the Jews from oppression, but to save the world from sin. Arrested for so preaching, he made his trial the first great missionary speech of the Christian Church. He showed that Abraham was brought out of an idolatrous heathen home, and that the Jews should send the Gospel to such homes all over the world. The Spirit of Christ shone through his face, as on the Mount of Transfiguration, and those who were eager to answer his words were silent at this unanswerable outshining of his life. "All the

were in the Council, steadfastly looking upon him, beheld his face as had been the face of an angel." His life spoke more persuasively than his lips, as it will in the case of every spirit-filled life. Saying, doing, being, the greatest of all is BEING CHRISTLIKE.

Stephen's shining face reminds us of the story of a brakeman on a train who hung up his lantern at one end of his car. "Keep your lantern by you," said the conductor; "if anything should happen you may be at one end of the car and your lantern at the other." Thereafter it was ever upon his arm. Those who hang up their religion in the church, or leave it at the home altar, need to be reminded as they go to court, or camp, or caucus, to business or to pleasure, "keep your lantern by you." Let your light shine in your life, especially when among the foes of Christ.

An infidel editor, housed in a country hotel in the same room with a Christian lawyer and another stranger, poured out his disbelief in Christianity and his contempt for its doctrines, endeavoring to draw out the lawyer, who made but brief replies. At length the lawyer said it was time to retire, and withdrawing quietly to his own bed, he knelt in silent prayer. An instant hush fell on the scene. As Stephen's life shining out in his face was more impressive than his argument, so this simple act of courageous faithfulness silenced for that night, perhaps forever, the infidel's attack.

Stephen's dauntless courage calls up illustratively the recent experiments of Professor Lombard, of Ann Arbor, to prove that the soul is in the backbone.

A frog's brain was removed, and an hour later the body was touched with acetic acid, whereupon the frog kicked fiercely to brush it away, as it did again after twenty-four hours. These motions the professor calls "reason movements." Whether they prove that the soul is all in the backbone or not, they put new and striking emphasis on moral "backbone," as one of the noblest elements of the soul.

"Show your colors" is the proverb of courage. One of our Sunday School boys in Dover, having risen in meeting one evening to show he had decided to become a Christian, was met the next day as he entered the high school yard by a group of boys that had planned to tease him out of his new purpose. "So you've become a Christian, eh?" said one of them with a sneer. "Yes, boys, and I'm not ashamed of it," was the reply, spoken without blinking or hesitation. The battle was won in a single shot, and no more sneers were spoken. What Harvard expects from those who wear its colors, expresses also what it is to show our colors as Christians:

Farewell be thy destinies onward and bright!
To thy children the lesson still give,
With freedom to think, and with patience to bear,
And for right ever bravely to live.
Let not moss-covered error moor thee at its side,
As the world on truth's current glides by;
Be the herald of light, and the bearer of love,
Till the stock of the Puritans die.

He shall be like a tree. Stephen reminds us of that rugged tree, the Monterey cypress, that grows in Southern California on a wild, rocky coast, with frowning bluffs. It is the only tree that is able to grow in such a place, and is said to be found nowhere else. So grew the prophets and apostles and teachers of the days of bigotry, their roots taking hold on God, growing in spite of the storms of persecution. Let us learn the secret of their rugged courage and dare to stand for God and man where it is hard to stand.

Our Relief Work and its Results

HOW SHENSI WAS SUCCORED!

Helping the Starving Crowds

FRANCIS H. NICHOLS

IN his fifth letter from the Chinese famine field, Mr. Francis H. Nichols, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Commissioner, gives a graphic account of our famine relief work at Sian, the capital of Shensi:

SIAN, PROVINCE OF SHENSI, Nov. 20, 1901.

Shensi is desolate. More than two and one-half millions of men, women and children, thirty per cent of the population of the entire province have died of hunger or the diseases which followed it. In the centres of distress, the survivors have sold everything, from the roofs of their houses to their children, in order to buy food. Although just now there is a rift in the famine cloud, and the harvest in three years has been gathered, many fields are still withered and a great many of the tillers of the soil are homeless.

Shensi is the oldest province in China. To apply the superlative of age to anything in this empire is to refer to a period in the sunrise of time. Ask any Chinaman when the history of Shensi began, and he will reply, "Soon after the world was made." The principal city of Shensi is Sian, capital of the province. Before the famine began, the population of Sian was estimated at three quarters of a million. No one who visits it can fail to be impressed with its importance as a business centre. It is the terminus of the caravan route from Peking on the north, and Hankow on the south. Besides several banks it has many large shops, where all sorts of merchandise are sold. Among their stocks can be found a very large assortment of foreign goods, two of the principal staples being American cotton goods and kerosene oil.

The province of Shensi is divided into twenty-two counties or "Shens." Their combined population was 8,750,000. Shensi is isolated. It has to depend for what it eats entirely upon its own fields. It is impossible to bring enough food from without to the people of the province to feed them. But Shensi is, as a rule, a productive province, and in ordinarily good seasons there is enough and to spare for every one. On the slopes of the Shensi Mountains, it is hard to find a square foot from base to summit which is not covered with terraces under cultivation. The chief article of food is wheat, and a system of fertilizing, the land is made to yield three crops of it every year. Millet and buck-wheat are also products of the terraces, and in the bottom lands of the rivers the rice is raised. From the autumn of 1898 until June, 1901, no rain fell in sixty-three of the seventy-two counties. The spring of 1901 marked the beginning of the famine, for the first year its full rigor was not felt; but as season after season went by, and all no rain, the universal suffering began. To buy food, the farmers first sold the scanty furniture of their homes, then their horses, oxen and cows, the thatched roofs of their homes, and lastly, their children. Some, who had a little money, emigrated to other provinces. Some starved in their villages and more flocked into Sian and the larger towns, and died there. The horror of the famine continued until its culmination was reached in March and April, 1901. Chinese statistics show that the ratio of deaths to the entire population was almost one in three. Out of a population of eight and three quarter millions, more than two and one-half millions perished. Although death followed in the wake of the famine from its beginning, by far the greatest mortality was nearly all during the twelve months which ended with the spring of 1901. The country was practically uninhabited. The cities were crowded with thousands of starving refugees crying for food. Fearing being thus the inevitable victims of the famine, the people of Sian were driven to desperate measures. They sold their children, their wives, their property, and tried to maintain life. They built a wall of straw and mud around the city, and tried to maintain life. They built a wall of straw and mud around the city, and tried to maintain life. They built a wall of straw and mud around the city, and tried to maintain life.

GOVERNOR LI SHAO-CHEN

Food in Sian rose to prices that would have been impossible for the poor, even in prosperous times. A bushel of wheat went from 20 to 100 cash. Bread, which usually cost for twelve cash a bushel, was sold for 100 cash a bushel. The climax was reached when human flesh began to be an article of diet. It was made into a sort of horrible meat-ball, and sold for eighty cash a pound (about four cents). Two men who dealt in it in the streets of Sian, were beheaded, and the sale of human flesh openly was stopped; but there is no question that, secretly, the dead bodies of hundreds of famine victims furnished food for the survivors.

As a direct result of the famine, a contagious disease, which seemed, from its symptoms, to be a combination of dysentery and typhus fever, broke out in Sian last February, and added to the horror. Last March the death average was 700 a day. Thirteen thousand perished in the western suburb. An eye-witness told me that as late as last July he counted sixty corpses in a walk of half a mile through the city. In all, about 50,000 perished from famine and disease in the city of Sian. The dead were buried in a plain about three miles from the city. The graves consisted of long, shallow ditches, which were leveled over as soon as they were filled, so that one can walk over it to-day without ever suspecting that he is passing through a graveyard. This is in accordance with the Chinese idea that it is every man's duty to assist in forgetting a horrible thing.

In the country towns and smaller cities of Shensi, the scenes in Sian were re-enacted. Whole families of refugees perished together. The bark was stripped from trees and eaten. The flesh of dogs and cats was a most common commodity, and it was in the once fertile fields of Shensi that children were bought and sold. The selling of boys and girls is, perhaps, the saddest feature of a Chinese famine. Chinese fathers and mothers care far less for their daughters than for their sons, and an infamous traffic in poor girls goes on continuously, whenever and wherever there is a shortage of crops and a prevalence of hard times. It is a regular business, the headquarters of which are in Shanghai and Hong-Kong. The trade is not confined entirely to China, but its victims can be found in America and Europe as well. But with boys it is different. The popular sentiment regarding them is voiced in the teaching of Mencius, that "the greatest crime a man can commit is to leave no son to worship at the ancestral altar." This feeling, deep-rooted in the Chinese mind, makes a man feel that if he has no son he must adopt one in order to maintain his position as a respectable member of the community. But the same motive makes a father equally reluctant

The Story of Shensi

IT is an appalling story of widespread suffering and misery which Mr. Nichols, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Commissioner in China, sends us from Shensi in his letter, which appears elsewhere in this issue. Two and a half millions of human beings already dead—approximately one-third of the population of the province—and a countless multitude left destitute and helpless, is the ghastly sequel to the long famine which has held China's oldest State in its grasp. Arriving at a critical time, when local and State aid were utterly exhausted, the gifts of the contributors to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Fund have been the means of relieving much suffering and of saving thousands of lives. The Fund and its work have done more to open up Shensi to Gospel influences than a score of embassies, or than twenty years of effort by ordinary methods. It has brought the people and the officials face to face with the simplest interpretation of applied Christianity, and has given them a new view of those whom a year ago they would have stigmatized as "foreign devils." Never again, let us hope, will Shensi, or any other section of China where famine relief has been sent, regard the missionaries and their helpers as other than the real friends of the Chinese people. They will always remember the men who came to them, in Jesus' name, with hands full of help, and with the message of love and succor upon their lips.

What is to be done with the tens of thousands of fatherless and motherless little ones of Shensi, is now the immediate problem that confronts the Christian world. Their fate hangs in the balance, but it will not be long undecided. Already the priests are reaching out for them as proselytes. The vile traffic in children, who are sold like cattle, will soon settle the future of many more. Herein, surely, lies a magnificent opportunity for Christian service. Let each of us take it to heart, and consider seriously whether the voice of duty does not call us to do something for these little ones, thousands of whom are even now standing at the "parting of the ways."

The Saloon as a Social Centre

IN the recent widely-quoted discussion between Bishop Potter and Dr. Rainsford, both these well-known clergymen were unfortunate in their lack of condemnation of the saloon, while Dr. Rainsford seemed almost to endorse it. If he was correctly reported, he also commented without intelligence or sympathy, on the excellent work for humanity of the Women's Christian Temperance Union. This able and patriotic organization may well let its work speak for it, and it needs no encomium or defense here. But when a New York clergyman speaks cordially of the saloon, he forgets the dark side which it presents in the records of our criminal courts, and the black shadow it casts, enveloping broken homes, ruined lives, and blighted hopes.

The saloon is gilded and bright, its doors stand widely open to all comers, but it leads many a man to the shattering of ideals, the degradation of morals, and the wreck of his career. The road is easily traced from the saloon, with its open door, to the penitentiary, with its grim walls and locked portals.

Ask the women on the East Side of New York, and they will not be slow to tell their opinion. What becomes of the children's Sunday dinner, of their new shoes, of the needed coal and wood, of the oil for the lamp, of the comforts which the invalid should enjoy? The saloon-keeper knows. When I was a child, I read a little story, entitled "The Fool's Pence," and it pointed the moral of warmth, light, luxury, in the home of the rum-seller, and chill, gloom, and nakedness in that of his patron. In the name of Christ, in the interest of our brother and sister, it behooves us not to excuse the saloon.

But, how are we to fight it? Surely not by words alone. The social nature of man craves satisfaction, and the church has been slow to recognize this, in our crowded cities. More institutional churches, with their provision for the wants of the masses; more beneficent settlements, where young people may find attractive places to spend their evenings; more temperance restaurants, with reading-rooms, hot coffee, and nutritious food at cost prices; more Gospel missions, more cheap, yet comfortable, lodging houses, must spring up on every side, so that the man, married or single, who is lonely or tired may not drift into the saloon for lack of a safer place. It is noteworthy that the saloon does not tempt women, though women are among its victims and chief sufferers, wounded through the disasters that come to the men they love.

Sermon Reading vs. Church Going

IS it the intention of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD in publishing sermons, to relieve able-bodied church members of the trouble of going out to the public preaching of the Gospel on the Sabbath Day? Certain members of the church claim that it is not necessary to go to church when they can read sermons at home, and in fact have not been to church for years."

The above is the type of frequent letters arriving in our editorial rooms, and once for all we make answer:

Many excuses are offered in these days for non-attendance on public worship. In fact all who have been accustomed in early life to attend church, feel that some good excuse must be given for neglecting the house of God. Among the most recent apologies given seems to be these two:

1st. Dislike to a preacher reading his sermons. Preachers do not preach who read. It is said by these non-attendants, we can read sermons at home that suit us as well, and often better than those we hear from the pulpit. Granted, but what of the influence exerted in neglecting divine worship? What of the parental example set before children? Even if the sermons be read are strong, is it not better to listen to them, than break down the sanctuary and the Lord's day by an abandonment of these divine and hallowed services? What would our land become if all were to neglect the house of God, upon the hollow pretence that the sermon read by the preacher was not preaching? Therefore, close up your churches and give the day over to home reading. Rev. Dr. Curtis of Rockford, Ill., was one of the best pulpites in the West, but read closely his sermons. He was invited to preach at Argyle, a Scotch settlement about twelve miles distant. He was told of the great dislike of Scotchmen to "paper sermons in the pulpit," and regretted that he had consented to preach. Meeting an old elder on Sabbath morning, the Doctor was asked about his method of preaching, and he said: "Well, Mr. Howie, I read my sermons, and I am sorry I have to afflict you with such." The old elder straightened up and said, "Hoot man, it's better to stand up and read sense than to stand up and talk nonsense; if the sermon's gude it's a wi' want." Sensible, for if many extempore sermons were printed as delivered and read over by the preachers they never would be repeated. But the other reason is, we prefer to stay at home and read good sermons. When we can have such good sermon productions at home, why face the inclement weather, or sit in an ill-ventilated church, or be subjected to everlasting duns for money to support missions and enterprises that should support themselves?

Church pews are expensive. The working man can for a nickel read the very choicest sermons, freighted with the finest rhetoric, and poetic power, and spiritual enaction at home. Then why were these sermons printed in family papers if not to be read at home? Therefore, we prefer to quietly sit with our own family and hold a service at home.

We hazard nothing in saying boldly and frankly, that the readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD are few who use this apology for neglecting the worship of the Christian sanctuary. There are thousands who by sickness or chronic invalidism need these printed sermons, and whose only hope of keeping abreast of popular pulpit themes is the printed sermons. There are thousands also of our deaf and dumb whose enjoyment of sacred truth cannot come by hearing a living preacher in the pulpit, but rejoice in reading sermons. Perhaps the Christian disciple who excuses his neglect from God's house upon the ground that he reads his sermons on Sunday at home, has an abundance of other Sunday literature not so likely to aid in building up spiritual character. The plea to read sermons at home rather than attend divine services may leave behind it a deeper love for the newspaper and the novel and some little dissatisfaction with church and the pulpit. Then we answer all our complaining pastors, who are grieved at so many male members remaining at home to read sermons—pulpit efforts so strong, spicy and spiritual, that none of your members will prefer to be absent and even one of your discourses! Perhaps some good pastoral visitation would remedy this whole matter, and sermon in the newspaper would no longer be a rock offence to preachers who murmur over male absent from the service; nor would the family think they could afford to lose one sermon from the pulpit.

Uplifting the Masses

IN the distribution of great wealth from the hands of such financial princes as our Carnegies and Rockefellers and Pearsons, it is self-evident that their colossal fortunes are regarded as a trust to be administered wisely for the commonweal. The only question is how far will colleges and libraries go to uplift the masses, steeped in poverty as to be unable to utilize these institutions. Ought there not to be some other forms of administration of these colossal fortunes besides, ameliorate and assuage the conditions of all the creatures of toil who are practically the creators of these fortunes? The friction between capital and labor is less to-day than it was twenty years ago, but it will not be silenced, so long as labor feels it is not receiving its just need of help in wages, but is actually toiling to build up great institutions for more highly favored beings than themselves.

Free Lessons in Shorthand

THE fourth lesson in shorthand will appear next week. The first lesson appeared January 8, the second, January 22, and the third, February 5. The lessons in this course will appear in the columns of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD regularly every other week. New subscribers who wish to take the Shorthand Course, and old subscribers who deferred beginning the course, or have mislaid their copies, can be accommodated free of charge with a reprint of Lessons 1, 2 and 3 on application to this office.

You will confer a great favor on many a young man and many a young woman, on pastors, Sunday School teachers and Superintendents by directing their attention to our Shorthand Course. They will thank you for having brought to their notice this exceptional opportunity for greater usefulness and increased earning capacity. There are men and women all over this country now occupying confidential positions and enjoying high salaries, who, but for a knowledge of shorthand, might never have advanced beyond an ordinary clerkship.

Three Special Propositions

If you would like to take the Shorthand Course, but find it difficult to pay a year's subscription to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, you may accept any one of the following three propositions:

1st. Send fifty cents for only those issues of "The Christian Herald" which will contain the Shorthand Course.

2d. Get one new subscriber to "The Christian Herald" at $1.50, and receive for yourself, free, all the numbers containing the Shorthand Course, as they appear.

3d. Send your subscription for "The Christian Herald" for one year, payable at the rate of twenty-five cents every two months.

We make these special propositions in order that as many as possible may be enabled to avail themselves of this exceptional opportunity for acquiring a practical knowledge of Pitman's Phonography, the best system of shorthand ever devised. Thousands have already been successfully started, and extend to you a very hearty welcome to join them.

THE BRITISH GOVERNMENT THANKS OUR READERS

A Letter of Appreciation from Lord George Hamilton, Acknowledging their Generosity to the Famine-Stricken People of India

LORD GEORGE HAMILTON

FROM the British Government comes a communication that concerns the readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. It is a letter, reproduced on this page, from the member of the Marquis of Salisbury's Cabinet, who is in charge of the affairs of India—Lord George Hamilton. As will be seen, it is an expression of the Government's appreciation of the generosity of our readers to the suffering people of India in their time of trouble. It is well-merited, for never before in the history of the world have the readers of a religious journal combined to render so magnificent a service to a famine-stricken nation. There is not a doubt that thousands of persons are living happily to-day, who would have perished miserably of starvation if our readers had not contributed the money which enabled the missionaries to feed the hungry multitudes. Those funds and the shipload of grain, which were sent to the afflicted people, were a conspicuous proof that the spirit of Christ, who had compassion on the multitude when he saw that they had nothing to eat, is active in his church to-day. It was distinctively a Christian gift, offered in Christ's name, given for his sake and for love of him, manifested as he directed that such love should be, in caring for the poor and suffering. Reaching the people, too, as it did, through the self-denying missionaries who had been preaching the Gospel to them, it was an object lesson taught in unmistakable terms of the practical helpfulness of the Christian faith. As the people who witnessed Elijah's test on Carmel declared, "the God who answereth by fire let him be God," so the people of India might say, in view of the indifference of the idols they had been worshipping: "The God who answered by the food given by his people, let him be our God."

The Report to which Lord George Hamilton refers contains the following notice of the benefaction of our readers:

Interest in the work [of famine relief] seems first to have been excited by the Marathi Mission of the American Board in Western India, who, in November, 1899, telegraphed to Dr. Klopsch, the proprietor of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, asking his aid. He made the appeal known in his paper, and arranged for the formation of a Missionary Committee in Bombay, over which the Rev. E. S. Hume at first presided, his place being taken, when ill-health forced him to leave India, by his brother, Rev. R. A. Hume, D.D. Besides money, this Committee also received from THE CHRISTIAN HERALD a cargo of about five thousand tons of maize, which arrived in Bombay late in June, and was welcomed by the Committee, and by representatives of the Government of Bombay, and of various sections of the community. The grain was itself worth 375,000 rupees ($125,000) and the cost of its transport nearly 125,000 rupees ($42,000), was paid by the Government of the United States. . . . Early in May Dr. Klopsch himself visited India and spent three weeks in travelling through some of the affected districts. He then arranged for the distribution of 100,000 blankets at the beginning of the rainy season, and undertook to supply through THE CHRISTIAN HERALD the means of support of at least five thousand orphan children for one year, at the rate of forty-five rupees ($15) each.

phan is placed in an institution belonging to the denomination indicated by the person who is supporting the child. Wherever it has been possible, a photograph of the child has been sent from India to the foster parents, and in all cases they have been put in communication with the missionaries who have charge of the child. The work of making these arrangements orphan, about whom inquiries were made writes: "The orphan was a heathen when admitted, but is now a Christian, who is a joy to us all. The children are doing well. The boys are learning trade and we have now a flock of sheep which they tend, and these will supply us with wool for more CHRISTIAN HERALD blankets. All our children are in good health and are praying daily for the kind friends in America who supply them with clothing and shelter."

It is gratifying to learn, too, that various industries are being taught in the institutions in which the children are placed. The accompanying pictures show the industrial departments of the Methodist Episcopal Orphanage, at Nadiad, and the charge of Rev. George W. Parson. Still more extensive are the industrial branches of the school of the American Board, at Ahmednagar, conducted by Dr. Hume, and at Sirur, by Rev. R. Winsor, and in schools and orphanages of other denominations. The boys are taught shoemaking, blacksmith's work, carpentering, printing and other trades, while the girls are instructed in sewing and other useful arts, which will make them more efficient in their duties as wives and mothers. This teaching will have a very beneficial effect in removing the children from the ranks of agricultural laborers, which are greatly over-crowded. The will no longer be wholly dependent on the product of the soil, which is liable to failure in any year, through the whole or partial absence of the monsoon.

One of the most interesting and beautiful instances of the value of Christian teaching comes to us from Rev. William Ramsey, of Chandur, in the Berar district. It shows how instinctively the Gospel enters the hearts of new converts, develops the grace of giving, so that the very poorest claim a share in the delight of ministering to others who are in greater need. Mr. Ramsey sends a money order for six dollars, which were contributed by the natives at his mission for the relief of famine sufferers in China. "They are men," Mr. Ramsey says, "whose average earnings are only six cents a day, so you will see that they have done nobly. Almost all of them were themselves rescued in the famine, by the liberality of your readers, and would, in all probability, have lost their lives but for the timely help thus rendered to them in their extremity. They know by bitter experience what it means to suffer the pangs of hunger, and can therefore feel for the people in China who are now so afflicted. This is their first attempt at special united giving and we pray God to bless it to them as well as to those to whom you send it. I need not tell you that the money was not all given at one time. To people so poor that would have been impossible. My wife and I desire at the same time to express our thanks for the help given us during the famine and also for the life and brightness THE CHRISTIAN HERALD brings into our own home. We are the only white people in the station and are eighteen miles by road from our nearest neighbors of our own race, so we appreciate the paper perhaps more than those who live in civilized surroundings."

FACSIMILE OF LETTER FROM THE RT. HON. SECRETARY FOR INDIA

As our readers are aware, this pledge through their liberality, has now been extended to three years at least. It is the most hopeful of all missionary efforts. The children now being taught the doctrines of the Gospel will become a great army of messengers to spread the knowledge of Christianity throughout India. The children who are being supported by our readers, are doing well and are displaying excellent dispositions, and are making good progress in their studies. No less than one hundred and seven institutions comprise CHRISTIAN HERALD children among their inmates. Great care has been taken that every orphan has been enormous, but the results promise abundant compensation. These five thousand children, growing up under missionary care, will go forth in a few years, carrying into the villages and towns of India Christian principles which will make them living epistles known and read of all men.

Such letters as the following, from Miss A. A. Brown, of the Presbyterian Mission at Kolhapur, who is one of many giving like testimony, are very gratifying, not only to the Christian philanthropists who are supporting the children, but to us who have been the medium of communication. Miss Brown, referring to one Second Childhood.

"So, all right, I'll give you."

Here we want to get some information on getting a loan.

Old people in their second childhood, have their restless fits, and their whims and caprices: some of them are unreasonable and hard to get on with. I knew a very old lady whose one great desire was to do the family washing, and Monday after Monday, in defiance of her grandchildren, she would roll up her sleeves, tuck up her petticoats, and begin the task she loved, though her strength soon gave out. Few younger people have the good sense to let old people alone, not to bother them, not to interfere with their innocent fads. The second-childhood should be made as tranquil and pleasant a time as possible.

Everyday Etiquette.—IV

"Not at Home"

Where friends are in the daily habit of running sociably in and out of each other's houses, the information that one is engaged is sometimes resented, though it should not be. Let me drop a hint, that it is always better to be too formal, rather than to verge on extreme informality. Among the usages which cannot be defended is that informal familiarity prevalent in places where a caller, unannounced, appears at her friend's private bedroom door, or breaks in on the family at meals. Usually, this is not frequent enough to do at present.

to part with his child. It is only in a time of the most dire need, when it is a means of saving life, that he will even listen to a proposition of the kind.

Famine furnishes the opportunity for a market in boys. Men go into the hunger-stricken district, and buy little boys on a wholesale speculation, to retail to sonless fathers in other parts of the country. They buy girls, too, like cattle, for a worse fate.

Such was the case in Shensi. The exact number that were sold will probably never be known, but there can be no question that in return for enough cash for a few days' food, thousands of little ones were separated from their parents forever.

Soon after the hunger cloud had settled down over Shensi, the Chinese officials organized measures for relief. Appeals for money were sent to all parts of the empire, and the response of conservative old China during the three years was 5,400,000 taels, or $3,780,000. Of this enormous amount 1,200,000 taels came from the imperial funds, and 3,000,000 taels from the Shensi provincial treasury. The methods of its distribution were very similar to those employed in the United States in times of need. Thirty-two soup kitchens were opened in Sian, where thousands of people received every morning a bowl of millet porridge. Lists of needy families in the various towns were prepared, and in proportion to the number in each, funds were placed at the disposal of the mandarins for distribution. The one defect in the Chinese administration was the dishonesty of the local officials, whose habitual tendency to "squeeze" did not stop at putting into their own coffers the few taels that were the only hope of their people. The stealing was to some extent lessened by the advent in Sian of the Emperor and his court in the fall of last year. The Empress-Dowager, so the story goes in Sian, appeared one day at a Cabinet meeting, holding in one hand fifty taels of silver and in the other two hundred copper cash. "This is a riddle," she said, "which I want you to answer." When the ministers were unable to do so, she explained that the silver represented what was given for famine relief, and the cash what the sufferers actually received. The Empress' "riddle" was the beginning of an investigation of the mandarins' methods, which resulted in three officials being beheaded.

In the middle of May came the longed-for rain. It was sufficient to insure an autumn harvest, but that was still five months away. The end of the famine was in sight, but horrors were not yet abated. By this time the Chinese relief funds were exhausted. This was the state of affairs when Mr. B. Duncan, M. A., of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Famine Relief Committee, arrived in Sian.

As a missionary of the British Baptist Missionary Society, Mr. Duncan had for ten years labored in Sian and left it only when forced to do so, at the beginning of the Boxer troubles. He is on terms of intimate friendship with the Chinese officials and possesses their confidence to a degree that is extremely exceptional for a foreigner anywhere in China. He entered heart and soul into the work of distributing THE CHRISTIAN HERALD fund and the credit of its successful administration belongs very largely to him. In this work he was ably assisted by Dr. J. A. Creasey Smith, of the British Baptist Missionary Society, and Mr. August Truedinger, of the China Inland Mission.

The only qualification for receiving CHRISTIAN HERALD aid was the need of the man, woman or child who asked for it. There were no distinctions of creed or politics. No one was asked whether he were Buddhist, Taoist, Confucian, or Christian. Among the thousands who received United States dollars translated into cash strings were some who only a year ago were shouting, "Kill the foreign devils." It was an object-lesson in Christian forgiveness such as Shensi had never seen before. The governor and the native relief committee did everything that could be done for THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Fund. As an office and living quarters, they gave Mr. Duncan a building in the heart of the city. Chinese rules and precedents do not permit of the use of a public building by foreigners, so the native committee rented for THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Commissioner an entire compound and paid for it out of their own funds. It consists of five comfortable brick buildings, built around a stone courtyard.

In accordance with the lists of the native committee, Shensi, in the neighborhood of Sian, was divided into districts. A Chinese famine list is a strange thing to Western eyes. It is a series of long columns of hieroglyphs, each representing a "mouth" in a family. According to the size and need of the families, the head of each was given a relief ticket. Duplicate and called for the holders of tickets to come forward. They did so, one by one; each in turn receiving the string of cash called for by the amount of his ticket. In some cases the process was varied by the substitution of bank notes for cash strings. Chinese bank notes are only brown pieces of paper containing the promise to pay of the private firm which issues them. The objection to their use in famine relief work was that the attempt to cash at one time such a large quantity as were given away at a distribution precipitated runs on the banks, which occasionally came near causing riots. Coming when they did, these strings of cash enabled the heads of the families who received them, not only to feed the "mouths," but in addition to buy seed for the autumn planting.

The last distribution of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Relief Funds to the destitute of Sian took place during my stay there. Through the various district magistrates of the city, famine sufferers were notified by the national relief committee to assemble on a certain morning at the Wu Yok Miao, the largest temple in Sian. Wu Yok Miao means literally "the five peaks," and is the place set apart for the worship of the five sacred mountains of the empire. At the front and rear of the temple are large courtyards separated by gates, each guarded by huge idols.

When we alighted from our carts at the door of the old Wu Yok Miao, three thousand men, women and children were squatted on the ground, in the Chinese attitude of supplication. No further proof than their appearance was needed to convince any one that they were sufferers from hunger of the severest kind. Their faces were thin and drawn. Some of the eyes that looked at us as we entered, were wild and staring.

Leading up to the temple platform, an aisle had to be cleared through the crowd by a squad of Chinese soldiers and mandarins' servants, armed with broad swords and long bamboo poles. Between the two idols at the temple gateway sat several mandarins and members of the native relief committee. As with Mr. Duncan, I passed up the aisle to the temple steps, the multitude bent forward and touched their foreheads to the ground in salutation. A mandarin's secretary appeared carrying huge bundles of brown paper bank notes. They were in denominations of 500 and 1,000 cash, being the equivalent altogether of about $875.

The side entrances of the gateway were opened, and the soldiers began to drive the crowd into the rear courtyard. This was accomplished in Chinese fashion, only with much shouting and jostling, and many whacks with the bamboo poles. The side doors of the temple were opened, and through them a continuous stream of the hungry was permitted to pass in single file for three hours. At one entrance, Mr. Duncan and Mr. Truedinger, and at the other, Mr. Middleton, of the China Inland Mission, and myself, handed out bank notes. To boys, and the stronger looking men, we gave 500 cash. To women and old men, we gave the equivalent in brown paper notes, of from 1,000 to 2,500 cash. As they filed past us, in the hurry of receiving it, there was little time for the effusive Chinese thanks they tried to give. In the narrow space between my table and the line of soldiers, old men would at tempt a silent kowtow in a way that was pathetic. Not being Christians, of course, they didn't say "God bless the Americans who gave us this money," but if the heartfelt thanks of any of God's creatures are in the likeness of prayer, then that blessing was written on the faces of hundreds of the starving passing across the courtyard of a heathen temple.

As one of the mandarins said to me when it was over: "Half of these people never heard of America before this famine relief began. They will always remember it as a land of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD."

copies of all the tickets were retained by Mr. Duncan as records of their disbursement. The heads of all the families in the district were then notified to assemble at a stated place on a certain day to receive the amount of their tickets.

The disbursing of money in small sums in China is a very different task from what it would be in the United States. The coins of the country are the small, centre-punctured "cash." Approximately, 2,000 cash are the equivalent of one American dollar, but their actual value varies in almost every county of China. In order, for instance, to give a man 500 "cash" in Lintoun, fifteen miles from the capital, a different number of coins are needed than in Sian. The cash are held together on long strings and a small amount of money weighs a great deal. To relieve the famine of a whole district meant the transportation across the country of thousands of pounds of copper. One hundred and twenty strings of cash (about $84), is a load for a cart drawn by two mules. When CHRISTIAN HERALD money was distributed in Lintoun fifty-one carts were necessary to carry the cash.

On the day of famine relief distribution in a neighboring district, a strange procession filed through one of the ancient gates of Sian. It consisted of a long line of mule carts, accompanied by a detachment of Chinese soldiers. At the head rode Mr. Duncan, and a member of the native relief committee. Progress across the Sian plain was slow; when the procession came to a river, it marched along the bank until a ford was found and then horses, carts and all plunged in; the bare-legged soldiers up to their knees in water and THE CHRISTIAN HERALD copper cash were well nigh swept out of the carts by the current. In lumbering over the roads the wheels of the carts sometimes sunk deep into mud holes.

At the place of distribution a Chinese official mounted an improvised rostrum

COFFEE EYES.

It Attacks Many Persons There.

To illustrate how coffee can affect the words of a lady in Woodland, La. I was brought up to believe that coffee was bad, but was allowed to drink coffee in childhood. Ever since I can remember I have been subject to severe attacks of headache, otherwise my health was pretty good. Until a short time ago my eyes became red; they ached and pained me terribly, and were often badly inflamed. I also experienced dizzy feelings in my head almost constantly.

One time we were obliged to do without coffee for a few weeks, and not relishing my coffee clear I left off its use. In a short time I was surprised to find my eyes improved, and I felt better in every way, still I did not mistrust the coffee, and soon its use as soon as we got cream again. Within a few days my eyes were worse than before. Then I resolved to quit coffee altogether and take up Postum. This I did and my eyes quickly recovered.

My experience shows that while coffee causes headaches and eye trouble Postum Coffee does not produce any bad effects whatever and is greatly strengthening and nourishing. Name given by Postum at Battle Creek, Mich.

Pioneers in Y. M. C. A. Song Service

HOW POETS AND SINGERS HAVE LED YOUNG MEN TO PRAISE THE LORD

THE originator of the praise meeting was Ellen Tourjee (1814-1887), best known as the founder of the New England Conservatory of Music, in Boston, 1867. In 1851 he held meetings for praise when a youth of seventeen, living in Warren, R. I. He soon united the congregation, the choir and the Sabbath Schools in what he called "sings," afterward denominated "praise-meetings." His aim was to blend responsive Scripture readings on a given theme with responsive singing by the congregation. A variety of such services have been held since, inclusive of the widely prevailing song-service of the Y. M. C. A.

The Boston Association, organized December, 1851, was the first in the United States. When its rooms were dedicated, March 11, 1852, an original anthem, by Mrs. Lydia H. Sigourney (1791-1865), of Hartford, Conn., who took great interest in the Association, sung to the tune of "Marlow," was the great feature of the hymnal program. The fifth and the most significant of the stanzas ran:

O God of goodness, bless the band,
Who, moved by Christian love,
Takes the young stranger's friendless hand,

"Blest be the Tie that Binds," which afterwards became a convention hymn, was rendered to the tune of "St. Thomas." The concluding hymn was Bishop Ken's doxology. Charles Demond, a charter member, said that as the Doxology and Old Hundred "rose from the mass of young men, it was as though God was present by his divine Spirit sanctifying and consecrating the rooms." L. P. Rowland, the Association's first General Secretary (1859-1873), was a hymn lover; he had print-sheets of familiar hymns made for use in services, especially those in the open air; and in 1867 published a "Y. M. C. A. Hymn-Book," which contained martial, patriotic and temperance hymns. Dr. Tourjee, in the Autumn of 1876, organized a chorus of 2,000 voices, which led the singing during the Moody and Sankey services in the Boston Tabernacle. Hezekiah Butterworth, the well-known author and editor, asks: "Who can ever forget the singing by that chorus of the thrilling Gospel song, 'To the Work! To the Work!'"

The Boston Association, in 1875-76, printed Toplady's hymn, "Rock of Ages," as it had first appeared in the Gospel Messenger a century before, and it was used in a number of anniversary programmes. This marked an era of progress in Christian union, for Toplady and John Wesley were personal controversialists. "Rock of Ages" had become a unifying hymn. The hymnal history soon extends from that of the first Association to the conventions. H. Thane Miller, of Cincinnati, Ohio, was a phenomenal man in Association history, and his singing was unique, pathetic, powerful, the emotional effect of his voice being enhanced by the sympathy of the auditors with his blindness. Some of his favorite hymns were: "Jesus, Saviour, Pilot Me"; "Waiting by the River"; "The Old, Old Story." Dr. Doane, of Cincinnati, was one of the composers whose tunes often floated into popularity the hymns of Fanny Crosby. "Rescue the Perishing," written by her, was composed for the anniversary meeting of the Indianapolis Association. Dr. Doane wrote the music to "Tell Me the Old, Old Story." The words were given to him in 1867, at the Twelfth International Convention, in Montreal, by Major-General Russell, then the Commander of the Queen's forces in Canada during the Fenian excitement. They are credited to Miss Katherine Hankey, an English lady, who introduced them in 1866. "Your Mission," was written by Mrs. Elizabeth Ellen Huntington Gates, of Elizabeth, N. J., on her slate, one snowy afternoon, in 1860.

Philip Phillips is composer of the tune, "Stand Up, Stand Up for Jesus" was written by the Rev. George Duffield (1813-1888), in Philadelphia. It was based on the dying message of the Rev. Dudley A. Tying to the Young Men's Christian Association. Major D. W. Whittle wrote "Christ is All," for P. P. Bliss, in 1875. James McGranahan composing the music for it. Mr. Sankey, James McGranahan, and George C. Stebbins are the chief singers and survivors of the evangelistic school of authors and composers.

The Christian Commission was organized in the rooms of the New York Association, by a Convention which had been called by the Central Committee of Associations, then in Philadelphia. After the revivals of 1897 "Soldiers' Hymn Books," of vest-pocket size, were published by the Chicago, New York and Boston Associations.

Robert Weidensall, the first Secretary of the International Y. M. C. A. Committee, wrote the "Rallying Song" of the Y. M. C. A. in 1872. The tune was composed by William H. Doane. Secretary George A. Warburton, of the Railway Department, New York, wrote a patriotic hymn, in Bangor, Me.; it is No. 267 in "Praise Songs," compiled by Arthur H. Daddmun, Secretary of the Association in Auburn, N. Y. D. B. Towner (1850) has led the singing at State Conventions.

When Robert R. McBurney became the executive of the New York Association in 1862, it acquired a hymn-lover. His secretaryship, from 1862 to 1898, is penetrated with the hymn spirit. The musical history of the Association is such as to warrant the belief that it will expand with the extension of the work, accomplishing still larger and happier results in leading young men to Christ. The Gospel for Boys

A BOOK FOR ALL WORKERS WITH BOYS

The boy problem in the Sunday-school. What it means and how to meet it. Some startling facts and figures. Book SENT FREE to Sunday-school Superintendents.

Why are there two or three girls to one boy in the Sunday-school between the ages of 12 and 16, and why do boys who come care little for the school? Deals with the difficulty from the boy's standpoint. Tells of needs the school does not supply. Explains how we misunderstand boys and they misunderstand us. Tells of tongues that interpret truth into language wherein boys are born, and makes it helpful and enjoyable to them. A neglected field of Christian work at our door requiring special equipment and training, with suggestions as to this. A practical consideration of the questions involved, by DAVID C. COOK, together with statistics and letters of advice from prominent Sunday-school workers. Price, in flexible cloth binding, 20 cents. All teachers of boys should have it. A copy will be sent free, postpaid, to any Sunday-school superintendent who writes stating that he is such.

Chap. XV—Documentary Evidence

THE great Mr. Smalley himself responded in person to the urgent telegram sent by Moses Armitage on the day following Elizabeth's death. He complimented Mr. Armitage on his discoveries, but shook his head over certain deductions which he had unhesitatingly drawn therefrom. "The evidence certainly points to the desired conclusion," he said. "This Bible now, which you tell me was found on the premises of the man Winch, undoubtedly contains the autograph of Immanuel Rossi, with the probable date of his birth. This is very strong documentary evidence, but we must establish the fact that it was found on the person of the deceased. This I will endeavor to do in my interview with the man Winch."

The man Winch, when cross-examined by the lawyer on the day of his wife's funeral, proved to be an unsatisfactory witness. "I foun' a dead woman an' a live young boy in my haymow seven year ago come January," he said. "Now you know 's much 'bout it as I do."

"Did you find this—ah—book, on or near the person of the deceased?" asked Mr. Smalley, producing the russet-bound Bible with dramatic suddenness.

Winch fixed his frowning eyes on the book. "I tol' ye what I foun'," he said, shortly.

"Very good; but did any other person, say your wife, find this book on or near the deceased?"

"Who tol' ye to come here an' talk to me 'bout my wife," demanded Winch, lowering his shaggy head. "You kin git; that's what you c'n do! I ain't got no more to say."

Mr. Smalley narrowed his lids, cunningly. "My good man," he said, with an agreeable smile, "I will be perfectly frank with you, and tell you that, if we succeed in establishing the claims of this child, there will be considerable—yes, I may say so—a very considerable property coming to him. Now you maintained this—ah—young person at your own expense for some six years or more; did you not?"

"I didn't do nothin' fer him," began Winch; "Lizbeth she was allers a-fuss-in'. I didn't keer a straw fer—" He stopped short, his eyes fastened upon the lawyer with a look which the late Elizabeth would have recognized. "Why, yas," he said with a rasping cough; "I did, so to say, s'pport the boy fer a matter of nigh onto seven year. He cert'nly wa'n't no expense to the town."

"In case we prove the boy's identity," pursued Mr. Smalley, still smiling blandly, "reimbursement would undoubtedly be made. In fact—" he paused, and produced his pocket-book, which he opened with extreme nicety of movement. "Mr. Armitage requested me to give you at once a small token of his appreciation of your—ah—kind paternal care of the child. Mr. Armitage, you understand, wishes in any case to adopt the child legally."

"Wall, I don't know 'bout that," said Winch, his hand closing upon the bank note which the other tendered. "Bein' as the boy was born on my premises, an' seein' 'at I took keer of him at consid'able expense fer nigh onto seven year, I guess I'll hol' onto him myself, ef thar's any prop'ty in the case. I c'n look arter him same's I've done."

"Quite natural, I'm sure, that you should wish to do so," said Mr. Smalley, genially; "but you must understand, my dear sir, that it will be necessary to establish the identity of the child before his claim on the—ah—competence in question will be valid. Now this book—this—ah—Bible, to which I have already drawn your attention—cuts a very considerable figure in the evidence. It contains a name and date which would go far toward settling the matter, if we can establish the fact that it was taken from the body of the woman and not come by in some other way. Do you understand?"

Winch reached out for the book, which he opened and surveyed with frowning eyes. "I didn't see no book out to the barn," he said at last. "An' if 'Lizbeth foun' it, she didn't say nothin'. I've seed her, though, come to think, of a Sunday afternoon on the back steps, a-readin' to the boy out of a book like this. I didn't take no notice. Whar'd you git it?"

"The woman who cared for your wife and who laid her out after her death, found it under Mrs. Winch's pillow," replied Mr. Smalley succinctly. "Remembering the singular last words which your wife uttered, she conceived it her duty to give the book to the child. She did this, and quite naturally it found its way into my hands."

"I'll hev the law on Mirandy Sproul fer that," growled Winch. "She can't c'lect no pay for services arter that, you bet. Hang her, what did the woman mean by takin' prop'ty outen my house?"

"We shall—ahem—consider it a very fortunate circumstance if by means of it we establish the child's identity," said Mr. Smalley. "The question is, How did Mrs. Winch come by the book?"

"It's as plain as a pike-staff," said Winch, with a contemptuous glance at the lawyer. "I never had no sech book, an' she didn't, that I know. An'—an'—she did say suthin' 'bout a book the las' thing."

"Then you are prepared to make an affidavit that this book was not in your house prior to finding the deceased on your premises?"

"Yes, I be. I'll take my Bible oath onto it. But say, I want the boy fetched back here to my house right off. Here I've had the hull expense of his keep, an' he ain't never been no use to me so fur. I guess he kin earn his board all right f'om now on, ef thar ain't nobody to interfere." The man swallowed hard and glanced around the disordered kitchen, where he had chosen to receive his visitor, with a curious mingling of emotions on his hard face.

"Oh, as to that," said Mr. Smalley, smoothly, "it will be advisable to leave the boy with his present guardian. To put it plainly, the child is either the grand-nephew of Mr. Armitage, or he is nameless and penniless. In either case Mr. Armitage will reimburse you handsomely for his keep, but only on condition that he is left in undisturbed possession of the child's person. Of course, I understand that it will be doubly painful for you to part with the boy in your—ah—present bereaved condition. I can assure you that due allowance will be made for all the facts as they—er—exist."

"Wall, I sh'd think it 'ud be wuth as much's fifty dollars extr'y—the partin' with him, I mean," said Winch, slowly rubbing his hands together. "An' what's more—thar's somethin' else. Say, this hull thing's cut into me in a mighty expensive way. Any of the neighbors 'ull tell you that my wife—'Lizbeth—" He stopped short, the words seeming actually to choke him. He went on with a visible effort.

"Wall, to put it straight to ye, the boy run away. My wife, 'Lizbeth, she wa'n't never the same arter that. We looked fer the kid. I went myself an' took my team when I ought to ha' been harvestin'. I may say I los' nigh onto fifty dollars right thar, fer it tuk to rainin' the very nex' day an' the hull crop mildewed. Thar's a matter of a hundred dollars, y' see. An' then my wife, when we come home, wuz all broke up; an' she took to her bed. She—she never got up, an' here I be d'prived of her services, an' fun'ral expenses to pay. It kinder seems to me as though I c'd c'lect damages to a consid'able figur'. I've been thinkin' some of suin' the man. What bizniz has he a-keepin' the boy, I'd like to know?"

"I should not advise a lawsuit, my dear sir," said Mr. Smalley, dryly. "In point of fact you've no case whatever. But as I have already assured you, every possible allowance will be made. I will—ah—just note down the items you have mentioned." He produced a fountain pen and a memorandum book from his

A Queen-Poet's Childhood

WHEN I was small no one knew much about electricity, and there were no telegrams at all. Then all the news was brought by messengers on horseback. All at once, in the middle of the night, one would hear the post-horn sounding, first quite in the distance, then gradually drawing nearer, and the "estafette," as he was called, in his uniform, with his high yellow hat, pulled up before the house; and there was great excitement, especially if he were the bearer of a letter from the king, for those letters might not be kept waiting; they had to be carried on night and day until they reached their destination.

There were hardly any lucifer matches when I was a little girl. I remember still how, in my grandmother's house, there was a little machine dipped in some liquid, on which one pressed to make a flame. And in the nursery we had neither wax nor composite candles; those were only for the drawing-room. We, however, had tallow candles, which constantly required trimming with the snuffers, and it was a great amusement to try to snuff the light without extinguishing it.

There were so few railways at that time that I had traveled almost all over Germany with horses. I had a little, tiny chair fastened high up in the window of my parents' traveling carriage, so that I could look out all the time, and then I would stretch my little curly head out of the window, and call to the postilion: "Post-boy, blow your horn!" And then he put the horn to his lips, and blew a lively tune. When the horses were tired, we stopped in any strange place, and changed horses and postilion. And the new postilion always had a new tune he could play. When my mother was a child, the first steamer was seen on the Rhine, and those who had not yet seen it refused to believe it, and said, mockingly, "There will be steamers going on land next." They thought the idea too absurd, not knowing how soon there would be railways everywhere.

I passed my childhood in the forest amidst the loveliest beech trees standing far higher than the castle, and growing so close up to it that their shadows fell across the threshold. From my window, I so often imitated the cry of the cuckoo or the wood pigeons that they would fly quite near, and call louder and louder, growing quite angry at the strange bird. Sometimes on an autumn evening we went after dusk with a dark lantern into the woods to a most beautiful spot, from which in the daytime there was the loveliest view, to hear the stags bay. It is the most impressive sound—a sort of deep, drawn-out roar, broken by fitful starts—as it is taken up by one fierce, magnificent creature after the other, and they answer one another defiantly from all the hillsides around, till the whole forest rings with the challenge. We did not speak; we hardly dared to breathe, and the lantern, too, had to be muffled, so that only the moonbeams falling aslant the boughs and bushes lighted up the scene. It was almost uncanny to hear the mighty voices echoing through the night; and if they came too near, I sometimes crept a little closer to my father's side and clutched at his hand in the darkness.

In autumn, too, both hoot owls and screech owls were to be heard close round the castle at night, and often when a little owl screeched, my mother has come running into the nursery, thinking it was one of us children crying.

And on the moonlight nights in winter, the hares would come up to the very door, and sit on their hind legs in the snow and

*A Real Queen's Fairy Tales. By Carmen Sylva, Queen of Roumania. This volume contains some of the loveliest fairy stories ever written. They are more in the nature of exquisite allegories, every one with a moral that shines out like a jewel, charming the reader, old or young, by its brightness and beauty. play together. The squirrels, too, were on the best of terms with us. They came quite near because they were so inquisitive. Birds I had by hundreds at my window, for I fed them through the whole winter. I could never bear to have a caged bird. The window is still there at which I fed them, and the same wild vine still twines itself around it, although it is thirty years I have been away.

A Great Reference Library

THE Library which the Success Company of New York has given to the public is a many-sided reference work on a progressive, educational plan, covering every department of useful knowledge—the up-to-date, practical kind. This Library is more than a mere reference work, to be consulted when in doubt and then put aside. It is readable from cover to cover—not only readable, but intensely interesting. The high character of the contributors to the Library at once commands the confidence of intelligent people. Every writer is an expert in his own special field. A work that can boast of such editors and contributors as Theodore Roosevelt, Edward Everett Hale, Edwin Markham, Chauncey M. Depew, General Lew Wallace, David Starr Jordan, Ernest Seton-Thompson, and other men whose names are household words for present greatness, is bound to enjoy a wide measure of popularity. The various contributors have written in their own particular style, and apart from the universal value of the Library as a reference work, it is of still greater value as an embodiment of helpful modern literature.

It is designed in part to be a home-educator. It does not, of course, pretend to carry a university education into the home; but it does claim, and rightly, to carry far more than any university can give—a thorough preparation for life. In the Library even scientific subjects (usually dry and tedious because of abstruse and technical treatment), are presented in a style so easily intelligible and so thoroughly readable, as to prove instructive and fascinating to old and young alike. As an aid to quick and easy reference, the publishers have provided a thorough and systematic general index, which is embellished and explained by many illustrations. It is a veritable encyclopædia in itself.

From a mechanical viewpoint, the Library is an excellent specimen of book-work. The type is large and well-spaced, and beautifully printed on wide margined paper, so as to be easily read by old or young. In press-work, binding, strength, beauty and durability, these volumes are notable. The Success Company of New York is the publisher of this Library, and will send full particulars regarding the Library to any address on application.

BOOKS RECEIVED

The Modern American Bible. The books of the Bible in Modern American form and phrase, by Frank Schell Ballentine. Two volumes of the series, one containing John's Epistles, Gospel and the Revelation; the other, Paul's Epistles and the Epistle to the Hebrews. Price 50 cents each. Published by Thomas Whittaker, Bible House, New York.

Round the World to Wympland. by Evelyn Sharp. Illustrated by Alice B. Woodward. These stories of "Wymps" giants, fairies, and good and bad little children, have each their particular lesson for young readers. They are exceedingly clever, and far above the average of "juvenile tales." Pp. 235; cloth binding. Price $1.50. John Lane, London and New York, publishers.

Deborah: a Tale of the Times of Judas Maccabæus. By Rev. James M. Ludlow. A historical tale of surpassing interest, in which historical personages and events are introduced, and the great struggle between the Jewish patriots and the foes of their race is graphically outlined. Pp. 409; cloth binding. Illustrated. Price $1.50. Fleming H. Revell Company, New York, Chicago and Toronto, publishers.

Ink Flings. By Flora Carleton Fagnani. A very ingenious and amusing artistic adaptation of ink blots as pictures, showing the possibilities of this pastime in the hands of a clever artist. Equally amusing are the verses that accompany and explain the "ink flings." Pp. 128. Cloth covers. Price $1. Dodd, Mead & Co., New York, publishers.

Giant Flowering Caladium

Grandest foliage and flowering plant yet introduced. Leaves 3 to 5 feet long by 2 or 2 1/2 feet broad. Immense, and make a plant which for tropical foliage has no equal. Added to this wonderful foliage are the mammoth lily-like blossoms, 12 to 15 inches long, white, with a rich and exquisite fragrance. Plant perpetually all summer in the garden, or all year round in pots. Not only is it the grandest garden plant, but as a pot plant for large windows, halls, or conservatories, it rivals the choicest foliage, to say nothing of its magnificent flowers, which in any soil or situation, and grows and blooms all year, and will astonish every one with its magnificent novel, effective, free growing and fragrant.

Fine plants, which will soon bloom and reach perfection, 25c. each; 3 for 60c.; 6 for $1.00 by mail, postpaid, guaranteed to arrive in good condition.

OUR GREAT CATALOGUE OF Flowering Plants, Vegetable Seeds, Bulbs, Plants and Rare New Fruit, fully illustrated; Large Colored Plates; 136 pages to any who expect to order. Many great novelties.

The Indispensable Requisite to Success in the Spiritual Life as it is in the Things of this Life

STRANGE that the old lesson that Samuel had to teach Saul, three thousand years ago, should have to be taught still. The old idea that God can be bought off by gifts, that will be content with anything short of obedience, if some sacrifice is made, still exists, and every generation needs to be reminded that "obedience is better than sacrifice." Yet our own family life should have convinced us of the fact. At home and at school it is impressed on every child. He is expected to obey his parents and teachers, and is punished, or ought to be punished, for disobedience. The child's own best demands the discipline, otherwise he would grow up to receive it more roughly in the world. To follow his own inclinations and pay no heed to the commands of his parents, is the surest way to bring upon his misery in his manhood, and therefore, the wisest kindness, he is enjoined to obey. All the penalties on our statute books teach the same lesson. Every one, from the highest to the lowest, is expected to obey the law, and every one recognizes, in theory at least, that the common interest of the community is involved in enforcing the penalty of disobedience. Rich men do escape in minor offences, by the payment of fines, but even they are held accountable in more flagrant matters and must submit or be punished. It is in our dealing with God that we forget the principle, and foolishly hope to escape the penalty for disobedience of the divine law. Obedience is not only a proof of love and of faith, but is the way to achievement in all departments of life. It is in following ourselves in line with the laws of nature that we accomplish our purposes. The history of discovery and invention is a uniform course. Some man makes the discovery of a law, and when he announces his discovery, a hundred men set to work to turn it to practical account. They do so, not by seeking to evade or overcome the law, but by obeying it and applying it to the objects they want to achieve. They know that iron will sink in water, but they learn that if iron is moulded into a certain shape it will float, and so effort is directed not to making the solid metal float, but to the construction of vessels of the prescribed shape. Electricity will rend the giants of the forest, but when men have learned the laws that govern its action, its work is no longer limited to destruction, but it becomes the servant of man to supply power and to carry his messages. We learn what a tree will do, and then we do not oppose its force, but make its natural mode of action subservient to our ends. Thus it is in spiritual matters. The man who will obey God's laws finds his nature developed, while the man who resists them is enmeshed in troubles of many kinds and his life is a failure. We must obey the laws of health in order to attain a long and vigorous life, but we are at liberty to obey them, and when we do, we reap the fruit in sickness, weakness and death. The principle that applies to the body applies equally to the soul. A certain course of action is in harmony with God's law, and he has revealed that course to our own interest requires that we obey it, so fulfil the purpose of our being, or learn by experience that the way of the transgressor is hard.

It is wonderful to see how God is continually teaching this lesson, which men are so unwilling to learn. The prodigal goes away now, as he did in the parable, feeling that at last he is free from parental control and can live according to his own tastes. But he spends his patrimony, the famine comes, he realizes his folly, and voluntarily returns to the yoke he had been so glad to shake off. Men realize that it is their duty to do a certain thing, but it is a disagreeable duty. They seek to evade it, as Jonah turned his face backward when it was his duty to go eastward, but some storm arises and they find that they have not fled from the presence of the Lord, but have been stopped and brought back to do the duty they tried to escape from doing. The laws that we neglect would bring a reward if we would obey them. How hard it is to do a kindness to an enemy, to render a service to the man who has opposed us and injured us. But there is no one who has tried the experiment of obedience to that injunction of Christ without learning what a joy and triumph it is. Retaliation and revenge bring no such pleasure as comes from magnanimity. Then, too, obedience brings knowledge. The mysteries of life are cleared for us as we obey. He that doeth his will shall know the doctrine. There may be little connection visible between the performance of a duty and the perception of a truth, but in the doing of the duty the light breaks on our path. It seemed perhaps foolish to the lepers to go and wash as Christ commanded them to do; but as they went, they were cleansed. Thus the path of obedience is strewn with blessings.

Delighted With Her Premiums

I received the premium, How to Please God, and I must say it is a gem. It should be in every home. Also received the Art Portfolio. It is fine, and far beyond my expectation. I duly appreciate them, and thank you kindly for the gifts.

A Shipment Every 3 Seconds

Such is our record during the past month of December. A shipment every 3 seconds; twenty a minute.

Two million customers are on our books—surely there must be something in our system. Why do these two million people send us order after order—can it be that they are all misguided? We think not; they have found by experience that we can supply them with all their goods at wholesale prices—save them money and give them a better grade of goods.

DO YOU BUY WHERE YOU CAN BUY BEST?

Are you entirely satisfied with the goods you get and the prices you pay? We want you to try us—to send us a trial order and test our ability to satisfy you in every particular. We have special catalogues on almost every line you can think of. Tell us what kind of goods you are interested in and we will send you, absolutely free, a handsome, illustrated catalogue quoting wholesale prices. Be sure to mention the one you want.

ONE YEAR'S FREE TRIAL

WE WILL SHIP ANY CORNISH AMERICAN PIANO OR ORGAN UPON THE DISTINCT UNDERSTANDING THAT IF NOT FOUND ENTIRELY SATISFACTORY AFTER 12 MONTHS' USE, WE WILL TAKE IT BACK.

Thus giving you one year's free trial in your own home. You take no risk when you buy on the celebrated Cornish Plan. It is the only way. Arguments and salesmen need not be in the face of this guarantee. If as good pianos and organs could be bought anywhere else for as little money, we could not afford to make an offer like this, but we do. In proof of this statement which may to some appear extravagant, we give to every purchaser a guarantee that is practically a bond secured on the whole of our plant and property worth over ONE MILLION DOLLARS, warranting each instrument sold to be exactly as represented. Furthermore the Cornish American Pianos and Organs are far better in quality and general appearance than ninety-nine per cent. of the instruments of equal price for sale by any firm of piano and organ manufacturers, or any agents and dealers, for twice the amount of money we ask. You cannot afford to buy any better American Piano or Organ as you save half by purchasing from the only firm of actual manufacturers of high grade Pianos and Organs that sells exclusively to the general public at first cost.

MINIATURE PIANOS AND ORGANS FREE

To every intending purchaser we will present a beautiful set of miniature instruments representative of our Pianos and Organs, and of the latest style in miniature Pianos and Organs. $10 Secures a $480 Lot IN GREATER NEW YORK..

Safest, Surest and Most Profitable Investment Ever Offered—Guaranteed Increase in Value 20% Within One Year—Will Undoubtedly Double in Value Upon Completion of New Bridge—Only 35 Minutes from New York City Hall—Free Trip to New York and Return

A Rugby Residence, E. 46th St.

THIS remarkable proposition carries the guarantee of the largest real estate firm in the world, established 15 years, with over 30,000 satisfied customers, whose testimony is the best evidence of its sterling character.

It brings you into personal touch with New York's wonderful expansion, and enables you to profit by its enormous growth in values. It offers you an opportunity to realize large profits from a comparatively small investment, and with absolute safety—an opportunity to make money the way the Astors made theirs, by legitimate natural increase in real estate values. We own 1,500 acres of the best land in Brooklyn, secured before its consolidation with New York, lying in the direct pathway of the tremendous development now going on, and which will be enormously increased by the new bridges, tunnels, etc., of which you have read, now building to accommodate the great and swelling tide of overflow population. Write us for all the facts and convincing evidence of this unprecedented situation and the wonderful future of Brooklyn Borough.

It's matter of common knowledge that the big fortunes of the oldest New York families began with the enormous profits accruing from early investments in New York real estate. The time for modest investment in the older city is of course long since past, but when New York recently burst its strained boundaries and began to overwhelm Brooklyn, then again came like opportunities for early investors—yes, even far greater, for the Astors and others had no such marvellous combination of circumstances to operate in their behalf, because the last two years have accomplished, and every two years from now on will accomplish, greater development and far greater increase of values than a decade did in the old days. The shrewd ones who take immediate advantage of the present situation can repeat and surpass the historical record and unquestionably make comfortable fortunes and even great wealth.

Our property is only 3 1/4 miles from Brooklyn Bridge; only 35 minutes from New York City Hall; we are developing it with the highest class of improvements (see photograph) in exact accordance with city specifications, on 60, 80 and 100-foot streets, boulevarded with macadam from curb to curb, granolithic curbing, gutters and sidewalks (5 feet wide and 12 inches deep) with flower beds, trees and shrubbery, city water, gas, etc. The lot we now sell for $480 and guarantee will be worth $576 within one year, will unquestionably bring $10,000 in ten years' time; it is to-day intrinsically worth as much as the $40,000 lot at 92nd Street, New York, for it is under the same city government, transportation is similar, same distance from City Hall, same running time, same fare, almost the same street improvement, and now merely lacking building development. Values must equalize themselves, and are already increasing with marvelous rapidity.

HERE'S OUR PROPOSITION

For $10 down and $1.50 per week, or $6 per month, until paid for, we will sell you a regular New York City lot, full size, subject to the following guarantees from us:

20 PER CENT. INCREASE GUARANTEED

If at the expiration of the year 1902 this $480 lot is not worth $576—or 20 per cent. increase—based on the price at which our corps of salesmen will then be selling similar lots, we will refund all the money you have paid us with 6 per cent. interest additional.

If you should die at any time before payments have been completed we will give to your heirs a deed to the lot without further cost.

If you should lose employment or be sick you will not forfeit the land.

SEND US $10 ONLY

and we will reserve you one of the best unsold lots, then you may pay $6 per month until the full amount is paid; this gives you all the benefit of the increase in value from the time you make the first payment; but send us your name at least, and we will mail you maps and full information free.

MAP OF BROOKLYN, SHOWING LOCATION OF OUR PROPERTY, RUGBY

Examples of New York City Increase

Lot on corner 146th street and 3d avenue, New York City, worth in 1881 $1500, sold in spring of 1901 for $70,000 to Henry Lewis Morris. His grandfather sold it for $155 in 1853.

Lot on 80th street, opposite Central Park, sold in 1850 for $500, in 1901 brought a price that showed an increase of $500 every sixty days from 1850 to 1901.

Our Final Word of Counsel

These lots are SELLING VERY FAST. Sit down at once and send us $10 to secure one. If you are not perfectly satisfied on examining our entire proposition, we will gladly refund your $10. Take this first step now and

You Will Never Regret It

1 The Present Brooklyn Bridge.
2 THE NEW BROOKLYN BRIDGE—
Soon to be completed—The nearest way to this property—Only 30 minutes by direct trolley—Fare five cents.

FREE TRIP TO NEW YORK

As a further guarantee of good faith, we agree with all persons living East of Chicago to pay you in cash the cost of your railway fare to New York and return, if you visit our property and find the word of this advertisement a misrepresentation; or in case you fail to credit the cost of the fare on your purchase; to the living farther away than Chicago we will pay an amount equal to round trip Chicago ticket.

AS AN INVESTMENT.

we believe this to be one of the safest, surest and most profitable that could be entered into. It is bound to increase rapidly because there is no other land within the same distance of New York City Hall that can be had for anything near as low a price, and because New York has become so congested that the "density belt" has advanced to the very gates of our properties which are directly in the line of this development.

You will note three distinct points of advantage in this proposition. First—It is a Life Insurance for your family. Second—It enables you to pay in small sums as you would in your savings bank and cannot cramp you; and Third—It enables you to participate in the great growth of values in New York real estate which are due to natural conditions; and furthermore, the three advantages are absolutely without risk.

Titles are guaranteed to us by the Title Guarantee and Trust Co., of New York City.

Which is the purest, the most unselfish and the truest—the love of the sexes, the love between two friends, or the love that exists between parents and children, and which of the three is capable of the greatest sacrifice?

Questions of the Week

1. What are the chief points of difference between morality and righteousness? Where does the one end and the other begin?

The law of civilized society is founded upon morals; that is, justice between man and man. An atheist, deist or skeptic of any shade of unbelief, may possess a spotless morality, because social contact only requires right between individuals. Righteousness springs from the recognition of our true relation to our Heavenly Father in the redemption of the race through the offering of his beloved Son. Tersely put, it is the completion of man; the third story, or spiritual, being added thereby. Morality may be represented in or by two stories; but, to be righteous, our lives must reach up to the Infinite Father, through the blood of our elder Brother, even Jesus Christ. Thereby adding the third story or complete man. The moral life must continue after the new relation has been established by accepting the atonement, and the glory and honor given to God, and not taken to ourselves, as is usually done by those who pride themselves on their morality. Morality is a product of humanity; while righteousness exists by being in touch with Divinity.

F. B. SQUIRES.

Morality relates to the practice, manners or conduct of men as social beings, in relation, to each other and with reference to right and wrong. A moral man follows the letter and spirit of the Golden Rule, and most of them have a notion that they will be able to gain an entrance into the kingdom of heaven on account of their morality. What a fearful mistake! A moral man may not be a righteous man, but a righteous man must be a moral man. Where does the one end and the other begin? Morality or self-righteousness ends where true righteousness begins—when the door of the heart is opened and Christ is allowed to enter. In other words, true righteousness begins when the man is converted to God.

endeavor to persuade them both to abandon the deal, and thus save them from loss, even at the risk of forfeiting their friendship. In doing this, great skill and tact are required, and the considerations urged must be fair and just to all. If the friendly relations are remote, and advice is not sought, it can hardly be considered a duty to interfere, and if not a plain duty, it would be unwise to do so.

PHILO.

The proper course is to remain out of the case altogether. He may think the prospective purchaser is unable to pay; but it is not very likely that anyone is so well acquainted with another, as to have positive knowledge about such a matter. I am positive no man knows my ability or inability to fulfil my contracts. The prospective purchaser may not have even the slightest intention of defrauding, and if one is "built that way," the world soon knows of it. Even if the prospective purchaser wilfully contemplates defrauding the seller, and a friend have positive knowledge of this, I do not think he need tell the seller of the intention; but if circumstances were examined, it would be found that prevalent objection to their marrying has been financial inability. However, if love exists, the young man able to support wife and family, should have no doubt about the course to pursue.

MARY WILLIAM

There are a number of things that account for the falling off. During recent years many avenues have been opened making it possible for the woman to take care of herself. This has led many young women to prefer independence to wifehood, in the face of so many instances of matrimonial misfits. Many young men have taken to a life of celibacy, because they do not feel that they can afford to maintain a household in fashion and gayety such as society requires at the present time. There is not that regard for the marriage vows among the younger members of society now-a-days that there was among our fathers, and young men know this. A virtuous wife is a jewel, and a married man whose wife is not found on every bush. Marriage is more of a lottery to-day than used to be, and men and women are not inclined to take the chances.

A Great Sermonic Library

Over 500 Selected Sermons by Dr. Talmage. Twenty Large, Attractive Volumes, Aggregating Over 8,500 Pages, Printed from Large Type and Richly Bound in fine Cloth with Gilt Top

DR. TALMAGE, in speaking of the Twenty Volumes of his Sermons, said: "THESE ARE THE BRIGHTEST SPARKS FROM MY ANVIL." No other preacher of the present day has been a more prolific writer than the eminent author of this Comprehensive Sermonic Library, and no set of books can excel these in wealth of suggestion, anecdote, incident, and brilliancy of diction.

We feel confident that the host of readers of his sermons will hail with enthusiasm this opportunity to secure for themselves a set of these priceless volumes, containing over 600 sermons—sermons abounding in spiritual helpfulness, matchless eloquence, valuable anecdote and sublime pathos.

Indexed and Cross-Indexed. Over 25,000 Separate References

Every volume of this great Sermonic Library is separately indexed and cross indexed as to texts, titles, anecdotal and historical illustrations and topics, so thoroughly that the contents are readily available, whether for suggestion, illustration, reinforcement or for special courses of reading.

Then the entire twenty volumes, aggregating over 8,500 pages, are indexed as one work, in the same complete and thoroughgoing manner, so that this general index will aid any one to find with the greatest facility all the utterances of this eloquent pulpit orator on any particular subject.

Eloquent Discourses for Special Occasions

Dr. Talmage's sermons for special occasions, such as Thanksgiving, Christmas Day, New Year's, Easter, Decoration Day, included among the sermons published in these twenty volumes, are notable as the most eloquent efforts on the lines indicated that have ever been published.

Each volume measures 5 1/2 x 8 1/2 inches when closed, and the twenty volumes require shelf space 32 inches long. Their combined weight is about thirty-five pounds.

The REGULAR PRICE of these TWENTY VOLUMES is $20.00

ONE DOLLAR DOWN, and One Dollar a Month for 19 Months, or 10 per cent. Discount for Spot Cash.

OUR SPECIAL PROPOSITION

On all orders mailed by Teachers, Librarians, Ministers, Sunday School Superintendents, On or Before March 10, 1902, we will make a Special Discount of 25 per cent. That is, we will sell the Entire Set at $15—One Dollar down, and One Dollar a Month for fourteen months; or, if paid spot cash, we will make an additional allowance of 10 per cent., thus reducing the cost of the entire set to $13.50. Freight charges are always paid by the purchaser. As soon as the present Cloth Bound sets are sold, it is our intention to bind this work hereafter exclusively in Half Russia, when the minimum retail price will be advanced to $30.00 per set. All orders for this great Sermonic Library should be addressed:

2. What type of character is that which Christ described (Matt. 5:3) as "the poor in spirit?"

The type of character so designated, is the humble, trusting man, of such clear moral sense that he realizes that as a sinner he has no resources to procure his pardon, or as a Christian no merit to recommend him before God. It is the intelligent humility of faith which never feels its own sufficiency, but always realizes that God, by grace, bestows these things, and we, without deserving, must trust for them. Under conviction for sin, or in our efforts of Christian life, "we feel, that, before God, we are void of everything." Our real estate with God is one of utter poverty. When "in spirit" we realize it, "then the Kingdom of heaven has already come" to us. "Without it we are inaccessible to the riches of Christ." The opposite of such a proper humility before God, is that spirit of self-confidence, which is not reconcilable with a full trust in God.

C. P. ATKINSON.

3. If a man knows that one of his friends is arranging to make a purchase from another friend, for which he cannot pay, ought he to notify the friend who is selling that he is likely to lose, when by so doing he would lose the friendship of the prospective purchaser?

If the mutual friend stands in such intimate relations to the parties that the unsolicited offering of advice is proper, it is his duty to permit, he may try to induce the would-be buyer to refrain from such an attempt.

F. A. MASEBACH.

4. Does conversion obliterate the injuries to the soul which sin has caused? That is, can the sinner be as good a Christian as he would have been if he had not sinned?

Answers to this question will appear in the issue of March 19.

5. What inference should be drawn from the decrease in the number of marriages last year? Is marriage a duty incumbent on a man who is able to provide for a wife and family?

The undeniable tendency of the present day to postpone marriage indefinitely, and the fact that an ever-increasing number never marry at all, seem to indicate, in the first place, that the young man of to-day is unwilling to settle down, as his father did, and work up from the bottom of the ladder; but that he wishes, either to begin life where his parents left off, or else that, in accordance with the restlessness of the age, he travels, "sees the world," and grows careless of home, and kindred ties. The romantic age once passed, it is equally true of the majority of either men or women, that they cease to be vitally concerned whether they marry or not. The complexity in the business world to-day, the competition in almost every phase of life, and the difficulty in solving the problem of how to make a living, present another explanation regarding the decrease in the marriage list. If the cases of many of the bachelors of to-day

Subscriber, Frankfort, S. D. Is it possible for a man to be over-righteous? (See Eccles. 7:16)

Commentators interpret the phrase "righteous overmuch" as descriptive of religious presumption; of that self-made righteousness which would lay the greatest stress upon outward performances and would claim personal credit for results which the true believer recognizes as the gift of divine grace alone. Pharisaeism, with its hypocritical assumption of superior virtue, its multitudinous observance, and its devotion to form and ceremonial, for getting the "things of the spirit," was the type of the over-righteous.

Mrs. D. M. W., Niagara Falls, Can. Please explain how the dead can bury the dead? Some do not understand it (Matt. 8:22).

The language employed by Christ on the occasion in question is to be accepted figuratively, as in many other instances of his teaching. He was speaking of the characteristics of true discipleship, and particularly referred to those who permitted themselves to become so entangled in worldly affairs, that they persistently procrastinated in spiritual things. To these, Jesus showed that all other claims were inferior to the divine claim upon their energies and the paramount command to "preach the kingdom of God." These should take precedence even of the highest claims of nature. While immortal souls are in peril, the true disciple must not hesitate, but must go, even at the sacrifice of all he holds dear. Those who remain, being dead to the spiritual call, may well be relied upon to fulfil all needful natural duties to the dead or the dying among themselves. The disciple's duty is to obey the call, leaving the consequences with God.

"Five o'clock Tea"

Owing to unexpected imperfections in the engraver's work, the completion of the picture, entitled, "Five o'clock Tea," has been unavoidably delayed, and deliveries may not take place before the end of the present month. We believe that our friends will agree with us that it is better to suffer a little delay, than to send out work that may prove unsatisfactory and disappointing. NEAR Savannah, Ga., may be seen one of the most interesting charitable institutions in the United States. Dating back to the days of Charles Wesley and Gen. Oglethorpe, who were the first to discuss the subject of building an orphanage in the infant colony of Georgia, the Bethesda Orphans' Home, perhaps the oldest establishment of its kind in America, stands a noble monument to its founder, Rev. George Whitefield. In early times it was often called "Whitefield's House of Mercy," although he always spoke of it as Bethesda. No interest was dearer to the heart of the great evangelist than this Home, the first contributions for which he collected on the commons of England from the people who gathered to hear him preach. Whitefield's love of Bethesda was shown in many of his letters. Writing to a friend a few months before his death, he said, "We may as well say a little heaven on earth here. O, Bethesda, my Peniel, my Peniel, my happiness is inconceivable." And again he says, "Bethesda is a place that the Lord loves and will bless." In his last prayer, two hours before his death, he called for a blessing on Bethesda. The first brick of the original Home was laid on March 25, 1740, by the founder, who tells us in his journal that "the workmen attended, and with him knelt down and prayed, he exhorting them to work heartily, knowing that they worked for God." Before the building was completed, forty children of English, French, Irish, Scotch, and American parentage were ready to become its occupants. "It is my design," said the Evangelist, "to have all of these children taught to labor so as to be qualified to get their own living." When the Home was in good running condition, carpentering, seamaking, tailoring, etc., are mentioned as among the trades taught. Silk culture in 1756, was a feature of the industrial curriculum. Money was donated by interested Christians in England, Bermuda, and the older colonies of America, as well as our own people. It is interesting to read in Benjamin Franklin's autobiography, how that statesman's determination to donate nothing toward the Orphanage was overcome. "I happened soon after," he says, "to attend one of Whitefield's sermons, in the course of which I perceived that he intended to finish with a collection, and I silently resolved that he should get nothing from me. I had in my pocket a handful of copper money, three or four silver dollars, and five pistoles in gold. As he proceeded I began to soften, and concluded to give the copper. Another stroke of his oratory made me ashamed of that and determined me to give the silver; and he finished so admirably that I emptied my pocket into the collection dish, gold and all." Bethesda had friends among the red men. Sometimes Indians brought venison and donations of rice.

The charity flourished, and in 1746, Whitefield was able to write encouraging reports to England. In a letter dated March of that year, he says: "We have lately begun to use the plough, and next year hope to have many acres of good oats and barley. We have near twenty sheep and lambs, fifty head of cattle, and seven horses. We hope to kill a thousand weight of pork this season. Our garden, which is very beautiful, furnishes us with all sorts of greens. We have plenty of milk, eggs, and poultry; and make a good deal of butter weekly. A good quantity of wool and cotton has been given me, and we hope to have sufficient spun and woven for the next winter's clothing. Here is land to employ our charges and exercise their bodies and keep them from idleness out of school hours. Here are none of the temptations to debauch their tender minds which are common to more populous countries."

An academy was afterwards established in connection with the Orphanage. After Whitefield's death, in accordance with his will, Bethesda was given over to the charge of his "very dear friend, the Countess of Hunt, who, in another statement, all the personal property of which she was possessed, and the proceeds thereof, were given to the Home of Bethesda. The Countess of Hunt left a large tract of land in her will, and she planned a good college to be connected with Bethesda, in which students were to be trained for a wide range of service, the military, medical, and the various branches of the professions. The Countess of Hunt was to have been the first President of the institution, but she died before she could take office. Several times were the buildings destroyed by fire, each time a new structure taking the place of the old. Once the property was sold, the Countess of Hunt's institution was transferred to the Countess of Huntingdon, who carried on the work at Bethesda. Passing over the many vicissitudes suffered by the Institution, to-day it is sufficient to point to the commodious building which stands monitor over the original tract of five hundred acres donated to Whitefield for an Orphanage. The Orphanage is in an excellent condition, and this is largely due to the able management of its President, Col. J. H. Estill, who for over twenty years has directed its affairs. Col. Estill is hopeful that in the near future, the technological department, which for want of funds was abandoned, may be resumed. One hundred and thirty-two happy children now answer to the roll-call. The Institute is non-sectarian. The religious influences and exercises are of a simple, evangelical character. Both Jew and Gentile are welcomed to its sheltering arms. Practical lessons in agriculture are given now as in Whitefield's day, the boys doing a considerable amount of the work on the place. Last year more vegetables were raised than was necessary for use at the Home, and an abundance of fruit and forage for the cattle. On Anniversary Day, an entertainment is provided for inmates and guests, among whom are usually many distinguished persons. Last year the representatives of clergymen, Savannah's Mayor, Georgia's Governor, and 3,000 visitors besides, were present to celebrate the one hundred and sixty-first recurrence of the day when Whitefield prayed God's blessing on the newly-founded orphanage.

EVERY-DAY RELIGION

TEXT—I. Corinthians 10: 31:
"Whether therefore ye eat, or drink, or whatsoever ye do, do all to the glory of God."

WHEN the apostle, in this text, sets forth the idea that so common an action as the taking of food and drink is to be conducted to the glory of God, he proclaims the importance of religion in the ordinary affairs of our life. In all ages of the world there has been a tendency to set apart certain days, places and occasions for worship, and to think those were the chief realms in which religion was to act. Now, holy days and holy places have their importance. They give opportunity for special performance of Christian duty, and for regaling of the religious appetite; but they cannot take the place of continuous exercise of faith and prayer. In other words, a man cannot be so much of a Christian on Sunday that he can afford to be a worldling all the rest of the week. If a steamer put out for Southampton, and go one day in that direction, and the other six days in other directions, how long before the steamer will get to Southampton? It will never get there. And though a man may seem to be voyaging heavenward during the holy Sabbath-day, if, during the following six days of the week he is going toward the world, and toward the flesh, and toward the devil, how long will it take him to reach the peaceful harbor of heaven? You cannot eat so much at the Sabbath banquet that you can afford religious abstinence the other six days. Heroism and princely behavior on great occasions are no apology for lack of right demeanor in circumstances insignificant and inconspicuous. The genuine Christian life is not spasmodic; does not go by fits and starts. It toils on through heat and cold, up steep mountains and along dangerous declivities, its eye on the everlasting hills crowned with the castles of the blessed. I propose to plead for an every-day religion.

Its Place in Conversation

In the first place, we want to bring the religion of Christ into our conversation. When a dam breaks, and two or three villages are overwhelmed, or an earthquake in South America swallows a whole city, then people begin to talk about the uncertainty of life, and they imagine that they are engaged in positively religious conversation. No. You may talk about these things, and have no grace of God at all in your heart. We ought every day to be talking religion. If there is anything glad about it, anything beautiful about it, anything important about it, we ought to be continuously discussing it. I have noticed that men, just in proportion as their Christian experience is shallow, talk about funerals, and graveyards, and tombstones, and death-beds. The real, genuine Christian man talks chiefly about this life, and the great eternity beyond, and not so much about the insignificant pass between these two residences. And yet how few circles there are where the religion of Jesus Christ is welcome. Go into a circle, even of Christian people, where they are full of joy and hilarity, and talk about Christ or heaven, and everything is immediately silenced. As on a summer day, when the forests are full of life, chatter, chirrup, and carol—a mighty chorus of bird-harmony, every tree-branch an orchestra—if a hawk appear in the sky, every voice stops, and the forests are still; just so I have seen a lively religious circle silenced on the appearance of anything like religious conversation. No one had anything to say, save, perhaps, some old patriarch in the corner of the room, who really thinks that something ought to be said, under the circumstances; so he puts one foot over the other, and heaves a long sigh, and says, "Oh, yes; that's so, that's so!"

My friends, the religion of Jesus Christ is something to talk about with a glad heart. It is brighter than the waters; it is more cheerful than the sunshine. Do not go around groaning about your religion, when you ought to be singing it or talking it in cheerful tones of voice. How often it is that we find men whose lives are utterly inconsistent, who attempt to talk religion, and always make a failure of it! My friends, we must live religion, or we cannot talk it. If a man is cranky, and cross, and uncongenial, and hard in his dealings, and then begins to talk about Christ and heaven, everybody is repelled by it. Yet I have heard such men say, in whining tones, "We are miserable sinners"; "The Lord bless you"; "The Lord have mercy on you"; their conversation interlarded with such expressions, which mean nothing but canting; and canting is the worst form of hypocrisy. If we have really felt the religion of Christ in our hearts, let us talk it, and talk it with an illuminated countenance, remembering that when two Christian people talk, God gives special attention, and writes down what they say. Malachi 3: 16, "Then they that feared the Lord spake often one to another; and the Lord hearkened and heard it, and a book of remembrance was written."

Again I remark: we must bring the religion of Christ into our employments. "Oh," you say, "that is very well if a man handle large sums of money, or if he have an extensive traffic; but in the humble work in life that I am called to, the sphere is too small for the action of such grand heavenly principles." Who told you so? Do you not know that God watches the faded leaf on the brook's surface as certainly as he does the path of a blazing sun? And the moss that creeps up the side of the rock makes as much impression upon God's mind as the waving tops of Oregon pine and Lebanon cedar; and the alder, cracking under the cow's hoof, sounds as loud in God's ear as the snap of a world's conflagration. When you have anything to do in life, however humble it may seem to be, you to do it. If your work is that of a fisherman, then God will help you, as he helped Simon when he dragged Gennesaret. If your work is drawing water, then he will help you, as when he talked at the well-curb to the Samaritan woman. If you are engaged in the custom-house, he will lead you, as he led Matthew sitting at the receipt of customs. A religion that is not good in one place is not worth anything in another place. The man who has only a day's wages in his pocket as certainly needs the guidance of religion, as he who rattles the keys of a bank, and could abscond with a hundred thousand dollars.

There are those prominent in the churches who seem to be, on public occasions, very devout, who do not put the principles of Christ's religion into practice. They are the most inexorable of creditors. They are the most grasping of dealers. They are known as sharpers on the street. They fleece every sheep they can catch. A country merchant comes in to buy spring or fall goods, and he gets into the store of one of these professed Christian men who have really no grace in their hearts, and he is completely swindled. He is so overcome that he cannot get out of town during the week. He stays in town over Sunday, goes into some church to get Christian consolation, when, what is his amazement to find that the very man who hands him the poor-box in the church is the one who relieved him of his money! But never mind; the deacon has his black coat on now. He looks solemn, and goes home talking about "the blessed sermon." If the wheat in the churches should be put into a hopper, the first turn of the crank would make the chaff fly, I tell you. Some of these men are great sticklers for Gospel preaching. They say, "You stand there in bands and surplice and gown, and preach—preach like an angel, and we will stand out here and attend to business. Don't mix things. Don't get business and religion in the same bucket. You attend to your matters, and we will attend to ours." They do not know that God sees every cheat they have practiced in the last six years; that he can look through the iron wall of their fire-proof safe; that he has counted every dishonest dollar they have in their pocket, and that a day of judgment will come. These inconsistent Christian men will sit on the Sabbath night in the house of God, singing, at the close of the service, "Rock of Ages cleft for me," and then, when the benediction is pronounced, shut the pew-door, and say, as they go out, "Good-bye, Religion. I'll be back next Sunday."

The Spiritual Armory

I think that the Church of God and the Sabbath are only an armory where we are to get weapons. When war comes, if a man wants to fight for his country, he does not go to Troy or Springfield to do battling, but he goes there for swords and muskets. I look upon the Church of Christ and the Sabbath day as only the place and time where and when we are to get armed for Christian conflict; but the battle-field is on Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday, Friday and Saturday. "St. Martin's," and "Lenox," and "Old Hundred," do not amount to anything unless they sing all the week. A sermon is useless unless we can take it with us behind the plough and the counter. The Sabbath day is worthless if it last only twenty-four hours.

There are many Christians who say: "We are willing to serve God, but we do not want to do it in these spheres about which we are talking; and it seems so insipid and monotonous. If we had some great occasion, if we had lived in the time of Luther, if we had been Paul's traveling companion, if we could serve God on a great scale, we would do it; but we can't in this every-day life." I admit that a great deal of the romance and knight-errantry of life have disappeared before the advance of this practical age. The ancient temples of Rouen have been changed into store-houses and smithies. The residences of poets and princes have been turned into broker's shops. The classic mansion of Ashland has been cut up into walking-sticks. The groves where the poets said the gods dwelt, have been carted out for fire-wood. The muses that we used read about have disappeared before the immigrant's ax and the trapper's gun, and the man who is waiting a life bewitched with wonders will never find it. This is, however, a field of endurance and great achievement, but it is in every-day life. There are Alps to scale, there are Hellespontos to swim, there are fires to brave, but they are all around us now. This is the hard kind of martyrdom to bear. It took grace to lead Luther and Ridley through the fire triumphantly with their armed enemies and their friends were looking on, but it requires more grace now to bring men through persecution, when nobody is looking on. I could show you in this city a woman who has had rheumatism twenty years, who has endured more suffering and exhausted more grace than would have made twenty martyrs pass triumphantly through the fire. If you are not faithful in an insignificant position in life, you would not be faithful in a grand mission. If you cannot stand the bite of a midge, how could you endure the breath of a basilisk?

In Common Work

Do not think that any work God gives you to do the world is on too small a scale for you to do. The whole universe is not ashamed to take care of one little flower. Plato had a fable which I have now nearly forgotten, but it ran something like this: He said spirits of the other world came back to this world to find a body and find a sphere of work. One spirit came and took the body of a king, and did his work. Another spirit came and took the body of a poet, and did his work. After a while Ulysses came, and he said, "What! all the fine bodies are taken, and all the grand work is taken. There is nothing left for me." And some one replied: "Ah! the best one has been left for you, Ulysses said, 'What's that?' And the reply was, 'The body of a common man, doing a common work, and for a common reward.' A good fable for the world, and as just as good a fable for the church. Whether we eat, or drink, or whatsoever we do, let us do it to the glory of God.

Again, we need to bring the religion of Christ into our commonest trials. For severe losses, for bereavement, for trouble that shocks like an earthquake and that blasts like a storm, we prescribe religious consolation; but, business man, for the small annoyances of last week, how much of the grace of God did you apply? "Oh!" you say, "these trials are too small for such application." My brother, they are shaping your character, they are souring your temper, they are wearing out your patience, and they are making you less and less of a man. I go into a sculptor's studio, and see him shaping a statue. He has a chisel in one hand and a mallet in the other, and he gives a very gentle stroke—click, click, click! I say, "Why don't you strike harder?" "Oh!" he replies, "that would shatter the statue. I can't do it that way: I must do it this way." So he works on, and after a while the feature comes out, and everybody that enters the studio is charmed and fascinated. Well, God has your soul under process of development, and it is the little annoyances and vexations of life that are chiseling out your immortal nature. It is click, click, click! I wonder, why some great providence does not come, and with one stroke prepare you for heaven. Ah, no. God says that is not the way. And so he keeps on by stroke of little annoyances, little sorrows, little vexations, until at last you shall be a glad spectacle for angels and for men. You know that a large fortune may be spent in small change, and a vast amount of moral character may go away in small depletions. It is the little troubles of life that are having more effect upon you than the great ones. A swarm of locusts will kill a grain-field sooner than the incursion of three or four cattle. You say, "Since I lost my child, since I lost my property, I have been a different man." But you do not recognize that are hewing, cutting, shaping, splitting and interjoining your moral qualities. Rats may sink a ship. One lucifer match may send destruction through a block of storehouses. Catherine de Medicis got her death from smelling a poisonous rose. Columbus, by stopping and asking for a piece of bread and a drink of water at a Franciscan convent, was led to the discovery of the new world. And there is an intimate connection between trifles and immensities, between nothings and everything.

Now, be careful to let none of those annoyances go through your soul unarraigned. Compel them to administer to your spiritual wealth. The scratch of a six-penny nail sometimes produces locked-jaw, and the clip

THE STONING OF STEPHEN

INTERNATIONAL SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON FOR MARCH 2
ACTS 7: 54-60; 8: 1, 2

By Dr. and Mrs. Wilbur F. Crafts

GOLDEN TEXT: "PRAY FOR THEM WHICH DESPITEFULLY USE YOU AND PERSECUTE YOU." MATT. 5: 44

ST. STEPHEN'S GATE

WHEN the Sanhedrin gnashed on Stephen with their teeth, the white cap which the High Priest wore, with the words engraved upon it, "Holiness to the Lord," must have become sadly awry, or it may have fallen on the floor, to be trampled under foot. That staid and dignified supreme court became a mob as they left their seats and rushed together upon Stephen. It would be hard to imagine a scene of greater degradation. As no mention is made of any contrary action on the part of Gamaliel, who had been cool-headed and wise on a former occasion, in advising the Sanhedrin to let Peter and John alone, we must think that even he had this time been carried away with the mad rush of passion.

One man alone was calm, dignified and sweet, and that was Stephen himself. His face reflected the heaven above, and not the hell which surrounded him. He looked up steadfastly into heaven, and saw the glory of God, and Jesus standing on the right hand of God. Jesus knew Stephen's danger and peril, and he was looking down to comfort him. Stephen made one more appeal to those enemies of Jesus, when he said, "Behold, I see the heavens opened, and the Son of man standing on the right hand of God." But they would not listen. They put their fingers in their ears and rushed upon him again even more fiercely than before. The riotous scene was soon transferred to the street, as Stephen was dragged and pushed along through the city and through one of the gates in the city wall, now called St. Stephen's gate, in memory of this sad event. Some of the Sanhedrin went to witness the stoning which they had ordered. Stoning to death was a Jewish mode of execution. Christ had been put to death according to the Roman custom of crucifixion, because at that time the Sanhedrin had not the power to condemn to death. But in the time of Stephen matters had temporarily changed, as we know from sources outside the Bible, that confirm accuracy in recording these two executions.

Preparations for the stoning were made by those who were to engage in it, by stripping themselves of all save one garment. What a murderous sight was that, as if murderers were whetting their knives! Those who were to stone Stephen laid their garments at the feet of a young man named Saul, one of the judges who had voted he should die, of whom we shall learn more later. (Acts 26: 10). He seems to have been in charge of the execution. As was the custom, Stephen, as the culprit, was stripped of all his clothing, save a cloth about his loins, and was carried to a scaffolding about ten feet high and thrown violently to the ground. This was done by the first witness in the trial. The second witness then cast the first stone, aiming it at his breast, after which the bystanders took up stones and stoned him to death. The dying words of Stephen rose in clear tones above the angry imprecations of the crowd. They were a prayer to God in behalf of those who were taking his life, "Lord, lay not this sin to their charge." How did Stephen learn so to pray? He had either heard the dying prayer of Jesus, "Father, forgive them, they know not what they do," or he had been told of it by Peter or John. "Love your enemies and pray for them that persecute you" (Matt. 5: 44, 45). Jesus had taught, and Stephen had perfectly learned the lesson. He "fell on sleep," the sleep of the just. Death was to him only to be "absent from the body, present with the Lord."

If the soul can look back upon the body which it long inhabited, Stephen saw his body being lovingly cared for by the friends of Jesus, carried in honor to the grave by the other deacons of the church, or perhaps by the apostles themselves. Killing Christians has never been a successful way of checking the growth of Christianity. From the first "the blood of the martyrs has been the seed of the church."

Built into the foundations of a new church at Komatsu, Japan, are two hundred stones, which were thrown at the Christians, or into their premises, by the enemies of the new faith. The opposition has not hindered the work, but has rather, in other ways than this material method, aided in the establishment of the truth. The church at Imabari, of which the Komatsu church is an out-station, now numbers two hundred and thirty members, and at a recent meeting of the women, one hundred and thirty were present.

They gnashed on him with their teeth. When men answer arguments with their teeth, instead of their tongues, they confess themselves beaten in reasoning. The brute's argument of force is unworthy of a man. For any one to give way to anger, and especially judges on the bench, is as pitiful as to see them lose self-control through drink. Anger is indeed mental intoxication. I once knew a rich manufacturer who had not learned self-control in youth, and so when he came to have a thousand employees, he showed such uncontrollable anger before them, that even his lowest servant looked down on him with pity, if not contempt.

Better is he that ruleth his spirit than he that taketh a city (Prov. 16: 32). We shall find in this lesson a yet greater soul victory, but even this lesser battle for self-control is oftener lost than won. Contrast Stephen's self-possession in this scene with the frantic judges, and say which example you will follow. In the early Christian church, John, Patriarch of Alexandria, and Nicetas, a Christian mayor, had an angry controversy about some rights of the poor, which the Patriarch championed. They parted in bitterness, but as sunset drew near the Patriarch was softened by remembering the text, "Let not the sun go down upon your wrath" (Eph. 4: 26), and sent a messenger to say to Nicetas, "O sir, the sun is going down." He understood the hint, and responded with a reconciliation, in which he yielded his claims in favor of the poor. Even though one who is in the right must yield, if it be a right and not the right, let it be done. But, in any case, let us subdue anger as an animal that must not rule a man.

While we subdue anger so far as it relates to persons, let us not lessen, but strengthen, that righteous indignation at wrong-doing which the Bible not only commends but commands, and of which we need more, rather than less (Psa. 119: 104; Rev. 2: 6). One of the commandments—there are more Spirit in us and 'look up and not down,' we cannot have the open vision of Jesus." Sometimes in our day, a dying saint has exclaimed: "I have seen him;" but most of them must sail till the clouds of death have rolled away, by which the sailors call "dead reckoning," without the sight of the land, but with the Bible and the Holy Spirit as chart and compass which is enough. A steamer sailing from Martha's Vineyard to Nantucket ran into a fog, but continued at good speed blowing her whistle every two minutes to avoid collision. Running by chart and compass for an hour, with no sight of the sun to correct the reckoning, the buoy was found with surprising accuracy. Then, after a half hour's run, the buoy off Tuckermuck was found at exactly the right distance. The captain had learned just how much to allow for the wind and tide by steering by chart and compass, even when sun and shores were in sight, and so was able to do the same in thick weather. Even the spiritual vision of Christ is sometimes lost through sickness or other causes. The like Christ, in the darkness of Calvary, when the vision the father was lost, we may hold on our course by faith and conviction, crying: "My God," even when we seem to be forsaken.

Behold, I see the heavens opened. . . . They closed their ears. Some men make the most of the wonderful "harp of the senses," that God has given us, and others abuse or misuse or only half use them. The trained eye of the sportsman sees game and fish in forest and stream, where the unskilled see only water and wood. When a lady said to a painter, whose landscape painting she was viewing: "I don't see all that in nature," he quickly replied: "Don't you wish you could?" So Stephen made better use of his eyes and ears and tongue than his more educated judges. He used his tongue to proclaim great truths to which the whole world no longer listens, and with spiritually quickened vision saw Christ and proclaimed him. On the other hand, his judges shut off their tongues with their teeth and stopped their ears with their hands, which last they used not for the handclasp of brotherhood, but as if they had been claw of beast made to destroy. We may not actually see Christ with the outward eye, but as truly as some development of the "musical ear" can hear melodies that others cannot enjoy; by spiritual perception, the pure heart can see God in his works and Word to a degree that neither the natural eye nor the natural mind can see him. It is to this spiritual ear (Rev. 3: 6) that that assurance, so often postponed to heaven, really applies, that the Spirit reveals riches to the spiritual, that eye hath not seen nor mind conceived (I. Cor. 2: 9-11). This is our way to look into heaven. Marconi claims to have sent the letter S across the Atlantic by wireless telegraphy. There are promises that even pictures are to be so transferred. If God has made the air so wonderful that through its waves one continent can speak to another, can even see the other, perhaps, why should we doubt that he can make a soul so spiritual that it can hear and see the Father of spirits?

Spirit with spirit can meet; Closer is he than breathing, and nearer than hands and feet. TENNYSON.

"THEY STONED STEPHEN, CALLING UPON THE LORD"

than ten—is: "Ye that love the Lord, hate evil" (Psa. 97: 10). Dr. Thomas Arnold, greatest of modern teachers, used to say: "I have heard enough of boys that love God. Command me to a boy that not only loves God, but hates the devil." In contrast with the Sanhedrin judges, angry at good deeds, we may well cultivate in the very Sunday School a Christian citizenship that will grow up to consume with righteous indignation the wrong-doing in business and politics and pleasure that often goes unwhipped of justice. But first of all, let us bring our unruly spirits under the rule of Christ, who subdues by transforming them. There is no complete "self-control" except where "self" is controlled by Christ. Receive him as both Saviour and King.

He, being full of the Holy Spirit, looked up steadfastly into heaven and saw Jesus standing. Here are three secrets of Stephen's peace: the fullness of the Spirit, the upward look, the vision of Jesus. Jesus was not yet sitting as Judge, as if his work on earth was done, but standing, as one still at work for the world and on guard over his people.

The promise that the Holy Spirit should be a "Comforter" was put to a supreme test in the agonizing trial and death of this first Christian martyr. Unjustly condemned to die, surrounded by an angry mob, his face was still "as the face of an angel" because he saw beyond his slayers his Saviour; because he looked, not down to the grave, to which his body would soon be borne, but up to the sky, to which his soul would fly; because, most of all, his human spirit was filled with the Holy Spirit. The storms that would have made his soul a troubled sea were stilled by the Holy Spirit, even as Jesus had calmed Galilee.

But some one says: "Though we may have the Holy quoted from David, who made the prayer as a young man entering the gates of life: "Into thy hands I commend my spirit" (Ps. 31: 5). Many are anxious lest they should lack "dying grace." The saintly John Bunyan, when he was in Bedford Jail, suffered a fear of death in this form: He was afraid that he would be afraid to die, and so dishonor God. His fears were vain, as they have proved with other eminent men, for he died as bravely as he lived.

Here is a good story of a boy, who at the gates of life triumphed over fears and sins by prayer. In a children's meeting, a manly little boy, really anxious to be a Christian, said: "But I can't, for all the boys swear and do bad things, and I can't go off by myself; I like to have fun with the boys!" He was asked to repeat the Lord's Prayer, and when he came to the words: "Deliver us from evil," the worker interrupted him by asking: "Who is it that we ask to do that?" "Our Father." "Can he do it?" A moment only the boy hesitated, and then said: "Yes, he can, and will." "Can't you trust him, then, to deliver you from evil?" "Yes." "Will you trust him one week to keep you from swearing, and doing other things that will grieve him, and when you are tempted, just whisper in his ear: 'Deliver me from evil?'" Tears came in his eyes, as he gave his hand with his promise. The next week, one of the first to greet the evangelist was the little boy. He was asked: "Well, my boy, how has the week been?" "All right," he said brightly; then, lowering his voice: "But two times I forgot to whisper, and got mad and swore." After a little talk about repenting when we have done wrong, and have to repent, he was asked: "Can you not trust the Father to keep you now?" "Oh! yes," he said; "for it wasn't hard only them two times, and then I forgot to whisper."

Prince Henry's Visit

ALL hail! Prince of Prussia, all hail!! The Republic rejoices over the advent of royalty with glad acclaim!!! Thunder out your salvos, ye mighty guns! Ring out your merry notes, ye bells from a thousand cathedrals! Spread your banquets with rarest viands and most costly delicacies, ye great metropolitan cities of the Union! Let all Europe witness our national welcome to this favored son of one of her royal courts. His coming gives men assurance of the growth of international fraternization. Bonds of friendship become stronger by all such interchange of courtesies. It tends to conserve the great interests of peace, prosperity and commerce, and universal good will. It is infinitely better for nations thus to cultivate harmony, and study how to avert the horrors of war, even at a vast expense of entertaining, than have strained relations. It intimates to us the gradual approach of that blessed era when the temple of Janus will be closed forever, and sword and spear shall be beaten into the implements of industry. America can well afford to give Prince Henry this splendid reception when we recall the heroes of the dear fatherland who rushed to battle in our dread Armageddon, whose war cry was, "I fights mit Siegel," or "I fights mit Mosby," and no more gallant troop was known than the German-Americans. Nor does this great Republic, with its 86,000,000 of population, now so prosperous and great in its resources, hold among its citizens any class more peaceful, industrious, loyal and law-abiding than the naturalized sons of Germany! All hail, Prince Henry!

The European press speaks of the rich gifts of gold and precious jewels that have been purchased by Prince Henry to bestow upon some favored Americans. How ancient the custom and how expressive of having friendly relations even more strongly cemented. Sheba's royal Queen brought to King Solomon gifts of precious stones, gold, and of spices of great store; long trains of camels came burdened with treasure and were laid down at the palace of Israel's sovereign. When she returned to her own land Solomon gave to her all she desired, and also from his royal bounty gifts in abundance. When Ulysses S. Grant returned from his tour around the world, one of the greatest generals of all history, he brought with him not only the expressed homage of all the kingdoms of the earth, but the most costly gifts that could be presented. It will be one of our most pleasant and gracious acts to fully reciprocate the Prince's famous visit and send back to the dear old Fatherland tokens of America's friendship, becoming the wealthiest nation on the face of the globe, and the mightiest Republic that ever rose on the border of Time's immensity. But the bond that will bind Germany to America will be stronger than bonds of golden gifts; it will be the heart to heart cementing by the God of Nations, whose name and nature is Love.

When the Prince of Wales, now King Edward VII, visited America in 1861, the reception given him from all our municipalities, and the numerous expressions of delight at being able to give to the beloved Victoria assurances of our personal esteem for her who filled the throne, and whose reign goes down into history as the most illustrious of all the great sovereigns of England, her heart and that of all her subjects rejoiced. That occasion endeared America to the other country and ever since the relations between Great Britain have been stronger, so that in our late Spanish-American conflict she was our strongest ally. Even so in the present case, Emperor William will not fail to note our generous reception of Prince Henry. It all tends to hasten on the dawn of that glad era foretold by the poet:

When the war drum throbs no longer, and the battle flags are furled
In the Parliament of Man, the Federation of the World.

Welcome, thrice welcome, Prince Henry!

How Shall a Christian Dress?

THE thought that there should be some separating badge, so to speak, in the dress of Christians—something distinctive, and in its way a protest against the vanities of the world and the vagaries of fashion, has often come to devout souls. It is suggested anew to our readers this week, by one of them, who asks the question point-blank of the Editor. In these days, and in modern circumstances, it is hardly possible to answer this inquiry in a concrete way. The effort to reply to it has been made for centuries, in the garb of different monastic orders; in the white cap and sweeping veil of the nun; in the robe and girdle of the monk; in the broad-brimmed hat and dove-colored gown of the Friends; in the close-fitting cap and prim neatness of the Shakers, and in the dress of Amish, Dunkards, Mennonites, and other Christian sects. There are farming districts in Pennsylvania and West Virginia, where men and women dress with exceeding simplicity, according to a rule which forbids all trimming, and even ordains hooks-and-eyes instead of buttons, as a fastening for coats and other garments.

But, while some good people may derive much strength from putting on a uniform, we do not find any warrant for their procedure in the Word of God. Our Saviour, when upon earth, was habited in the ordinary dress of the Jewish peasant. His immediate followers served him in the costumes of their callings. What we do find in the Bible, both in the Old and the New Testament, is rather in the spirit than in the letter. Excessive devotion to dress is condemned, because it is a proof of care for the outward man that perishes, and of indifference to the needs of the soul. In themselves, brodered garments and pearls and ornaments and goodly apparel are not wrong; they are only wrong when they become an interference with spiritual growth. There is absolutely no connection whatever between saintliness and singularity.

A Christian woman should aim to be pleasing. To this end, she should be spotlessly dainty in her clothing, if she can. Exquisite neatness is a great distinction. Her dress may conform in some degree to the prevailing mode, and yet not give her very much anxious thought. It is just as easy to dress as your acquaintances do, as to take up a style so opposite theirs that it excites remark. There is no merit in a rusty gown or a shabby hat, unless you can afford no other, in which case, you should be sufficiently independent to remember that your dress is nobody's business but your own. To tell the truth, people in general are much less concerned about what we wear, than we are ourselves.

A Good Day

A GOOD day is one that accomplishes something positive in a religious way. You will pass five hundred or a thousand men in the street. They will all, in a very short time, be in eternity. Over which one of the five hundred men that you met to-day, did you exert a positively religious influence? A merchant comes in from Chicago to buy a bill of goods. But that is only a subordinate fact in that man's history. God sent him there, perhaps, to see what you would do for his soul. Ask him where he goes to church; and if he goes to church you will immediately have a line of influence between your heart and his. If he goes nowhere to church, then you have a point at which, in a courteous manner, you may move upon his soul. You may go into a young man's store and find him discouraged. His countenance is clouded. Ask what is the matter. Tell him of your own early struggles, and how, by the grace of God, you got out of them. Stop on your way to and from business, at the houses of suffering and sickness. One "Good-morning," or "Good-evening," may bring comfort and heaven to a suffering soul. That is a good day in which you make some one happy. It is astonishing how little it takes to make one happy. Feel that the day is wasted in which you have not succeeded in this.

Life Plans

A NOBLE ideal and confident expectation of approximating to it, is an infallible defence. The artist completes in his mind the great thought that he wishes to transfer to the canvas or the marble before he takes up the crayon or the chisel. The architect plans out the entire structure before he orders the workmen to begin; and though there may for a long while seem to be nothing but blundering and rudeness, he has in his mind every Corinthian wreath and Gothic arch and Byzantine capital. The poet arranges the entire plot before he begins to chime the first canto of tingling rhythms. And yet, strange to say, there are men who attempt to build their character without knowing whether in the end it shall be a rude Tartar's or a St. Mark's of Venice—men who begin to write an intricate poem of their lives without knowing where it shall be a Homer's Odyssey or a rhymester's botch.

Nine hundred and ninety-nine men out of a thousand are living without any great life-plot. Booted and spurred and plumed, they urge their swift courser on the hottest haste. I ask: "Halloo, man, whither away?" His response is, "Nowhere." Rush into the busy street or store of many a one, and taking the plane out of a man's hand and laying down the yard-stick, say: "What man, is all this about—so much stir and sweat?" The reply will stumble and break down between teeth and lips. Every day's duty ought only to be the filling up of the main plan of existence.

Workers in the Field

—LUCIAN KNIGHT, one of the editors of the Atlanta Constitution, has left secular journalism to enter the ministry.

—MAJOR COLE has been conducting a very successful series of evangelistic meetings at Ottawa Kan. Up to January 1, nearly 400 persons had professed conversion.

—EVANGELIST HUGH W. BROWN lately conducted a number of largely attended meetings in the Central Baptist Church, Los Angeles, Calif. There were many baptisms and a large number of accessions to the church.

—IRA D. SANKEY has lately been speaking to great audiences at Brocton and Rochester, under the auspices of Y. M. C. A. His reminiscences of Moody and his renderings of the old Gospel hymns never fail to interest these gatherings.

—UNION MEETINGS have been held at Mason City, under the leadership of Revs. W. N. Conoley, St. Louis, Mo. and C. F. Pugh, of Braceville, Ill., crowding the Presbyterian Church for eight successive evenings, and many have been brought into the fold.

—REV. W. H. SHAWGER, of Dover, N. J., who resigned the pastorate of the First Baptist Church in that city last year, has lately been co-operating with Rev. F. B. Williams of Brookline, Pa., in the conduct of successful meetings in First Baptist Church there. A notable awakening is reported.

—PROF. STEPHEN D. PEET, editor of the American Aquarian, is now preparing a series of books on "Prehistoric America," which will embrace the whole continent. The author is widely recognized as the ablest authority in the country on all matters relating to the mound-builders, cliff-dwellers, and other prehistoric peoples of America.

—REV. H. C. FOX, of the Freehold, N. J., Presbyterian Church, and other pastors in that place, with the congregations, have lately had a series of union revival gatherings under the direction of the Rev. Francis Edward Smiley a Prof. John L. McKinsey. The Bible readings were especially helpful. The evangelists are now laboring in Delaware, C.

—EVANGELISTS HART and MAGANN, of St. Louis, have just closed two remarkable meetings, the first at Streator, Ill., in the First M. E. Church. During meetings lasting one month, over five hundred people knelt at the altars for prayer. The other meeting was held in the First M. E. Church, Peoria, Ill. Dr. R. E. Buckey, pastor. Five hundred and seven presented themselves at the altar as seekers.

—FRANKLIN GAYLORD, a young American, to whose efforts was largely due the introduction in Russia of the Y. M. C. A. in a modified form, has just been signally honored by the Czar, who has bestowed upon him a decoration. The organization in St. Petersburg, which he helped found, is known as the Russian Society for the Moral and Physical Development of Young Men.

—REV. ROBERT E. LAYFIELD has just closed a course of union meetings in which the four churches of Touganoxi, Tex., joined. They lasted twenty-two days, and 146 persons confessed Christ. The pastors, who heartily approved and aided Mr. Layfield's work, were Rev. O. A. Palmer (Congregational), Rev. W. H. Embry (Christian), Rev. J. P. Land (Methodist), and J. P. Ballard and Rebecca T. Ballard (Friends' Church).

—REV. H. S. BLISS, who was lately chosen as President of the American College in Beyrouth, succeeds his venerable father, the Rev. Dr. Daniel Bliss, who has held that position for nearly forty years. Dr. Bliss is now in his seventy-ninth year, and his great age has compelled him at last to lay down the responsibilities he has so faithfully borne. He went to Syria as a missionary half a century ago, and was the friend and associate of Dr. Thompson, author of the famous work The Land and the Book. He was one of the first advocates of education for the Oriental races, and with Dr. Thompson and a few associates, planned and founded the American College in Beyrouth, which afterward became a landmark of missionary enterprise for the whole world. It began with sixteen students, and now has hundreds from Jerusalem, Cairo, Bagdad, Damascus, Nazareth, Cyprus, and other cities.

SWEDEN'S NEGLECTED CHILDREN

800,000 UNDER FIFTEEN YEARS, WHO NEVER ATTEND SUNDAY SCHOOL

THE Sunday School movement in Sweden was not begun until 1834, when it was instituted through the influence of a Wesleyan minister, Rev. George Scott, who had been appointed to the spiritual oversight of English-speaking families in Stockholm. Under his preaching, a young painter, C. L. Tellstrom, was converted, and this young man, who afterwards was sent as the first missionary to the Lapps in the most northerly part of the country, started the first Sunday School in Stockholm. When he went away, the school was discontinued.

Accounts of such a new work spread to other places in the country; and various endeavors were put forth to organize Sunday Schools here and there, but without much success. All religious activities outside the State church were considered dangerous, and, therefore, prohibited; people who dared to come together under other auspices to read the Scriptures, to sing and to pray, were persecuted.

PER PALMQVIST

In the year 1851, a new starting-point in Sunday School work was reached. Three young men—brethren—Gustaf, Johannes and Per Palmqvist, went to London to see the World's Exposition. They met in that city, the Wesleyan minister, who had been exiled in 1842, and he took them to a Sunday School. Work like this they never had seen before; and it made upon them a strong and abiding impression. When they went home to Sweden, they organized a Sunday School. It was on Christmas eve, 1851, that this school to teach Christ to little children came into existence; and from that period we can date regular Sunday School work in Sweden. That work has developed wonderfully and now we have Sunday Schools in all Swedish cities and towns and in many villages, and the demand for new schools increases every year. Sunday School unions in different parts of the country have employed missionaries and these have accomplished much good traveling around organizing schools, arranging classes of instruction for teachers, and in every possible way encouraging and enlarging the work. We have in Sweden, at present, about 20,000 teachers and 250,000 children in the Sunday Schools. There are, however, some 800,000 children under fifteen years of age, who never attend a Sunday School. Here is a wide field for much work for the Master. Doors are opening everywhere, and the Macedonian cry is heard day after day. The Spirit of God is waking up the lands in the far North—the lands of the Midnight sun.

First of all, we need ministers—well prepared and educated ministers—that we may send them out into the white field. To prepare such ministers we must have a good seminary or theological school, where young men can be educated for life-work as preachers and teachers. As people here are, for the most part, very poor, without any means to support themselves during the time of attendance upon such a school, it follows that there must have a free dormitory for them, as well as a house for teachers. I am pointed to solicit funds for the establishing of such an institution. Readers of this journal, who wish to know about this most important work or desire to contribute to it, can address me, care of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York. Prompt response and appreciative acknowledgments will be made.

One of the pictures on this page shows the house in which Sweden's first Sunday School was organized. In Vadstena Castle, the students' missionary conference was held three years ago. Sweden makes good provision for secular education. May equal opportunities for spiritual instruction be provided through all the land.

OUR COMPLETE COURSE IN SHORTHAND

ISAAC PITMAN'S 20th CENTURY REVISION
By Special Arrangement with Isaac

LESSON IV.

32. In a combination of consonants, the first descending stroke usually rests on the line; thus,

33. An ascending stroke beginning a combination should commence on the line; thus,

34. A horizontal stroke followed by an ascending stroke is written on the line; thus,

35. When a straight consonant is repeated, there must be no break between the two letters; thus,

36. A curved consonant is repeated thus,

CH AND UPWARD R.

37. As already pointed out, ch is always a downstroke, and ay always an upstroke; moreover, when ch and r stand alone, ch slopes a little from the perpendicular, and r slopes a little from the horizontal; thus / ch, / r. The stroke naturally takes these slopes when struck downward and upward, respectively.

38. When ch and r are joined to other strokes, they are distinguished by the direction of the stroke, and the amount of slope is of no importance; thus,

LONG VOWELS BETWEEN TWO CONSONANTS

39. FIRST and SECOND-PLACE long vowels, when occurring between two consonants, are written after the first stroke; as / talk, / gate. But in order to avoid an awkward position for the sign, THIRD PLACE vowels are written before the second stroke; as / team, / teach, / read. The vowel is still in the third place, as indicated in the following diagram:

Grammalogues

40. Frequently occurring words are expressed in shorthand by one of their letters, as / for, / be. These words are called grammalogues or letter-words and the shorthand characters that represent them are called logograms, or word-letters. At the head of the next and following Exercises some grammalogues are given which should be committed to memory. These characters are generally written on the line, but often above or through it. The position in which they should be written is indicated thus: (1) above the line; (3) through the line; all others rest on the line.

41. The succeeding Exercises when in shorthand are to be transcribed in longhand; when in ordinary print they are to be written in shorthand.

Exercise 6

The full stop is represented by a small cross; thus x

Exercise 7

In this and following Exercises (until the rules on the subject are reached), the student is directed by a small capital letter when to write the letters L, R, and H downward. Grammalogues are printed in italics.

1. Balm, laugh, palm; ball, yawl, maul, cawed.
2. Shape, bake, mare, fame, Hague; polo, boat, joke, foal.
3. Peek, deer, veal, leap, kneel; boot, booth, rude, tooth.
4. Pope, coal, chalk, fair, zeal, Hawk, vogue, cage, nail.
5. Feed, liege, beam, laud, poach, both, boom, shore.
6. Wreath, lore, ream, weep, ware, thief, zero, sheep.
7. The page may see the mail.
8. They saw the thief who tore the robe.
9. Though he jeer, they may name the knave.
10. Folk all say he may be the rogue.
11. They know the doom he may loathe.
12. He may be no hero.

REVIEW

1. How are joined consonants written?
2. Show by examples how / and sh are written when joined to other consonants.
3. What is usually the position of the first descending stroke in a combination?
4. State the position of an ascending stroke commencing a combination?
5. Show how a horizontal stroke is written when followed by a descending stroke, and when followed by an ascending stroke.
6. How are straight strokes repeated? Give examples.
7. State the distinction between ch and upward r (a) when standing alone; (b) when joined to other consonants.
8. Indicate by figures the respective positions of the first, second, and third-place long vowels between the following consonants.

9. Define a grammalogue and a logogram.

Short Vowels

42. In addition to the six long vowel sounds, there are corresponding short vowel sounds in English, which are heard respectively in the words pat, pet, pit, not, nut, foot. The vocal organs occupy nearly the same positions in the production of these sounds as in the utterance of the long vowels: palm, pate, peat, nought, note, food, but the short vowels are pronounced more rapidly, thus:

The short sound of ah in palm is a (say ah quickly) in pat. The short sound of eh in pate is e (say eh quickly) in pet. The short sound of ee in peat is i (say ee quickly) in pit. The short sound of aw in nought is o (say aw quickly) in not. The short sound of oh in note is nearly u (uh) in nut. The short sound of oo in food (say oo quickly) is oo in foot.

By drawing a word containing a short vowel, the corresponding long vowel will be heard. Compare pick, peek; cut, caul.

43. Similar signs are employed for the short as for the long vowels, namely, dots and dashes; but the signs for the short vowels are written lightly, in order to indicate their short and lighter sound, thus:

Sound	as in	Sign	Sound	as in	Sign
ă	that	·	ō	not	·
ĕ	pen	·	ū	much	·
ĭ	is	·	ŭ	good	·

The order of the short vowels may be remembered by saying the following sentence:

That pen is not much good.

The student is recommended to purchase the Key to the Shorthand Instructor, which forms a Key to all the Exercises appearing in these lessons, as well as to all the Review Questions. It is an indispensable companion for all students mastering the art without teacher. The price of the Key is 50c., and all orders should be sent to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD office. Lesson No. V. will appear in the issue of March 5.

BY MARGARET E

SANGSTER

MORE and more," said the mother, taking off her spectacles and carefully laying them in the case. "Do I come back for comfort, help and daily food to the dear old Book. There is nothing that compares with it, nothing so rich in suggestion so wonderful, so full of music and poetry. Other books tire one; this Book is always revealing new depths of beauty."

One of the sweet old chapters," sang Doris, turning round on the piano stool. "Mother, did you always use for the Bible as you do now? When you were young and thoughtless, like me, were you so fond of it, that it was all-sufficient for your happiness to have it near your hand?"

"Daughter, you ask a question I cannot answer. As a child, I was in the habit of committing chapters to memory; Psalms, Proverbs, bits of Deuteronomy and Isaiah, and the Gospels were fixed in my mind at an early age. Children are made to memorize more Scripture than they do at present. But my love and appreciation were only planted then. They have come to flower since. In times of sorrow and loneliness, the Bible has been my companion. If I were cast away on a desert island, and had the dear old Book, I should not be lonely."

"Well," said Dora, "I wish I had your secret."

"It is twofold, dearest Dora. Read your Bible every day. Not merely in a perfunctory way, but earnestly looking for it for a message and meaning that will be your very own. Read it aloud, like to hear as well as to see the Lord. Study a part of it, so that it will become interwoven with your thoughts as you go about your work. Use different books for different moods. Give it your whole attention. Half the Bible reading in the world is so carelessly done, that it might as well be omitted entirely."

"Well," said Dora, musingly, "I'll try; but you have mentioned only one part of your secret, mother. What is the other part? You said it was twofold."

"The other," the mother said reverently, "is this. Pray for a blessing. The Word is God's. Ask him to enlighten your eyes; to give you vision; show himself in the page you read. Because the dear old Book from Genesis to Revelation mirrors Christ, it is a panacea for all human need. Prayer opens the heart, so that divine truth enters it; more entirely possesses it. Prayer is the second part of the secret."

ear of Ridicule

"If I do this or the other thing, people will laugh at me," seems a very weak argument to urge when one is confronted with a duty, but it is strong enough to keep many a young man from taking a brave stand for the right. Boys smoke cigarettes, not because they like them, but because companions will jeer if they refuse. Boys use profane words, or disobey their parents, through a silly fear of somebody's mirth, if they are pure of speech, and obedient. And the somebody they dread is one whose opinion is not worth their consideration for a single instant. Let the boy who means to be manly, study to be something bigger than a mere moral coward, a reed shaken by the wind.

The White House Children

What a pleasant thing it is to fancy the young group of children in the White House these wintry days. A jolly, healthy set of little ones, growing up in a Christian household, the youthful Roosevelts are making the old house ring with their cheerful mirth. A large family has among other advantages the opportunity for good times by itself, and while one pities an only child, one envies the children who range along like steps in a row. If you wish to see a beautiful mother, look for a woman who, like Mrs. Roosevelt, is willing to accept without reluctance, the burdens and the honors of maternity, and whose youth and charm is renewed with the advent of every child.

AUNT PRUDENCE PAYSON'S CATCH-ALL

—MOTHER: Stopper on that box, and ask your daughter if the family who has a ring must to give it to a man of your own kind. It is in the box, instead of being lost at the time. (Goes away.)

after dinner, and we discuss the ingredients. Important: When you eat, and discuss, what is fresh!

HAIRIER: There is little demand for cement works at present and it brings very small prices.

—JONAS. Well, I don't blame your wife. Yours is a very old-fashioned name, and your boy will, no doubt, thank you by and by, for giving him some more modern cognomen.

About Chaperones

WHEN you go to the "drive" section of a newspaper, you and your friends (I assume you always go out at night, is it proper to ask your escort in to supper?) The question is asked in good faith. You may be arrested at some stage. So young women should be out driving for pleasure at night with a date, a young man, unless it is his own brother and even then, there is no sense in their remaining out so late. Good-time is absolutely extinct at the moment the riding unchaperoned drives and rides which are still in vogue in some rural communities; never at present in our cities or seashore towns. It is too long, the time coincidentally speaking, in company a young woman alone was a thing of antiquarian interest. Her mother, or a married friend, or a frankly middle-aged squire, must accompany the two, and be an all-forming power there present.

But to me, a daughter, sister, or wife personally known, we grant less than every possible risk or embarrassment.
That is the reason of the unusual effluencies of a nation which has generally been naturalized here, having crossed the seas and come to us from the Old World. It is not that we distrust either our girls or our young men, that we prefer them to take their recreations in groups rather than in duets: it is because society is now very complex, and it can bear the social argument without undue restraint while in other countries present custom is interpreted less profit-ful word, if occasion arises and spirits are too exuberant.

Where, as in villages, in which the young people are all acquainted, there are no difficulties in the intercourse of intercourse may be permitted, and the young people are constantly met. It is pleasanter, to say the least, for a girl in a great city to be accompanied on her various outings by her mother, than to go alone. But we must draw the line everywhere at those primitive customs which permit young people such license as the existence indicates. Moreover, in my opinion, the young people have no right to go on excursions, and I have but one reply, Ne partez pas sans votre mère. It so can help it to do anything so foolish, and so opposed to reason and duty.

an ordinary caller to take leave, and eleven should see shutters closed and lights out. This, too, is in answer to a query.

The Interfering Good Man

"Mr. W. is a part of him and I wouldn't want," said a notable housekeeper. "He is a perfect Miss Nancy, every waking hour the kitchen stands up to the frying pan and the dinner plate, perspiring, getting warm and lively the best of sugar, butter and meat butter. He is always wondering what this or the other thing should be done with to make what remains of the meat make good (just what he has a wonder) and then not see why the soap is used so fast, or the butter does not last longer. No wonder poor Mrs. W. is sick with nervous exhaustion."

It is, indeed, a wonder that she is alive, if she has been married, and how long. The man who is a Miss Norton is thought to wear out the pavement of a street. The father, a better gentleman, and a husband's man, and he lives outside the kitchen closet and the pantry.

Synopsis of the Earlier Chapters

Erastus Winch, a small farmer, finds in his barn early one winter morning the body of a beautiful young woman. At her side is a newborn infant. His wife, Elizabeth, wishes to adopt the child; Winch objects, and a stormy scene follows, in which the wife carries her point. She finds on the body of the deceased a Bible, on the fly leaf of which is inscribed a text and a name. The body of the mother is removed to the undertaker's establishment of Elphalett Dundor, who is ordered by the authorities to bury it at the expense of the town. On the evening before the funeral, a stranger visits the place, and asks to see the dead woman. He proposes to Dundor to pay the expenses of a respectable funeral. Dundor accepts the money under a pledge of secrecy, but proceeds with the pauper's funeral, and keeps the money for himself. Elizabeth Winch names the child Immanuel, from the words of the text in the Bible belonging to the unknown mother. He grows up, adored by Elizabeth, but unnoticed by her husband, till he reaches the age of five years. Winch then decides that the boy is old enough to be of use about the farm. He treats him so harshly that the child runs away and finds a refuge in the home of Moses Armitage, an old man, who fancies he sees in him a resemblance to his own dead son. Moses Armitage bears that his brother is dead, and goes to the lawyer employed by the brother to learn the particulars. He hears that his brother was enormously rich when he died, but left no will. His only surviving child was a daughter, who, having married against her father's wish, had been cast off. In tracing her, he discovers that she was the woman who had died in the barn. The child Immanuel, whom he had sheltered, was consequently his own nephew and the heir-at-law to Moses Armitage's brother's vast property. In the course of his investigation he visits the Winch home, and arrives with the boy just as Elizabeth, worn and worried by the loss of Immanuel, is dying. Before her death, she directs that the Bible, found on Immanuel's mother's body, be given to him.

THE undertaker's mention of the mysterious man who paid for the tramp's funeral caused Mr. Smalley to prick up his ears.

"Describe this person carefully, if you please," said Mr. Smalley, narrowing his lips to a mere slit. "Was he, for example, a tall man, and young? say about five and twenty?"

"No, sir," said Mr. Dundor, glibly; "he was short—quite short; no taller than yourself, sir. Of a spare habit, smooth face, black eyes, and a hooked nose. He was, I should say, fifty years of age if he was a day. Yes, sir, I remember him very well."

"Did this person betray any mark of interest in the deceased?" demanded Mr. Smalley, leaning forward and concentrating his penetrating eyes full upon Mr. Dundor's perturbed countenance.

That individual wiped his damp forehead with a large, black-bordered handkerchief. "Well—er—he—"

"Think carefully," snapped Mr. Smalley, "and give us all the facts."

"Well, yes," stammered the other, "I—I may say at he did. I was engaged in setting up a—a casket for the burial. The remains was, you understand, to be buried by the town; in the usual manner, you understand. Nothin' stylish ner elegant about a pauper's coffin, an' mighty little profit to the trade. Why, I've conducted the county fun'rals in this 'ere deestrick fer—"

"Never mind that," interrupted the lawyer, frowning. "This person said what—just what, if you please?"

"Well, I don't know as I c'n recall the exact words," said Mr. Dundor, rolling up his eyes to the ceiling with a candid air; "the gentleman gave me to understand that he was willin' to defray the fun'rals expenses, if I would keep the matter private. I couldn't see no real objection to what he proposed, so I consented, an' he paid me right down for a first-class article. I had a line of extra fine sample goods ready set up, as it happened, so I—I—"

"You buried the woman, and kept the matter quiet, as the gentleman desired," said Mr. Smalley, quickly. "Very good; very good indeed. Now," he paused, and again fixed the undertaker with his ferret eyes, "did the gentleman give you or leave behind him any trace of his identity? His card, say, or—"

"I had almost forgotten the circumstance," whispered Mr. Dundor, "but I recall now that the gentleman did drop his handkerchief. He pulled it out of his pocket along with—"

"Was there a name on it?"

"Yes, sir; I believe there was. I—"

"Have you the article in question in your possession?"

Mr. Dundor heaved a long sigh of relief. "I see what you're tryin' to get at," he said, recovering something of his air of professional authority. "As cor'ner of this 'ere deestrick an' undertaker, I've found that a close mouth often makes a fat pocket—eh?"

"You'll lose nothing by this," said the lawyer, tersely. "Produce the article, if you please."

Mr. Dundor tiptoed across the room, where he rummaged a long time among piles of rustling papers in his desk. "I'm a close man," he murmured, as he peered at the lawyer over the upraised lid, "close an' cautious when it comes to dealin' with the b'reaved." He shut the desk, locked it with deliberation, and displayed a small packet, neatly tied with black cord.

Mr. Smalley tore it open with some impatience, and glanced at the name embroidered in one corner of the square of white cambric. "Very good," he said noncommittally. "I will, if you please, retain this bit of—ah—evidence."

Somewhat later in the day, Mr. Smalley summed up the interesting data he had secured for the benefit of Moses Armitage. "Of course the evidence is purely circumstantial," he concluded; "and were you disposed to press your claims against those of the child, I have no doubt you would win your suit. But I may say that personally I have no doubt regarding the identity of the child. This handkerchief now, bearing the name of Jonas Armitage, would seem to point to the fact that my late lamented client, actuated by a very commendable paternal interest in the deceased, visited this place and provided for the disposition of the remains in a manner suited to his station in life. Very charitable indeed, it seems to me, considering the relations which had previously existed between—"

"Disgusting!" roared Moses Armitage, his ruddy face growing ruddier with honest wrath. "He had murdered her!"

Mr. Smalley glanced disapprovingly at the burly figure of his client. "You are, of course, entitled to your own opinion on that point," he said suavely. "Now, if you choose to acknowledge this child as your brother's grandchild, it will be necessary to take the usual legal steps in the matter, after which you will assume your duties as his guardian. I trust you will be guided by—er—prudence in the training of this young person. He will one day hold great power in his hands. In point of fact, we may say that money is the chief power in the world to-day; a proper understanding of this, and—er—"

The blue eyes of the listener wore so distant and abstracted a look that the lawyer left his sentence trailing in mid air. He was not in the habit of wasting his valuable advice on unheeding ears.

The next day the idlers at the village station witnessed the departure of three persons on the morning train. They were "Ol' Mose" Armitage, from the back hill-road, the mysterious Mr. Caleb Smalley, and a small boy with a white, scared face and big brown eyes. The train had scarcely pulled out from the station, when a ramshackle buckboard drew up beside the platform.

"How-de-do, Mr. Winch," drawled the station-master, from his easy position on a pile of boxes. "You seem to be in considerable of a hurry this mornin'. You wa'n't calc'latin' to take the train, was you?" He pointed his thumb over his shoulder in the direction of the vanishing trail of smoke, then burst into a discordant "haw-haw!" at sight of the discomfited expression which crept over the face of the man in the buckboard.

"Did they git off?" demanded Winch.

"Depends on who yer talkin' 'bout," responded the man in authority, genially. "Mr. Armitage left us this mornin', likewise the gent 'at's been stoppin' to our hospitable frien', Sniders, an' the boy. 'Twa'n't them you was wantin' to see, was it?"—for the other was biting his nails and scowling. "I heerd you got paid han'some fer yer well-known kin'ness to the kid. Sakes, what luck some folks do hev!"

"I ain't got all I'm goin' to hev, not by a long shot!" snapped Winch. "'Tain't a patch on what I'd ought to ha' got. I wuz intendin' to hol' the boy fer a spell till they come to their senses an' give me my rights. An' now they've gone—hang em!"

The Gospel for Boys

A BOOK FOR ALL WORKERS WITH BOYS

The boy problem in the Sunday-school. What it means and how to meet it. Some startling facts and figures. Book SENT FREE to Sunday-school Superintendents.

Why are there two or three girls to one boy in the Sunday-school between the ages of 12 and 16, and why do boys who come care little for the school? Deals with the difficulty from the boy's standpoint. Treats of needs the school does not supply. Explains how we misunderstand boys and they misunderstand us. Tells of tongues that interpret truth into language wherein boys are born, and makes it helpful and enjoyable to them. A neglected field of Christian work at our door requiring special equipment and training, with suggestions as to this. A practical consideration of the questions involved, by David C. Cook, together with statistics and letters of advice from prominent Sunday-school workers. Price, in flexible cloth binding, 20 cents. All teachers of boys should have it. A copy will be sent free, postpaid, to any Sunday-school superintendent who writes stating that he is such.

MORE LAMPS IN THE OLD LIGHTHOUSE

Many Donors Sending in their Consecrated Dollar Pledges for the Bowery Mission

RESPONSES are still coming in from far and near in aid of the movement to extend the rescue and soul-winning work of the old Bowery Mission. With every letter comes a pledge, in which the sender expresses practical sympathy with the work of the Mission. Here are some of the pledges:

H. and E., Marieville, Que. Enclosed please find $2, being our pledge for 1922 for two more lights in the "Old Gospel Lighthouse," to the glory of God. May he also bless the "lower lights," which are kept burning through your instrumentality, to guide sinking souls into the heavenly harbor.

Mrs. John T. O. and Mrs. M. U. Van C., Catskill, N. Y. Best of all a loving benediction invoked on your God-blessed work for the some "mother's boys." You have been called of the Father to rescue the perishing, and to comfort the bowed down. God bless you more and more is the earnest prayer of our hearts.

Rev. and Mrs. O. Halvorsen, Clear Lake, Ia. We hereby send our dollar each to "set up a lamp on the old Gospel Lighthouse." This little gift is sent with our best wishes and earnest prayers that many precious souls may see Christ, the blessed Light of the world, and be happy forever! God bless all your efforts to save precious souls!

H. K., Philadelphia. I thank you very much, In His Name, that you have extended the great privilege to each one of your subscribers of becoming patrons to this noble work. Please find enclosed $1, for which I am to understand that I have become one of the Bowery Mission's patrons. Let me further add, that it will afford me much joy to place on my list for special prayer the success of the above noble work, that its light may continue to shine until many more may be brought to a saving knowledge of the truth as it is in Jesus.

Mr. and Mrs. William S. M., Phila., $2, for the rescue and spiritual work of the Bowery Mission. It is a grand work. May God's blessing rest upon all the workers.

C. H. S., Jerome, Man., Can. Replying to your request for aid for the Bowery Mission and a pledge to give one dollar yearly, I hereby agree to do so if I am spared, by the Lord's will. Please find enclosed the sum of two dollars for the benefit of the Mission.

M. H. L., Stirling, N. J. I herewith enclose one dollar for the Bowery Mission. I am sure the Mission has done much good and led many souls to Christ. It pays for me at least to join in, and drop my mite in this blessed work.

Annie H., Mount Carroll, Ill. I gladly send a dollar for the Bowery Mission. If only there were more like the HERALD, never weary of doing for the poor and needy, how different the world would be.

A. A. J., Bloomfield, N. J. Through the spirit of God, I am at this date pledging myself to contribute at least two dollars per annum toward the Gospel work of the Bowery Mission. I regret that I have not before this taken an interest in this glorious work of the Master, helping those who are walking in our great cities yet in darkness and bringing back those who have gone astray. Please find herewith check for two dollars.

TEETH AND FOOD.

A Help in Time of Need.

Sometimes bad teeth cause illness, particularly when they are not fit to masticate food. In Ada, O., had all of his teeth drawn. He was sick with indigestion and lack of vitality and his teeth were in a bad condition. He expected, with a new complete set of teeth, to regain his health by thoroughly chewing his food, but he had an experience. Instead of improving he continued to lose weight," he says, "until I was a mere skeleton. I tried a number of prepared foods, but none of them helped me until I got Grape-Nuts. The flavor pleased my palate. I soaked the food in cream and got it with it nicely. Within a few days I found that I was not so tired and that I really grew stronger, so I left off all other foods and took only Grape-Nuts. My old time vigor came back and in two weeks I gained 17 pounds. This was possible for I am of spare build. Now I am and feel wonderfully well. As much as I am doing so nicely without teeth I have concluded to wait until my gums finished shrinking before having a set. I don't believe I could have gone through the drain on my system had it not been for Grape-Nuts. There is no doubt about the life-giving and nerve-building force of food. I talk Grape-Nuts to all of my friends." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

The Huguenot Anniversary

Bishop Derrick to Preach the Sermon of the Day at Canterbury Cathedral

IN the latter years of Henry VIII when the English Church was purging itself of the Protestantism of the Northmen, small bands of French-speaking Protestants, the Low Countries sought refuge in England.

BISHOP W. B. DERRICK

They found that refuge in Canterbury. Some of them, already in favor of the city, they obtained a small place for worship and established a church. The year 1550, the centenary of the arrival of the first Huguenots in the Netherlands, The edict issued by Charles V. for establishing of the Inquisition, spread consternation among them, and many fled to England.

land, to secure for themselves and their families a refuge against the storm that was soon to be gathering.

There had also for sometime past been an exodus of Huguenots. These events tended to increase the number and strength of the original small settlement at Canterbury, so much so, that in the year 1550 their small place of worship could no longer receive them, and the crypt of the Cathedral was granted to them for the holding of their religious assemblies. Thus was founded the first church of the foreigners in England. Cranmer was then Archbishop of Canterbury, Cranmer and Cecil, and the Duke of Somerset and Latimer presented so powerful an appeal in behalf of the persecuted refugees that, July 24, 1550, Edward VI. granted to the Protestant strangers a charter, which empowered them to hold their religious assemblies and to manage ecclesiastical matters according to the customs of their own countries.

The portion of the crypt of Canterbury Cathedral which is now used by the French Church Congregation is limited to the parts that lie beneath the south arm of the eastern transept, and extend therefrom as far west as the steps which formerly led down to the crypt from the south arm of the western transept. The present pastor of this church, now called "the Church of the Catacombs," Canterbury Cathedral, is the Rev. R. Barnabas. At an afternoon session of the Ecumenical Conference of Methodists last Fall, Dean Barnabas heard an address by the Rt. Rev. W. B. Derrick, of the African Methodist Episcopal Church of America. The Huguenots have long since passed from beneath the cruel persecutions that drove them to England, but they have cherished the past in their traditions, and Dean Barnabas' soul thrilled under the eloquent words of the stalwart champion of the oppressed freedmen of America. At the urgent solicitation of Dean Barnabas, Bishop Derrick has consented to preach at the three hundred and fifty-second anniversary of the Church of the Catacombs, Canterbury Cathedral.

The anniversary will be honored with the presence of the Lord Mayor and other dignitaries of the city.

The selection of so distinguished a representative of his race as Bishop Derrick, to preach the anniversary sermon at Canterbury, is not surprising to those who know his ability as a preacher, and his striking individuality both in and out of the pulpit. It is recalled that last year, when a few Americans, who were guests of the Hotel St. Ermins, London, went to the landlord and objected to the admission of certain guests who were of African descent, Bishop Derrick being of the number, the landlord replied: "Bishop Derrick has just received a letter from the King expressing gratitude for a letter of condolence sent him in his hour of bereavement. A man who receives such recognition from the King, does us honor by being our guest. These gentlemen are welcome."

That Bishop Derrick should have been selected from among the four hundred delegates to the Canterbury meeting, to preach so important a sermon, goes far to indicate a brighter day for the races of darker hue.

THE JOY OF SERVICE*

The Happiness of the Worker in his Work, a Reward, as well as the Reward Promised at the End

WORK for Christ is a duty that the Christian cannot afford to ignore. Christ insisted upon it with the utmost emphasis. We shall be culpable if we do nothing to promote the evangelization of the world, if we make no effort to win souls for him. It is not necessary that we become preachers, but it is necessary that every one who is depending on Christ for salvation, should try to make the way of salvation plain to some other soul. The merchant, or business man, the mechanic, the girl in business, or the home, has the same duty. To each and to all opportunities come of speaking for Christ and we are responsible for letting them pass unused. If we say only that we belong to Christ and that his religion is a joy and a comfort to us, that may be all that in some circumstances we can do; but how much that may mean! It is testimony, and in every age testimony has proved a mighty force. When we consider how many souls there are around us who need just such help as Christ can give, such testimony may be the precise word that they want. If there is a peace and a rest and a quiet in our lives through our union with Christ, as there should be, it is not unlikely that some poor harassed, worried creature near us may have asked himself why we have the calm that he has not. The disclosure of the secret may be the means of leading him to seek it for himself. At all events, it is a duty that we owe to Christ, that we declare how good he is to us, how much he has done for us.

It would seem that Christ spoke with divine foresight of our day, when he uttered this parable of the talents. He seemed to have specially in mind a time when men of great gifts would be preaching his Gospel and when others, who had no power of eloquence, might be disposed to leave the work entirely to them. Therefore, he introduces into his picture a man of moderate ability, quite an ordinary person, to whom two talents were intrusted, and again another, who had just one talent put into his hands for use. When the time for examination came, the two-talent man could not produce results equal to the man who had used five talents, but his employer was satisfied, and commended him in exactly the same words as he had used to the five-talent man. He had been faithful, he had done the best he could with his capital, and more than that could not be justly expected of him. It was the third man, who had received one talent, and had not used it, who was condemned. If he had made but one talent by trading, we may suppose that he, too, would have received the commendation and reward, for he would have doubled his capital, which was what the others did. The obvious lesson is, that every man is held responsible for the use of the gifts he has, not for those he has not. The more talents we have, the more will be expected of us. When, therefore, a man is converted, he should take stock of himself, and see what power he has that can be used in Christ's service. If he cannot preach, perhaps he can sing; if he can do neither, he can speak to his unconverted friends, or can find some children to whom he can tell the story of the Cross. Speak he must, in some way; try his utmost to win souls, otherwise he will be "an unprofitable servant."

The hope of reward is not the only inducement held out to the servant to work for Christ. Indeed, that might be left out of consideration altogether, if Christ had not explicitly described it. God has so made us that there is a continuous joy in service. It is a remarkable fact that no one can do a kindness to another person, without feeling ever afterwards kindly toward him. It is the doer of the good deed who is blessed in his soul. The recipient may be blessed, too; he may be grateful, and may love his benefactor, but the happy man is the one who has done the deed. This is most emphatically true of Christian work. It reacts on the doer, making him thankful and happy. It may not always be pleasant, it may sometimes require an effort from which we shrink, but in the doing of it, the blessing comes. There is no fact more abundantly proved in this life of ours, than that the greatest happiness comes from sacrifice. The self-indulgent man who lives for himself is never really happy. He becomes selfish, morose, discontented. It is when we forget our own comfort, do not consciously strive after happiness, but try to make some other person happy, that we taste the joy of life. When that effort is directed to the leading of that person into eternal life, of bringing him into contact with Christ, as we are permitted to do, then the joy is multiplied a thousand times by the infinity of the blessing we have been instrumental in bringing to him. We become partakers in that joy, which the apostle describes as having filled the heart of the Saviour himself, who for the joy that was set before him endured the Cross, despising the shame.

A STEADY WORKER

Coffee Works Slow But Sure

Many people use coffee day after day with the idea of the serious work it does with the stomach, bowels, and sometimes with the heart and kidneys. Its work is done slowly, that is, the person affects the nerve a little to day and a little to tomorrow, and finally the nerve cells are broken down and then Nature begins to help.

It is a safe proposition that if a man or woman has headaches, stomach trouble, or nervous ailments come on at intervals, some of them with the food or drink, and the question should be investigated carefully, for this is the best capital anyone can possess. Breaking it down is a piece of cash.

It is easy to leave off coffee if one will take in Food & Tea, properly made, for it has a delicious coffee flavor and a good brown color which changes to a brown when cream is added, and it is the coffee drinker without any of the effects of coffee. On the contrary, the rebuilding of the broken down nerve centers by the food contained in it.

It is a pure food beverage made by the food makers and can be depended absolutely for its purity and the good results that follow its use.

It brings out the flavor and food value. It must be boiled at least 15 minutes after the boiling begins.

Meteors Fell Like Snowflakes

Another Reminiscence, by an Eye-Witness, of the Shower of 1833

I READ in the CHRISTIAN HERALD of January 18, 1902, a statement of the noted meteorite shower in the fall of 1833. I was living with my parents in a village in Western Connecticut, at the time, and was about twelve years of age, and was an eyewitness of that shower. It happened in November, if I recollect rightly. We were living on the National Turnpike, running from Berlin to Litchfield. My father was keeping the Smith store, and on the night of the shower, a large crowd of people came up to the store, making a great hubbub, and awake me. When I opened my eyes, it seemed as if everything was on fire. I dressed immediately, awoke my parents, and went to the street, with a flashlight in sight I never before beheld nor expect to see again. I was afraid at first to step out on the street, but not seeing any danger, I walked out, and there meteors or sparks were falling as fast as my horse would run. They appeared as large as a man's fist, and immediately upon touching the earth, would disappear. They fell all around me, and on my head, but I only felt a slight sensation, or I may only have imagined it, for I examined closely many places where they had fallen, but could not detect any marks upon the ground.

It was about two o'clock in the morning when I went out, and I stood until the shower was over, which was at daybreak. Those meteors fell just as thick all the time, and as far as the eye could reach, above and around, the shower was just the same, the whole sky at a distance was one perfect blaze of fire. The townspeople were out on the street, and many were frightened terribly, particularly the slaves, thinking that the Day of Judgment had come.

It is so many years ago that I can not recall any of the incidents that took place, but there was one that I never can forget. A man borrowed a horse from a neighbor quite a long time before the shower and denied that he borrowed it; but on the morning after the shower he brought the horse back, and begged for mercy with tears in his eyes.

All the noted men from the South and West passed through on the turnpike at different times—Andrew Jackson, Henry Clay, President Harrison of Log Cabin fame, Richard M. Johnson, Black Hawk and Santa Anna, all of whom I have seen at my father's house. Santa Anna was on his way to Washington and was afraid of his life, but he got out of his coach and I had a close view of him. Black Hawk was on his way to Washington with some fifty of his Indians, and on their return home their fingers were well supplied with painted lead rings, and for the oddity of the thing, I traded a four-bladed knife with one of the Indians for a lead ring. I started away; but he called me back and wanted a return of his ring, because the point of one of the knife-blades was broken off. So we traded back.

When the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad was finished to Cumberland, all business of a public nature ceased on that road, and my father moved to Ohio.

THOMAS W. ANSON W. BIFFLES.

He Also Saw the Meteors

My attention was attracted to the notice in last week's CHRISTIAN HERALD, of the shower of meteors in 1833, written by M. A. M. Beatrice, Neb. I saw it on that November 13th (when I was sixteen years old), in Plymouth, Conn. We were on a hill, descending to the north and west, with nothing to obstruct the view, and we could watch the continuous shower of meteors, as they were driven swiftly from east to west, for eight hours—from eight in the evening to four in the morning—and it would be impossible to describe. Any meteors I have since seen would be, in comparison, as a tallow candle to an electric light.

But the people were not as much alarmed that night as they were three or four winters later, at the blood-red appearance of the northern lights, streaking up from east to west, and meeting overhead, and reflected upon the snow. THE CHRISTIAN HERALD has read here every week with much satisfaction, and then sent where reading is not plentiful, out to Nebraska. C. M. MINOR.

DIAMONDS on credit

As an investment give this a moment's thought.

Most people consider genuine diamonds a luxury beyond their reach. They have never heard of our liberal charge account system, by which the most beautiful Diamonds in all the newest designs, in Rings, Brooches, Scarf Pins, Studs, Lockets, Earrings, Cuff Buttons, etc., may be had at the very lowest prices by any well-meaning and honest person, whether their income be large or small, on a series of convenient monthly payments. We are direct importers of Diamonds; make lower prices than domestic buyers possibly can; carry a half-million-dollar stock and do by far the largest diamond credit business in the world.

It is as easy to open a Confidential Charge Account with us for a Diamond or Watch as it is to open a Savings Bank Account and it pays far better. Diamonds are the best investment in sight at the present time and their values will increase at least twenty per cent this year—a well-posted jeweler will tell you so. You can pay for a Diamond just as you would put a part of your earnings in a Savings Bank, and in a few months you will have a gem paid for that is instantly convertible into cash at full value anywhere in the world. Unequaled as a lasting gift to the loved one and adding more to the appearance of your success than anything else—to be successful, look successful; wear a diamond. We will send you a Diamond upon which you pay a small amount—usually $5 to $10 or about twenty per cent of the purchase price, although we sometimes have patrons who desire to pay more, and frequently those who cannot conveniently pay so much—but we in all cases arrange the matter to the satisfaction of the purchaser.

We make it easy all the way through, sending your selection subject to examination and approval, guaranteeing safe delivery and prepaying all express charges. We guarantee weights and qualities, absolutely, and will make liberal exchanges at any time. Step into your local bank and ask about our standing in Dean's and Bradstreet's books of commercial ratings. You will be told that we are one of the largest jewelry houses in the country and responsible beyond question. Write today for our illustrated booklet showing styles, prices, etc. Ask for a Lucky Pocket Piece and Calendar. We sell Watches, Jewelry and Silverware of every description on the same easy terms, but if you prefer to pay cash we will give you the regular trade discount of eight per cent.

The Bereaved Prophet

The Test Applied to Ezekiel as God's Messenger, in the Death of his Wife

BY MRS. M. BAXTER

IN the very beginning of his call, as son of man, to be the prophet who should understand, and enter into, the thoughts and purposes of God which were disclosed to him, God made his prophet Ezekiel eat the roll of the book. He must be incorporated with his message, and his message with him. Ezekiel understood and fully accepted his calling; his whole life, inward and outward, bore witness to it. But now that judgment had begun in Jerusalem, he was called to the closest test of all. "The word of the Lord came unto me, saying, Son of man, behold, I take away from thee the desire of thine eyes with a stroke; yet neither shalt thou mourn nor weep, neither shall thy tears run down. Sigh, but not aloud [or "Be silent," Heb.], make no mourning for the dead; bind thy headtire and cover not thy lips, and eat not the bread of men. So I spake unto the people in the morning, and at even my wife died, and I did in the morning as I was commanded" (Ezek. 24: 15-18). Such is a man wholly at God's disposal.

Ezekiel was not heartless, any more than was Abraham when God said, "Take now thy son, thy only son, whom thou lovest, even Isaac, and offer him there for a burnt offering upon one of the mountains which I will tell thee of." God put both his servants to the proof whether or not they loved him best. "He that loveth father or mother more than me is not worthy of me," said our Lord; "and he that loveth son or daughter more than me is not worthy of me" (Matt. 10: 37).

There are many who do not understand how the principle of idolatry touches family life and our affections. Idolatry is surely honoring something else more than God—serving, loving, considering, something or someone else more than God. Our affections are given us to serve God as much as any other of our powers, and there is as much sin in preferring them to God as there is in preferring an idol to God. Some of our closest tests come in our affections. God removes one who has been part of our own life, as in the case of Ezekiel's wife. The way in which we take the blow shows how far God is first with us. In our first and chief thought is our own great loss and the great suffering to our own hearts, and we yield to the temptation to pity ourselves, we are half-way towards the sin of counting God "a hard man." He knows what it costs us, and if our first thought is how to honor him in our great loss, he will abundantly fill the place which he has made void; and in this way we may prove, as in no other, how real is the presence and the comfort of a living, loving, present God.

The prophet does not speak of his great test as anything in which he sought or needed the sympathy of man. He only said, "I did as I was commanded." But, oh! how much that meant to him! And God knew it; he knew that he could count on his prophet. The people were not purged (v. 13), but Ezekiel was purged. The people had departed from God. God would show them one man who was loyal to him, and whom he would sustain under the most trying circumstances—one to whom the judgment of God upon his people should take precedence of anything personal, even his own wife's death. Ezekiel might sigh, might mourn, but it was to be without any of the noise and externalism of Eastern mourning. He was to be still a sign to the House of Israel.

"And the people said unto me, Wilt thou not tell us what these things are to us that thou doest so?" He had spoken to them in the morning, and probably had told them the news that Jerusalem was already besieged. Now he delivers another message to them: "Thus saith the Lord God, Behold, I will profane my sanctuary, the pride of your power, the desire of your eyes, and that which your soul pitieth; and your sons and your daughters, whom ye have left behind, shall fall by the sword. And ye shall do as I have done: ye shall not cover your lips [a sign of mourning] nor eat the bread of men [given by the neighbors in times of mourning in the East]. And your tires shall be upon your heads [the mourners go bareheaded], and your shoes upon your feet [mourners are barefooted]. Ye shall not mourn nor weep—the wailing over the dead in Eastern lands is well-known to all who have traveled.

In the siege of Jerusalem, when the city should be taken and so many slain, there would be no mourning for the dead—it would be impossible, in the distress and the confusion. "But ye shall pine away in your iniquities, and mourn one toward another." Perhaps in the words which follow (ver. 24) we see that these last words are more a description of how such a calamity as the loss of their temple—"My sanctuary, the pride of your power, the desire of your eyes"—ought to affect them, than an actual prophecy that the captives at Chebar would, in a year and a half's time, when the Temple should be destroyed, be so overwhelmed with the sense of their sins that they would pine away in their iniquities.

What the Gospel has Done for the Pimas

AN INDIAN TRIBE TRANSFORMED

...Once Heathen, Now Progressive Christian Farmers

OF the ten tribes of Indians in Arizona (roughly estimated at 40,000), the Pimas are the most advanced in civilization. Being an agricultural people and permanently settled in their homes, they have been more accessible to the missionary and the schools than other tribes. They number over 4,000 and live on the Gila and Salt River in the southern part of the territory. These Indians live in the water in low hovels, made of poles, brush and earth, in shape resembling an old-fashioned bee-hive, or a bird's nest inverted. There is a small aperture at the ground which serves for a door, window, chimney and ventilation. To enter, one must go down on his knees, and if there is a fire, he cannot stand erect for the smoke. Now the Pimas are doing much better houses, some are aspiring to glass windows and single roofs. For seven or eight months in the year, so warm is the climate, the tribe lives under brush sheds, and while harvesting their grain, largely under trees in their fields.

Their products are wheat, corn, beans, pumpkins, melons, and late alfalfa—wheat being their principal crop. It is cut mostly by the women, with the ancient reaping-hook. The threshing is done by dragging horses over it, and it is winnowed by perhaps the most primitive method known to man, namely, throwing the mass into the air when the wind blows, thus letting the grain fall in a pile upon the threshing-floor while the chaff is blown away. This is done by the men, who also do the ploughing and irrigating. Another source of profit for the women is the making of baskets and pottery, in which they excel.

The Pimas formerly practised polygamy or free-love, but do not now tolerate either. They do not inter-marry with the whites, as do the tribes in the Indian Territory. Their religion before conversion is hard to discover. They seemed to reverence the sun, but also prayed to the darkness. There was some indefinite kind of belief in a Great Spirit, but they seemed to stand in greater fear of their "medicine-men" than of anything else. That they had a vague belief in a future life is seen from the manner of burying their dead. I have seen them place lanterns, and many other things in the graves, and sacks of flour, valises of clothing, sewing-machines and beds. I asked an Indian once:

"Where do your people, who are not Christians, leave they go to when they die?" "Go east," he said. That is all they know. The Pimas have made wonderful progress since the Gospel reached them, but they are hardly one of the five civilized tribes of the Indian Territory, except in morals. Drunkenness and gambling have decreased, nearly all the young people can read and write, and since the Government established day-schools, almost every child is in school. Previous to 1870, no Protestant missionary work had been attempted among them, neither were there any schools. About that time, the pioneer missionary, Rev. C. H. Cook, came to live among them on the Gila River.

tion. Although living within two hours' drive of the capital city, were in an entirely neglected condition until 1870. In that year The American Sunday School Union started a mission under a brush shed (the council-ground of the tribe), which eventually grew into the Fifth Pima Church. The Indians themselves made the adobes (sun-dried bricks), receiving no pay except the food they ate. The building, including missionary quarters in the rear, cost, including work, $1,650. There are at present 114 members, all of whom pray or testify in public for Christ when called upon. The Sunday School numbers 150, and has grown from a small one-room building to the present and others, including the building of the present church, under the auspices of the Union. This has now grown into a church of twenty members, and the Sunday School numbers seventy. The converted Pimas helped the Maricopas to build their church, their Sunday School generously furnishing the food for the workers. The church is almost solely the work of Indians, aided by the American missionary.

A great transformation is taking place in the manners and customs of these people. A few years ago, the women went about with nothing save a width of calico wrapped about their loins, for a dress. Now, almost every one has a well-fitted dress, made on sewing-machines of their own. The men no longer wear blankets, but come to church in civilized clothing. Nearly all have cut off their long hair, and, when converted, they ask for new names. Many of them ride to town in buggies of their own.

The Pimas still have their chiefs. Formerly, they were hereditary, but now on the Salt River Reservation, they elect a chief every four years. They have also adopted a constitution, which provides for a council of twelve members, a real master and a superintendent. Like many other tribes, the Pimas are reckless of their bodies and the mortality, especially among the children, is great. A few years ago, one would always have been dead by the time the physician of the reservation could sometimes be found in a village. However, a number of them have embraced Christianity, their conversion has been attended with results have shown that, and they have been growing with thoroughness in the recognition of the eternal life through Christ. W. H. COOK.

[Mr. Cook is a missionary of the American Sunday School Union, and was sent during his mission to the south of the Pimas, but he is now in the U. S. Bureau, up Fifth Avenue, New York.]

TEXTS

"Seeing we also are compassed about with so great a cloud of witnesses." HEBREWS 12: 1.
"I have fought with beasts at Ephesus." I. COR. 15: 32.

CROSSING the Alps by the Mont Cenis Pass, or through the Mont Cenis Tunnel, you are in a few hours set down at Verona, Italy, and in a few minutes begin examining one of the grandest ruins of the world—the Amphitheatre. The whole building sweeps around you in a circle. You stand in the arena where the combat was once fought or the race run, and on all sides the seats rise, tier above tier, until you count forty elevations, or galleries, as I shall see fit to call them, in which sat the senators, the kings, and the twenty-five thousand excited spectators. At the sides of the arena, and under the galleries, are the cages in which the lions and tigers are kept without food, until, frenzied with hunger and thirst, they are let out upon some poor victim, who, with his sword and alone, is condemned to meet them. I think that Paul himself once stood in such a place, and that it was not only figuratively, but literally, that he had "fought with beasts at Ephesus."

The gala-day has come. From all the world the people are pouring into Verona. Men, women and children, orators and senators, great men and small, thousands upon thousands come, until the first gallery is full, and the second, the third, the fourth, the fifth—all the way up to the twentieth, all the way up to the thirtieth, all the way up to the fortieth. Every place is filled. Immensity of audience sweeping the great circle. Silence! The time for the contest has come. A Roman official leads forth the victim into the arena. Let him get his sword, with firm grip, into his right hand. The twenty-five thousand sit breathlessly watching. I hear the door at the side of the arena creak open. Out plunges the half-starved lion, his tongue athirst for blood, and, with a roar that brings all the galleries to their feet, he rushes against the sword of the combatant. Do you know how strong a stroke a man will strike when his life depends upon the first thrust of his blade? The wild beast, lame and bleeding, slinks back toward the side of the arena; then, rallying his wasting strength, he comes up with fiercer eye and more terrible roar than ever, only to be driven back with a fatal wound, while the combatant comes in with stroke after stroke, until the monster is dead at his feet, and the twenty-five thousand people clap their hands and utter a shout that makes the city tremble.

In the Arena.

Sometimes the audience came to see a race; sometimes to see gladiators fight each other, until the people, compassionate for the fallen, turned their thumbs up as an appeal that the vanquished be spared; and sometimes the combat was with wild beasts.

To one of the Roman amphitheatrical audiences of one hundred thousand people Paul refers when he says: "We are compassed about with so great a cloud of witnesses." The direct reference in the last passage is made to a race; but elsewhere, having discussed that, I take now Paul's favorite idea of the Christian life as a combat.

The fact is, that every Christian man has a lion to fight. Yours is a bad temper. The gates of the arena have been opened, and this tiger has come out to destroy your soul. It has lacerated you with many a wound. You have been thrown by it time and again, but in the strength of God you have arisen to drive it back. I verily believe you will conquer. I think that the temptation is getting weaker and weaker. You have given it so many wounds that the prospect is that it will die, and you shall be victor, through Christ. Courage, brother! Do not let the sands of the arena drink the blood of your soul!

Your lion is the passion for strong drink. You may have contended against it twenty years; but it is strong of body and thirsty of tongue. You have tried to fight it back with broken bottle or empty wine-flask. Nay! that is not the weapon. With one horrible roar he will seize thee by the throat and rend thee limb from limb. Take this weapon, sharp and keen—reach up and get it from God's armory: the Sword of the Spirit. With that thou mayest drive him back and conquer!

But why specify, when every man and woman has a lion to fight. If there be one here who has no besetting sin, let him speak out; for him have I offended. If you have not fought the lion, it is because you have let the lion eat you up. This very moment the contest goes on. The Trajan celebration, where ten thousand gladiators fought, and eleven thousand wild beasts were slain, was not so terrific a struggle as that which at this moment goes on in many a soul. The combat was for the life of the body; this is for the life of the soul. That was with wild beasts from the jungle; this is with the roaring lion of hell.

Men think, when they contend against an evil habit, that they have to fight it all alone. No! They stand in the centre of an immense circle of sympathy. Paul had been reciting the names of Abel, Enoch, Noah, Abraham, Sarah, Isaac, Joseph, Gideon, and Barak, and then says: "Being compassed about with so great a cloud of witnesses."

Before I get through, I will show you that you fight in an arena, around which circle, in galleries above each other, all the kindling eyes and all the sympathetic hearts of the ages; and at every victory gained there comes down the thundering applause of a great multitude that no man can number. "Being compassed about with so great a cloud of witnesses."

A Sympathetic King

On the first elevation of the ancient amphitheatre, on the day of a celebration, sat Tiberius, or Augustus, or the reigning king. So, in the great arena of spectators that watch our struggles, and in the first divine gallery, as I shall call it, sits our King, one Jesus. On his head are many crowns! The Roman emperor got his place by cold-blooded conquests; but our King hath come to his place by the broken hearts healed, and the tears wiped away, and the souls redeemed. The Roman emperor sat, with folded arms, indifferent as to whether the swordsman or the lion beat; but our King's sympathies are all with us. Nay, unheard-of condescension! I see him come down from the gallery into the arena to help us in the fight, shouting until all up and down his voice is heard: "Fear not! I will help thee! I will strengthen thee by the right hand of my power!"

They gave to the men in the arena, in the olden time, food to thicken their blood, so that it would flow slowly, and that for a longer time the people might gloat over the scene. But our King has no pleasure in our wounds, for we are bone of his bone, flesh of his flesh, blood of his blood.

In all the anguish of our heart
The man of sorrows bore a part.

Once, in the ancient amphitheatre, a lion with one paw caught the combatant's sword, and with his other paw caught his shield. The man took his knife from his girdle and slew the beast. The king, sitting in the gallery, said, "That was not fair; the lion must be slain by a sword." Other lions were turned out and the poor victim fell. You cry, "Shame! shame!" at such meanness. But the King in this case is our brother, and he will see that we have fair play. He will forbid the rushing out of more lions than we can meet; he will not suffer us to be tempted above that we are able. Thank God! The King is in the gallery! His eyes are on us. His heart is with us. His hand will deliver us. "Blessed are they who put their trust in him."

I look again, and I see the angelic gallery. There they are: the angel that swung the sword at the gate of Eden, the same that Ezekiel saw upholding the throne of God, and from which I look away, for the splendor is insufferable. Here are

The Guardian Angels

That one watched a patriarch; this one protected a child. That one has been pulling a soul out of temptation! All these are messengers of light! Those drove the Spanish Armada on the rocks. This turned Sennacherib's living host into a heap of one hundred and eighty-five thousand corpses. Those, yonder, chanted the Christmas carol over Bethlehem, until the chant awoke the shepherds. These, at creation, stood in the balcony of heaven, and serenaded the new-born world wrapped in swaddling-clothes of light. And there, holier and mightier than all, is Michael, the archangel. To command an earthly host gives dignity; but this one is leader of the twenty thousand chariots of God, and of the ten thousand times ten thousand angels. I think God gives command to the archangel, and the archangel to the seraphim, and the seraphim to the cherubim, until all the lower orders of heaven hear the command, and go forth on the high behest.

Now, bring on your lions! Who can fear? All the spectators in the angelic gallery are our friends. "He shall give his angels charge over thee, to keep thee in all thy ways. They shall bear thee up in their hands lest thou dash thy foot against a stone. Thou shalt tread upon the lion and adder: the young lion and the dragon shalt thou trample under foot."

Though the arena be crowded with temptations, we shall, with the angelic help, strike them down in the name of our God, and leap on their fallen carcasses! O bending throng of bright angelic faces, and swift wings, and lightning foot! I hail you, to-day, from the dust and struggle of the arena!

I look again, and I see the gallery of the prophets and apostles. Who are those mighty ones up yonder? Hosea, and Jeremiah, and Daniel, and Isaiah, and Paul, and Peter, and John, and James. There sits Noah, waiting for all the world to come into the ark; Moses, waiting till the last Red Sea shall divide; Jeremiah, waiting for the Jews to return; and John of the Apocalypse, waiting for the swearing of the angel that Time shall be no longer. Glorious spirits! They were howled at, ye were stoned; ye were spit upon. They have been in this fight themselves; and they are all with us. Daniel knows all about lions. Paul fought with beasts at Ephesus.

In the ancient amphitheatre, the people got so excited that they would shout from the galleries to the men in the arena: "At it again!" "Forward!" "One more stroke!" "Look out!" "Fall back!" "Huzza! Huzza!" So in that gallery, prophetic and apostolic, they cannot keep their peace. Daniel cries out: "Thy God will deliver thee from the mouth of the lions!" Daniel exclaims: "He will not suffer thy foot to be moved." Isaiah calls out: "Fear not! I am with thee! Be not dismayed!" Paul exclaims: "Victory through our Lord Jesus Christ!" That throng of prophets and apostles cannot keep still. They make the welkin ring with shouting and hallelujahs.

I look again, and I see

The Gallery of the Martyrs

Who is that? Hugh Latimer, sure enough! He would not apologize for the truth he preached, and so he died the night before swinging from the bed-post in perfect glee at the thought of emancipation. Who is that angel of six thousand six hundred and sixty-six? They are the Theban Legion who died for the faith. Here is a larger host in magnificent array—eight hundred and eighty-four thousand—who perished for Christ in persecutions of Diocletian. Yonder is a family group, Felicitas of Rome, and her children. While they were dying for the faith, she stood encouraging them. One son was whipped to death by thorns; another was flung from a rock; another was beheaded. At last the mother became a martyr. There they are together—a fan group in heaven! Yonder is John Bradford, who was in the fire, "We shall have a merry supper with Lord to-night!" Yonder is Henry Voes, who exclaimed as he died, "If I had ten heads, they should all fall for Christ!" The great throng of the martyrs! They had hot lead poured down their throats; horses were fastened to their hands, and other horses to their feet, and thus they were pulled apart; they had their tongues pulled out by red-hot pincers; they were sewed up the skins of animals, and then thrown to the dogs; they were daubed with combustibles and set on fire! If the martyrs' stakes that have been kindled could be at proper distances, they would make the midnight the world over, bright as noonday! And now they yonder in the martyrs' gallery. For them the fires of persecution have gone out. The swords are sheathed and the mob hushed. Now they watch us with an observing sympathy. They know all the pain, all the hardship, all the anguish, all the injustice, all the pervasion. They cannot keep still. They cry: "Courage! The fire will not consume. The floods cannot devour. The lions cannot devour. Courage! down there in the arena."

What, are they all looking? This hour we answer back the salutation they give, and cry, "Hail! So and daughters of the fire!"

Glorified Saints

I look again, and I see another gallery, that of eminent Christians. What strikes me strangely is the mingling in companionship of those who on earth could not agree. There is Albert Barnes, and around him the Presbytery who tried him for heterodoxy! Yonder Lyman Beecher, and the church court that denounced him! Stranger than all, there is John Calvin and Jam Arminius! Who would have thought that they would sit so lovingly together? There is George Whitefield and the ministers who would not let him come into the pulpits because they thought him a fanatic. There are the sweet singers, Toplady, Montgomery, Charles Wesley, Isaac Watts, and Mrs. Sigourney. If heaven had had no music before they went up, they would have started the singing. And there, the band of missionaries: David Abeel, talking of China redeemed; an John Scudder, of India saved; and David Brainerd, of the aborigines evangelized; and Mrs. Adoniram Judson, whose prayers for Burmah took heaven by violence. All these Christians are looking into the arena. O struggle is nothing to theirs! Do we, in Christ's cause, suffer from the cold? They walked Greenland's ice mountains. Do we suffer from the heat? They sweated in the tropics. Do we get fatigued? They fainted with none to care for them but cannibals. Are we persecuted? They were anathematized. And as the

I tried to "break Out" through the last defense line, but couldn't get far. The guards were getting the word. I tried to get back, but I was caught. I was taken to the prison and helped me. I tried to get out, but I was caught.

THE · SUNDAY · SALOON · QUESTION

Anti-Saloon Leaguers Arrayed Against Profanation of the Lord's Day—The Situation in New York City

OF all States in the Union, New York is at present in the most confused condition upon the liquor question. Thoughtful people, the country over, are watching with interest the peculiar contest. The politicians are divided on the question of Sunday opening, and even the clergymen are far apart. By far the largest body of ministers and church members would be against any submission of the question, and are opposed to the traffic all the time. The liquor sellers themselves are also at loggerheads, and many saloon keepers would be glad to have the saloons shut on Sunday, if all could be kept closed. In the midst of this babel of voices, an energetic organization, the Anti-Saloon League, has taken a decided position, and has raised a standard in New York State around which all who cherish the Sunday rest day and oppose the liquor traffic, are being marshalled for the conflict.

The American Anti-Saloon League is a national organization, federating over two hundred and fifty church and temperance bodies, with headquarters at Washington and branches in thirty-eight States and Territories. It employs over two hundred persons to carry on its work, and a quarter of a million dollars will be raised and expended the present year. The New York League began its work in May, 1899. Its President is the Hon. Truman H. Baldwin, of Nyack, its secretary, Rev. John Lewis Clark, and its Board of Trustees includes such representative men as Rev. David James Burrell, Rev. R. S. MacArthur, Rev. J. Wilbur Chapman, Rev. Louis Albert Banks, Mr. W. E. Lougee, and others in New York City; Rev. O. P. Gifford, Buffalo; Rev. H. H. Stebbins, Rochester; President A. A. V. Raymond, Schenectady; Rev. J. J. Lawrence, Albany, and others. In over eight hundred localities in the Empire State, more than three thousand churches are now co-operating with the State headquarters in the work of the League. Probably more than a million people are now in active sympathy. All parties and creeds are represented in its ranks. District offices have been opened and manned at Buffalo, Brooklyn, Elmira, Poughkeepsie, Rochester, and Syracuse, and are at present in charge respectively of Rev. H. W. Tope, D.D., Rev. John F. Brant, Mr. E. F. Goff, LL.D., Rev. W. D. Chipp, Rev. F. E. Tower, D.D., Rev. George W. Peck, D.D., and Rev. T. Eaton Clapp, D.D. The supervising field force, including Superintendent Howard H. Russell, of the National League, who is now the acting State Superintendent, represent the following religious bodies: Congregational, two; Methodist, three; Lutheran, one; Presbyterian, one, and Baptist, one. Other denominations are represented among the force of workers in the field.

The lines of work which have made this organization a power for good in Ohio and many other States, are being rapidly pressed forward in New York. A local option bill was introduced in the last Legislature, and this year a still more vigorous campaign will be waged at Albany. Over 10,000 letters have already been sent to the press, pastors, and business men.

Superintendent Russell, discussing the work of the League, explained to the writer: "The Excise law only permits a local option upon the question of license in the towns. There is at present no way by which residents of cities can protect themselves from the presence of saloons, even when the majority of the voters are opposed to them. This is remedied by the Bennet-Ambler bill, which provides for the submission of the question of license or no license once in two years, on petition of one-tenth of the voters in each election district outside of the towns. By this method of voting, saloons can be abolished in the suburban and residence districts of our cities, even when the city as a whole may be in favor of them. Where negative votes are cast in any city, greater in number than a majority of all the legal voters of the city, then the saloon is to be excluded from the whole city. The benefits of city local option have been demonstrated in many States. In Massachusetts, there are now eight cities of over 30,000 population each, with no saloons. Cambridge, with nearly 100,000 population, has been free from saloons for fifteen years, and the increased valuation of property due to the absence of saloons has several times multiplied the former income from liquor licenses, without increase of tax rate.

The Bennet-Ambler Bill provides for a repeal of a section of the Raines Law which permits hotels to sell liquor on Sundays. Sunday selling by hotels has been the direct cause of the multiplication of the so-called "Raines Law Hotels," with their awful immorality and crime; and the League claims that, logically and practically, there is no other way to be rid of these vice-breeding places than by withdrawing the permission of Sunday sales from hotels and clubs as well. Stated concisely, the League's ultimatum on the Sunday Saloon Question is as follows:

1st. The proposition to open saloons on Sunday is entering wedge to destroy the one rest day so needful for the welfare of all mankind.

2d. We are opposed to legalizing any form of Sunday profanation, especially a traffic which is evil and only evil every day.

3d. We are opposed to discriminating in favor of the saloon as against the various lines of honest and needful trade.

4th. The open saloon on Sunday disturbs the peace of those who wish to enjoy the day in rest and quiet.

5th. The Sunday saloon induces more desertion and deprivation of the homes already made wretched enough by the saloon.

6th. The Sunday saloon attracts and tempts the appetite of men during the leisure of that day and renders them unfit for their work on Monday.

7th. The sanctioning of Sunday liquor selling increases crime. The enforcement of the Sunday law in New York City in 1896 reduced in a marked degree drunkenness and related crimes.

OUR ROYAL GERMAN VISITOR

NOTHING has been left undone, by those having charge of the entertainment of Prince Henry of Prussia and his suite, that would contribute to the pleasure and edification of the distinguished guests during their stay on American soil. When this edition of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD reaches the hands of its readers, the Prince and his party will in all probability already have reached New York and begun their rounds of sight-seeing and entertainment, including the presentation by Mayor Low to Prince Henry of the freedom of the city of New York, the launching of the Kaiser's yacht at Shooter's Island, and the visit to Washington, where the Prince meets the President and attends a State dinner. After seeing the National Capital and its picturesque sights—and observing the methods of our Congressional lawmakers—the Prince will go to the Naval Academy at Annapolis, and then proceed westward, in accordance with the official itinerary, announced in these columns last week.

During the Prince's stay in Washington, his entertainment will be in the care of a committee con-

When the Kaiser's yacht Hohenzollern arrived in New York harbor, under command of Rear-Admiral Count von Baudissin, she looked to American eyes more like a good-sized warship than a pleasure-going steamer. She has a crew of over 300 hardy-looking German tars and is officered by several members of the nobility. Her appointments, specially designed by the Emperor's orders, are both substantial and elegant, but utility is kept everywhere in view. Her powerful engines are capable of great speed, and she arrived three days sooner than anticipated. Her three masts, her two yellow funnels and her formidable-looking ram, make her look like a cruiser, and as if to bear out the impression of her warlike capacity, she carries two rapid-fire guns. Admiral Baudissin and his officers were cordially welcomed by the municipal and naval officials, after which they spent some time in viewing the sights of New York.

planned. Tsilek were seized by the Indians while traveling from Banskó to Idjumas, near the Mexican frontier. With them was a great deal of property of native Christians. All were made prisoners, tortured and plundered of valuables, but only the real laborers were spared. As for the Indians, a small sum of $2,000 as a ransom for the two prisoners; but later consented to accept $50,000 for the sum gathered by another expedition, through the arrival of the American troops.

Self-Conquest

THAT remark of Christ, "Sell all that thou hast and give to the poor," is often misinterpreted. He was not here teaching the importance of benevolence, but the duty of self-conquest. That young man had an all-absorbing love of wealth. Money was his god, and Christ is not willing to occupy the throne conjointly with any other deity. This was a case for what doctors call heroic treatment. If a physician meet a case of unimportant sickness, he prescribes a mild curative, but sometimes he comes to a room where the case is almost desperate; ordinary medicine would not touch it. It is "kill or cure," and he treats accordingly. This young man that Christ was medicating was such a case. There did not seem much prospect, and he gives him this powerful dose, "Sell all that thou hast and give to the poor!"

It does not follow that we must all do the same, any more than because belladonna or arsenic is administered in one case of illness we should therefore all go to taking belladonna or arsenic. Because one man in the hospital must have his arm amputated, all the patients need not expect amputation. The silliest thing that business men could do would be to give all their property away and turn their families into the street. The most Christian thing for you to do is to invest your money in the best way possible, and out of your business, industriously carried on, to contribute the largest possible percentage to the kingdom of God. Still, we must admire the manner in which the Great Physician took the diagnosis of this man's case and grappled it. We all need heroic spiritual treatment.

Deal with your avarice in the same heroic style. Having heard the charitable cause presented, at the first right impulse thrust your hand in your pocket where the money is, and pull it out though it half kills you. Pull till it comes. Put it on the plate with an emphasis, and turn your face away before you are tempted to take it back again. All your sweet contemplation about benevolence will not touch your case. Heroic treatment or nothing!

Church Fairs

SO long as women must take an active part in church work—that part having to do with the raising of funds—church fairs will be a necessity. Women cannot give largely except of their love, their time, and their brains. All of these are lavishly spent in the getting up and carrying on of the ordinary church supper, fair, or bazaar.

Among the best things to be said on the side of the fair, are that it brings people into harmonious fellowship who might otherwise have little in common, that it makes women sociable and well acquainted, as a year of ordinary intercourse never does, and this in the course of a few weeks, and that it promotes a larger life and a wider interest than prevail where ladies are confined by routine to the narrow gauge of their homes. Women live in a rut and grow old of drudgery and ennui. The monotony of housekeeping is more wearying than the actual work. So, when at a fair, there are pretty things made and sold, and nice dishes cooked and daintily served, a double purpose is fulfilled: the church people and their friends have a good time, and the exchequer is augmented. If a mortgage is to be raised, or a floating debt reduced, if a roof leaks, or a furnace is worn out, or carpets and pews must be renewed and recushioned, the women take hold of the job, however big, with willing minds, and tireless hands, and before long their end is won. All honor to the sisterhood of brave and earnest women who form aid societies and auxiliaries and labor not in vain in the Lord.

There is a seamy side, and it is discoverable to those who are candid, in the depleted nervous force of some of the workers, in the neglect that is the portion of their children while they are much more away from home than usual, and in the fact that the fair as a rule costs to the active participants more than they can afford. Few men and women of small or of moderate means are willing to give outright in solid cash the sums they indirectly give when they contribute to a fair, and then follow this initiative by their later purchases.

If the millennium shall come in our time, one of its first results will be seen in the liberality of direct donations. When we are brought to the point where love inspires every dollar sent to the poor, the orphan, or the mission cause, our money will be as readily offered as are our praises and our prayers.

Crosses

THERE is some one whose cross will be to present religion in the home circle. Would you dare to kneel down and pray, if your brother and sister were looking at you? Could you ask a blessing at the tea table? Could you take the Bible and gather your family around you, and read of Christ and heaven and your immortal soul? Could you then kneel and pray for a blessing on your household? "Oh!" you say, "not exactly that. I could not quite do that, because I have a very quick temper, and if I professed religion and tried to talk religion in my household, and then after that I should lose my temper, they would scoff at me and say, 'You are a pretty Christian!'" So you are cowed down and their sarcasm keeps you out of heaven and away from Christ, when under God you ought to take your whole family into the kingdom. Christ lifted a mountain, lifted a world for you; you cannot lift an ounce for him. We see how it is; you want to be favorable to religion, you want to support Christian institutions, you like to be associated with those who love Jesus Christ; but as to taking a positive step on this subject, you cannot—you cannot, and Christ's words, like a gate of a hundred bolts, bar you away from peace on earth and glory in heaven.

A Missionary Honored

TO Mr. Moir B. Duncan, M. A., probably more than to any other one man, is due the credit for the remarkably successful administration of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD famine relief in the province of Shensi and the effective system of its distribution, which was the direct means of saving many lives and feeding thousands of starving human beings. Mr. Duncan is of Scottish birth and was graduated from the University of Glasgow. After an experience in evangelistic work in his native land he determined to become a preacher of the Gospel in China. He entered Oxford University and studied Chinese language and literature, under the famous Professor James Legge, whom he assisted in translating the Nestorian tablet. Eleven years ago Mr. Duncan came to Sian. So great was the prejudice against foreigners at that time, that the only way in which he could enter within the city walls was to hide himself away in a covered cart. But by his tact and knowledge of Chinese character, the British Baptist Missionary Society, of which he is a member, were enabled, first to draw around themselves a village of Christians, forty miles from Sian, and later to establish a mission station in the capital.

From the first, Mr. Duncan was especially successful with the officials and Chinese scholars. He adopted the native dress and delivered public lectures on comparative religions and other subjects of enlightenment. He opened a bookstore in connection with the mission, where, in one year, nearly $10,000 worth of Chinese literature, Christian and scientific, was sold. During his enforced absence from Shensi, owing to the Boxer outbreak, Mr. Duncan acted as interpreter and Chinese secretary to General Stewart, commanding the British forces in Peking. Although the journey was a dangerous one, he returned to Sian last July, for the express purpose of superintending the distribution of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD fund. The way in which he has managed it, has so impressed the governor and officials of the province that he has been recommended to the Wai Wu Pu (Foreign Office) in Peking for the rank of a mandarin of the second degree, an honor very rarely conferred upon foreigners.

Light Up the World!

A PREACHER recently exclaimed, "This world needs lighting up." Another, at the same time, said, "The present is the era of benevolence." This is the Christmas message "Good will to men." In his sermon on the Mount, Jesus said, "Ye are the light of the world."

Good men, by means of their large wealth, are lighting up the world to a remarkable degree. Mr. Carnegie is doing it by establishing free libraries; Mr. Morgan by hospitals and art treasures; Mr. Rockefeller and Mr. Stanford, by the endowment of colleges; Mr. Flax by converting the arid shores of Florida into a garden for the delight of the tourist, and the health of the invalid, while, by rapid transportation, he unites agricultural intelligence of the North to make a harvest and fortune. There are hundreds like these, who in some way, are lighting up the world. There is everywhere ample opportunity for those possessing moderate means to do the same work. They may enjoy the blessedness of giving to a degree denied the great benefactors, inasmuch as they are brought into personal relations with the beneficiary. It is theirs to witness direct results, and to receive the heartfelt gratitude of those whose hearts and homes they light up.

Workers in the Field

Word has been received at THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, while this issue is on the press, that Miss Stone has finally been set free. Later and fuller particulars of her release from captivity will be found in next week's issue.

—EVANGELIST W. A. SUNDAY lately held a series of revival meetings at Cumberland, Ia., assisted by Mr. Fred Fischer, Gospel singer. Two hundred and fifty confessed Christ.

—THE REV. NELSON B. RANDALL, well known in evangelistic circles, died at East Orange, N. J., of pneumonia, last week. He was sixty-four years of age, and had been engaged exclusively in evangelistic work since he resigned his pastorate, four years ago.

—S. H. HADLEY, of the Jerry McAuley Water Street Mission, N. Y., lately spent a week with Rev. Dr. Alders, pastor of the Second Presbyterian Church of Portsmouth, O., assisting him in a special work for men. The meeting produced excellent results.

—REV. JOSEPH B. GRAFF, Philadelphia, writes us: "I published a poem entitled, 'The End of the Way.' Permit me to say it was composed by a most estimable Christian young lady of my church, Miss Phoebe Marshall." It is just to Miss Marshall that she should have the credit of authorship.

—EVANGELIST E. F. MILLER, of Chicago, who has been in active Christian work for twenty years, writes us that the most effective song he has ever used in revivals is, "My Lord and I." Audiences call for it every night and it has a strange effect, causing some to weep and others to call out exultantly. The song is translated from the German.

—MISSIONARY EMILIO OLSSON writes from Adrogué, Buenos Ayres, S. A.: "I heartily thank you and your kind contributors for sending us, through THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, their grateful gifts towards our missionary work in South America. This dark land needs the light, and we look to friends in Christian America to still remember us and our work."

—BISHOP FUNSTON, of the Missionary District of Boise, Idaho, is visiting New York. His mission territory in the West is larger than New York State and Connecticut combined. In two years he has traveled a distance nearly equal to three circuits of the globe. He is a man of superb physique, earnest, straightforward address, and the ideal of spiritual leader in a comparatively new territory.

—MOUNT ATHOS, the famous "hill of the monks," where it is said, no woman ever sets foot, was lately the scene of a remarkable fire. The monastery of St. Paul was totally consumed. It was eleven hundred years old and had many priceless treasures belonging to the early Greek Church. Among them were three ancient vessels of curious workmanship, which are declared by tradition to be the identical gifts brought by the wise men to the infant Jesus in Bethlehem.

TWO VERY SUCCESSFUL union revival meetings have been lately held at Battle Creek and South Haven, Mich., by Rev. E. S. Stucker of LaGrange, Ills. At times the audience were 2,500 and 3,000, and large numbers declare their purpose to follow Christ. Mr. Stucker was pastor of the First Baptist Church in South Bend, Ind., until October last, when, at the advice of Evangelist J. Wilbur Chapman and other well-known workers, he gave up his pastorate to undertake special work. Prof. W. S. Weeden of New York, has spent some time singing with Mr. Stucker.

—REV. AND MRS. G. CAMPBELL MORGAN were the guests of Mr. and Mrs. W. R. Moody, at East Northfield, Mass., over Sunday, February 9. Mr. Morgan addressed the students of Mount Hermon School at the morning service his subject being "Lot Pitching his Tent toward Sodom." In the afternoon, Mr. Morgan addressed a large crowd at the Baptist Church, Brattleboro, Vt., on "The Man with the Withered Hand." In the evening, he spoke to the Northfield Seminary students at Stone Hall, on Phil. 1: 27. It is expected that he will spend the greater part of May in Northfield, giving Bible lectures to the students.

THE BIBLE and the NEWSPAPER

A City in Flames

SELDOM have firemen engaged in a more hopeless struggle than those who strove to extinguish the conflagration which broke out in Paterson, N. J., on the early morning of January 9. It was at first apparently a small matter—only a car shed, whose wooden walls were ignited by an overheated stove. A strong wind, however, was blowing, and it carried the firebrands into the spire of the First Baptist Church, the next block. There the wind fanned them into a blaze which the firemen could not reach. The spire burned until it toppled over and fell on the roof of the church, sending up an eruption of sparks that started destruction in other buildings. The first alarm was turned in soon after Sunday midnight, and from that time the fire raged, devouring every building in its way, until two P. M., on Sunday.

required help. Among the buildings destroyed were several that were thought to be fireproof, but it was proved, as so often happens in spiritual experience, that the boast was a vain one.

The fire destroyed many homes, and a great many people were homeless.

Canine Telepathy

A remarkable instance of a dog's knowledge of his master's death is reported by the Herald of Boston, Mass. It states that one of Boston's citizens had a dog to which he was much attached. The dog displayed great love for his owner. If the latter was detained away from home beyond his usual hour, the dog would wait long near the door watching for him. The owner was taken ill some months ago and was ordered to the far West, in the hope that the climate might restore him. One night during his absence the dog suddenly gave a terrific howl, as if in sharp pain. As he continued to moan and howl, one of the servants rose and went to see what was the cause. There was nothing to account for the dog's trouble, but he continued to howl at intervals all night. The next morning a telegram was delivered announcing the gentleman's death. Inquiry revealed the fact that he died just as the dog began to howl. The animal refused all food and in a short time died, apparently of grief. How the dog could have been aware that his master, two thousand miles away, was dying, is a mystery. The only clue to it is in the strong love subsisting between the man and the dog, which must in some way have made the dog conscious of his owner's death. We do not yet know all that love can do in annihilating space, but we do know that it is the most potent enlightening influence in the world.

It appears that the professor, maintaining the fact that the X-ray light and because of the long time it takes to be used on the X-ray machine, made some experiments to ascertain whether the light which is known to come from most common substances, but is invisible, might not become visible if some other substance were placed near them. His experiments have led him to the conclusion that it is only necessary to discover the true relation between substances, in order to obtain light from a great variety of sources. One of his experiments he showed to the reporter. A small box of salts was placed in a dark room and upon it was laid a sheet of barium chloride. In a few moments there was developed a beautiful soft light, strong enough to read by. Another experiment showed that photographic results could be obtained by such light. Some keys and coins were laid on a plate holder containing a photographic plate. On this was laid a piece of wood two and a half inches thick. On the wood was sprinkled brown sugar. When examined, it was found that the energy from the sugar had passed through the wood and the cover of the plate-holder, and had photographed the coins and keys on the sensitive plate. Similar results, the professor said, could be obtained from glucose and chalk. The problem in all cases is to find the substance that is a complement to the light-producer, for until that is discovered, the light, though in existence, does not become visible. The same conditions apply to the light of the Gospel, as preachers have often found to their sorrow.

When the wind changed, and the destruction of some houses by dynamite checked its progress. In that short time the flames destroyed the City Hall, five bank buildings, the Public Library with its hundred thousand books, police headquarters, two hotels, two schoolhouses, five churches, the Y. M. C. A. building, a theatre, and about forty fine stores. The churches burned were the First Baptist, the Park Avenue Baptist, the Second Presbyterian, St. Mark's Episcopal, and St. Joseph's Roman Catholic. It is estimated that the loss altogether will be from eight to ten million dollars. Happily, no lives were lost, though many persons were hurt by falling debris, and a fireman who was on his way to the scene was thrown from his engine, and had both legs broken. The fire-brigades of neighboring cities were promptly sent to aid the Paterson force, and the Governor of New Jersey sent soldiers to help the police protect the property. Offers of help for the destitute and homeless soon arrived from New York and other cities, but the Mayor of Paterson reported that outside help was not needed, and arrangements were promptly made on the spot for assisting all who

In an interview with Professor William Hallock, of Columbia University, a reporter of the New York Sun obtained some particulars relating to the professor's new discovery. It appears that the professor, maintaining the fact that the X-ray light and because of the long time it takes to be used on the X-ray machine, made some experiments to ascertain whether the light which is known to come from most common substances, but is invisible, might not become visible if some other substance were placed near them. A Struggle with a Snake

A press despatch from Phoenix, Ariz., reports a serious and probably fatal result of a mistake made by a scientist in that town. He noticed in a curiosity store an enormous rattlesnake, which was larger than any he had previously seen in captivity. He asked permission to photograph it, but was told that it would be dangerous to do so, as the snake was very poisonous.

The scientist, however, was determined to see the snake, and went to the store. He lay on the floor, and the snake crawled over him. He was bitten on the neck, and the snake then crawled away. The scientist was taken to the hospital, but died of the bite.

The woman's name is not given, but she is said to be a native of the South. She was bitten on the arm, and the snake then crawled away. She was taken to the hospital, but died of the bite.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS

I. For answers to the questions which appear below, when accepted, we will allow compensation for the matter used at the rate of One Dollar a hundred words. Answers should so far as possible be limited to one hundred words.

II. Answers must be received at this office three weeks in advance of the date on which they are intended to appear.

III. The editor reserves the right to condense accepted answers when necessary, and compensation will be based on the matter as printed.

IV. Do not write inquiring if your material has been accepted. If it appears on this page, you will know that it has been accepted.

V. We cannot return any MSS. sent to the Editor of THE MAIL-BAG—not even if stamps accompany them.

VI. Write only on one side of the sheet, and never send on the same sheet anything intended for any other department of the paper. Correspondents answering more than one question should append their name and address to each answer.

VII. Letters addressed to the Mail-Bag must contain the names and addresses of the writers, not for publication, but in order that answers may be sent by mail when that mode is preferable.

VIII. Address all communications intended for this department, Editor The Mail-Bag, The Christian Herald, Bible House, New York.

Readers are invited to forward new questions which they believe would be suitable for discussion in this department.

SPECIAL NOTICE

In future, only one question will be submitted each week, in order that a larger space may be devoted to a full discussion of that question. We publish herewith a list of questions to be answered on the respective dates, so that our correspondents may have abundance of time to prepare their answers.

To be Answered in the Issue of March 26

What ten American scenes and places should Prince Henry have seen or visited here, in order to receive the most accurate impression of the nation's spirit and character and of our republican institutions?

To be Answered in the Issue of April 9

Is the widespread diffusion of advanced education an unqualified blessing, or is it true, as has been charged, that it tends to produce a large class who are averse to productive industry as a life-occupation, and who ultimately become a burden upon the community at large?

To be Answered in the Issue of April 16

In what way may women best utilize their influence in securing the peace of the world?

To be Answered in the Issue of April 23

What are we to infer from Scripture as to the future state? Do the statements in Revelation imply that it is a life in a magnificent city or a state of moral and intellectual progress? Will it be a disembodied condition? What is the modern Christian idea concerning it?

To be Answered in the Issue of April 30

If, as science asserts, the act of dissolution is as painless as that of birth, the individual being unconscious alike of both, how can we account for the dread with which many Christians, as well as other people, regard it?

To be Answered in the Issue of May 14

Do great national religious conventions tend to the advancement of spiritual life and work? What are the chief objections to them, and what the principal advantages to be derived from them?

To be Answered in the Issue of May 21

Is it right under any circumstances to pray for riches?

To be Answered in the Issue of May 28

Which is the purest, the most unselfish and the truest—the love of the sexes, the love between two friends, or the love that exists between parents and children, and which of the three is capable of the greatest sacrifice?

Questions of the Week

1. What is a "magic square"?

A "magic square" consists of numbers so arranged in parallel and equal rows in the form of a square that, each row, taken vertically, horizontally, or diagonally will give the same sum or the same product, according as the numbers taken are in arithmetical or geometrical progression. The number of numbers used in making a "magic square" may be nine, sixteen, twenty-five, and so on, the number always being a perfect square. Where more than nine are used it becomes quite difficult to arrange them. The arrangement of the numbers in any given square is the same in both an arithmetical and geometrical series. An indefinite number of series may be used in either progression. Sometimes letters are so arranged that, spelling from the center of the square outward in any direction, the same word will always be formed. This is also called a "magic square."

2. Does human nature naturally tend to the right or to the wrong? (This has no reference to "original sin.")

Human nature naturally tends to the wrong rather than to the right. This tendency is our heritage as sons and daughters of fallen Adam. The little infant even, shows this tendency in temper ungoverned and in disobedience; and the oldest and best saint on earth feels that tendency and must struggle against it. In some there is born more of the desire and strength to swim against the tide than in others, and they may have to resist a stronger tide. The degree varies in regard both to natural tendency and to the power to overcome; but the nature born in all tends to the wrong. Christ gives salvation from this tendency by pardon for the past yielding and by energizing grace. He imparts the spiritual electricity to climb the hill of the higher life to those that with the hand of faith grasp his proffered power, invisible in his ordinances. A. W. LEWIS.

The fact that the human does so many things that are wrong, leads us to say, at first thought, that human nature naturally tends to the wrong. But this is not the case. The development of the human race extends from a very ancient tribe of people, who were, sity or weight. Cold air being heavier than warm air, will seek the lowest levels. During a calm night, when frosts occur, the surface of hillsides cool by radiation and thereby cool the air in contact with it. Hence this cold air flows downward into the valley beneath. Here, coming in contact with a still colder soil or plant, it becomes colder and soon accumulates as a layer of cold air, which grows thicker during the night, by the steady addition of the thin layer of descending air from the hillsides. The warmer air, which has not yet been cooled by coming in contact with the ground, floats on top of the cold mass and furnishes a continuous supply of heat to the hillsides as fast as it comes in contact with them before it also cools and descends. This gentle circulation during the night-time forms a thermal or heated belt, in which the upper regions have a higher temperature than the lower regions. Frost only forms when the temperature at the surface falls to 32 degrees or lower. From this it is readily seen that valleys may have early or heavy frosts, while the hillsides have no frosts or only light ones. E. WHISLER.

4. Would it conduce to the welfare of a church if the preacher were to shorten his discourse, say to twenty minutes?

It would not be conducive to the welfare of the church to have a fixed limit of time for in too hot, too cold, or a poorly-ventilated church. The length of service should vary according to time, place, circumstances, posture and interest. C. F. C.

Yes, it certainly would, for two reasons. First, the sermon itself would be better. Few preachers realize that it is quality and quantity that counts in the composition of good sermon, and consequently, throw out their congregations a good deal of chaff which detracts from the force of the real grains of truth, if it does not entirely, to some mind conceal them. A good, condensed, twenty minutes' discourse will contain as much for thought as an ordinary congregation can well digest, and is much more likely to claim their attention than one of twice its length. Secondly, it would give more time for other devotional exercises, which are just as conducive to spiritual development, and would give rise to a tendency for more regular church attendance among young people. NORA E. SILER.

5. Are Christian philanthropists justified in appealing to the public for the support of the institutions, or should they depend, as George Muller did, entirely on God's sending the means?

George Muller must be admired and commended because of his faith, but it does not necessarily follow that all philanthropists must imitate his example. Elijah was told that a widow in Zarephath would sustain him and he believed she would; but when he met her, he asked her for food and drink. David believed that the Temple would be erected, and he contributed liberally for the purchase of materials; but he felt justified in appealing to the public for assistance (I. Chron. 29: 5). Paul thankfully accepted what the churches in Macedonia gave him for the relief of the poor saints in Jerusalem, but he appealed to the Church in Corinth to give liberally to the same object (II. Cor. 8: 11). Were Elijah and David and Paul all wrong in not waiting till assistance came? W. S. MACT.

Certainly. George Muller was an exception to most men in the way he raised money to support the great orphan homes he founded at Bristol, England. It is true, he was a mighty man in faith and prayer, and appealed directly to God to provide the means to feed, clothe and educate the thousands of children put under his care, and in this he was eminently successful. But it should be further observed, that while Mr. Muller used prayers as a means of presenting his requests at the throne of grace, he had other agencies at work, such as the accounts of the work presented in tracts and periodicals, as well as his own addresses. Though he did not ask money of any one, he showed the pressing needs of these homes for the orphans. While appeals are made to the public to carry on our great missionary and philanthropic agencies, they are sustained by the direct hand of God no less than were the Bristol orphanages. To say that all philanthropic agencies should be carried on just as Mr. Muller's was, by appealing directly to God, is to say that all foreign missionaries should cease to receive help from the home church and, like Elijah of old, appeal to God to be fed as he was, by ravens. according to our ideas, very ignorant, low and wicked, to the present, and will, no doubt, extend on and on until the end of the world. In this development the human race has tended, and now tends, to the right. If human nature naturally tends to the wrong, the race would have degenerated, and would be, at the present time, degenerating. These wrongs that are so common with the human are wrongs from which human nature has not learned the race to break loose, though she is continually telling it to do so.

J. RALPH THOMAS.

To the wrong. One of the best proofs of this is found in the history of the world before the deluge. It is said that then the purposes and desires (so the Hebrew, Gen. 6: 5) of men were only evil every day. These purposes and desires were evil, even though the Spirit of God strove with men. After the deluge, the race set out under fair auspices, but again it tended in the wrong direction. Even the renewed man finds that when he would do good, evil is present with him. Paul found a law in his members warring against the law of his mind and bringing him into captivity to the law of sin which was in his members.

3. Why does a valley usually suffer earlier and more frequently from frosts than do the adjoining hills?

The United States Weather Bureau reports on this phenomenon as follows: Air, like liquids, arranges itself according to its den-the discourse as brief as twenty minutes. It is often the best method not to make the discourse quite so short as mentioned. But the preacher must have latitude to deliver the message from God that burns in his soul. He will be but a trifle, if he sets a mechanical barrier in the way of proper, elaboration, argument or appeal. Many discourses are dependent for their effectiveness upon the gathering force of sublime truth and emotion, which cannot be forced, but can only come to its maturity when the speaker has led his hearers and has duly waited for them. The set limitation to a brief time tends to depreciate the earnest purpose and effort of the service, and make still more prominent that which is aesthetic merely. The wise preacher will not constantly detain his auditors and often probably will not preach more than twenty minutes. But he will still take time to preach the Word with power and persuasion.

C. P. ATKINSON.

The length of a preacher's discourse at any service should depend on certain conditions and circumstances. The occasion upon which the discourse is given may determine the length. On some occasions, the purpose of the sermon may be of great importance, so great that no preacher could do his subject justice in twenty minutes. Some themes require more time to elucidate than others. The preacher should adapt his sermon to his congregation. Some congregations will listen to a longer discourse than others. The length of a discourse should be suited to the season of year. In the hot summer months a short discourse is preferable. In the long winter evenings, a thirty or forty-minute sermon is none too long, providing it is a helpful one. The preacher should use judgment in the selection of his sermons, and should never torture a congregation by keeping them sitting

OUR DUTY TO THE COMMUNITY

EVERY home owes a duty, not to itself alone, but to the whole community. In its good behavior, its order, its peace, its regard for law and its Sabbath-keeping, it sets an example to every contiguous home, and acts subtly, but certainly, on homes that lie far away from its precincts. The familiar illustration of the pebble thrown into the pond, which stirs the ripples of the ocean, comes to mind here, for no household exists only for itself, or for its own comfort, ease and growth in grace. Neither the individual nor the family can be selfish in this world of many interests and ramifications. We must live for and think of one another, and we do affect each other constantly, whether we will or not.

The special thought in my heart to-day is of the responsibility every mother has in the matter of contagious disease. Boards of Health and School Trustees all over the land do their utmost to prevent the spread of infection; rigid quarantines are maintained, and, in case of small-pox, patients are as speedily as possible removed to hospitals. In certain malignant and dreaded maladies, burial is insisted upon very soon after death, bedding is burned, the house is thoroughly disinfected, and funerals are, of course, limited to the fewest possible number of mourners. These precautions are necessary where people live in close proximity in our towns and villages. There are sometimes thoughtless parents who overlook measures which they may take, over and above the obvious ones which the physician and nurse demand. They do not destroy every book, and every toy, which a little sufferer has had in his hands. The father going to and from his business, permits himself to break the home quarantine, and to help in the care of a child who is supposed to be isolated. One should not forget that in scarlet fever, for instance, germs may lie concealed within the leaves of a book for months and years, and then attack new victims, with terrific possibilities of evil. Do not ignore your duty to the community.

If you have reason to suspect, or to fear, that one of your children is sickening with some dangerous fever, or is contracting mumps or whooping-cough, keep all at home from school until the matter is settled, and you are sure their going will involve no risk to any one.

Ice and snow, except in the colder latitudes, will soon cease to be a menace to pedestrians, though our late winter and early spring may still give us very perilous sidewalks and slippery roads. Each Christian householder, I use the adjective advisedly, should see that pathways for which he is responsible are made safe.

Photographing the Wee Ones.

Photography costs little in these advanced days, when, indeed, a camera is as common as a frying-pan in most houses. Photograph the children often, they

FOUR GENERATIONS

CAN anything be more winsome, more fascinating, than this picture of four generations. The lovely great-grandmother, resting in her chair, taking a placid little cat-nap—as we call such drowsy spells—her face and raiment exquisite alike; the grandmother, who is an active woman, in her prime, president of a club or two, and a power in the land; the charming young mother, and the baby like a snowdrop for sweetness. "With length of days will I satisfy her, and show her my salvation," has been the promise fulfilled to the aged lady. To the little one, the word shall be, that she shall grow in wisdom and stature, and in favor with God and man; and to the other two, each in her time of need, "As thy days thy strength shall be."

change from year to year. It will be very pleasant for them by and bye to see how they looked in babyhood, and their children, in far off days, may look with interest on mother and father as little girl and boy. Don't dress the bairns up too beautifully when they sit for a picture. They really look best in their every-day attire. Many a child is prettier in school clothes than in spick and span Sunday garments.

Resting on the Lord's Day

TIME was that the Lord's day was far more generally than at present, kept as a day of rest. One of my dear CHRISTIAN HERALD friends wrote me recently, saying that she did not know how she could hope to impress the sanctity of the Sabbath on her children, as her husband's business compelled him to keep his store open every Sabbath morning, until long past the hour of going to church. He then, she added, came home so exhausted, having been up very late on Saturday night, that he was obliged to spend most of Sunday in sleeping off his fatigue. "Our very living depends on the business. If customers would only buy on Saturday, and not leave part of their orders for Sunday morning, all would be changed."

Some city grocers and butchers refuse to open on Sunday morning, and they do not find their receipts diminished in consequence. A little forethought and an aroused conscience on the part of patrons would do away with open shops on Sunday. Wherever the existing laws on this subject are not a dead letter on the statute books, but are enforced, shops are closed, and people buy on Saturday for Sunday's needs, or go without. The general custom of having the most elaborate dinner of the week on the Sabbath, leads persons usually scrupulous, to order ices and other desserts from caterers on that day, and very few people hesitate in warm weather, at receiving meat on Sunday morning instead of on Saturday night. With a provision of ice in the refrigerator, and a little planning and extra cooking on Saturday, the Sabbath toil may be largely diminished, and many who have to work hard on six days, may rest on the seventh. We who have transgressed through thoughtlessness here, may reform our own habits, and good examples are as impressive as evil ones everywhere, so that the atmosphere around us may be revitalized, if only we take the first steps.

Aunt Prudence Payson's Catch-All

—READER. The two passages of Scripture you quote belong to different eras and dispensations. The author of Ecclesiastes wrote according to the light he had, which was small, compared to the light Christ brought into the world. Even in the earlier dispensation, one of the leaders had a vision of the truth. In Ezekiel 33: 16, we read that when the sinner repents and turns away from his sin, "none of the sins that he hath committed shall be mentioned unto him; he shall surely live."

"I believe mother's peeping at the door!
I hear her silk gown rustling on the floor!"

"Let the people go or stay,
We are having fun to-day."

THE AGED BIBLE READER

See Illustration on First Page

In a certain quiet village there was an aged saint, to whom all her neighbors came in time of trouble for counsel and comfort. Sometimes the visitor was a mother, whose wayward boy was breaking her heart. Again, a widow in black weeds knocked at her door; or one who had laid her little baby in the grave came weeping; young men and maidens, with their life problems facing them, asked her prayers that God would guide them aright; more than once, grave doctors and lawyers sought her lowly dwelling, to lay before this true and simple soul some question of conscience that had driven sleep from their pillow. Her pastor, an humble, devoted man of God, used to say: "At times, when stress and worry of work and the burden of responsibility pressed upon me, until I felt ill at ease and afar from God, I had only to enter Sister Harriet's room to feel that I had come into the Lord's presence again, so full of righteousness and peace was that place. So often I found her bending over her Bible. How many times she had read it from cover to cover! How many precious passages she had marked! How well she knew God's Word! If I had a sorrow or a doubt, she would turn those pages to just the passage that filled your case. Every one who entered that room came out richer for her giving of treasure beyond price—blessings no money can buy. The lawyer or the merchant who sought her advice was dealt with as I was—first, a sympathetic question or two, then a few simple sentences which, somehow, made the moral truth of a situation clear; followed always by scriptural texts which cast a light before you in the path in which you should go. If you did not go in that path, and came to her again, there was never any impatience, but just a kindness and gentleness in dealing with you. She had rather do the good that woman do, than be a millionaire and build palaces."

How many another aged saint has had cause to say: "Thy word is a lamp unto my feet and a light unto my path!" "O, how I love thy law! it is my meditation all the day." Such a searcher of the Scriptures is pictured in the beautiful illustration on our front page. This is a reproduction—the first ever given—of a famous painting by an American artist, Rhoda Holmes Nicholls. The painting received a gold medal at the Atlanta Exposition; and was, later, one of the 266 pictures selected for the art exhibition at the Paris Exposition. The young artist has been awarded a number of medals, including one at the World's Fair, Chicago, and another at the Pan-American. MYRTA L. AVARY.

To the Fault-Finding Husband

The little incident quoted below may concern you, Mr. Cross-patch. All the fault finders are not in Iowa. A man in Iowa had been storming at his family, especially at his poor wife, one day, until he had spoiled the pleasure of everybody in the home for that day at least. Then he went out, slamming the door behind him. His little boy had stood off at one side listening to it all. He looked into his mother's face with tearful eyes, and coming across the room, took her hand in his own and exclaimed, "Ma, we made an awful mistake when we married Pa, didn't we?"

THE quaint old Georgian home above pictured, has become, within the last few years, a place of national interest. For the photograph from which the production was made, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is indebted to Mr. J. A. Dunwoody, of Dunwoody, De Kalb Co., Ga., who accompanies the picture with the following letter:

"I send you, as requested, portrait of our illustrious President's mother, who was Mrs. Mary McPherson. What is the portrait of my brother, James Bullock Dunwoody, pastor of the McPhersonville, S. C., church, who performed the marriage ceremony of President Roosevelt's father and mother."

She lets you run, and have your fun, and you may run for hours. One hour and you are up and down through gardens, halls and stairs. Our mother-in-law and I have been here for years. And the best of it is, she never seems to get tired. Whatever stent we think of, and she never seems to see. If anything is scratched or torn, I think she's fine, don't you?

Kindness to Animals

THE first annual English to Animals Society, Chicago, has issued general directions to all persons, with reference to their treatment of horses, cats and dogs. Nobody goes about a large city without finding plenty of opportunities to show kindness to our dumb friends, and to rebuke their ill-treatment. Some of these practical suggestions are worth repeating: Always carry with you a little book and a pencil.

If you see any one planning an animal, ask him to stop. If they pay no attention, find out what they are doing, and put these down in your book, making no offense, only saving your time. Then report to the Society, which takes such action as may best.

Try to protect all animals from abuse wherever you see it.

Give water and food to the homeless ones.

If a blanket has fallen from a horse in cold weather, replace it.

Raise the collars from poor-looking horses and report if the shoulder is sore.

Watch the tight check-reins, and report if the horse is in pain.

Speak in a pleasant tone to the blinders that flop against the horse's face.

Never be rude or saucy; that will do harm, and not good.

Pick up bottles and pieces of broken glass from the streets and alleys. (Putting these where animals can step on them is a violation of the city ordinance.)

Ask drivers to turn horses' heads away from the sun; and to loosen the check-reins while standing.

Ask owners of horses to use fly-nets.

Cats like catnip. The homeless ones seldom get any. Give it to them when you can.

Pick up apparently homeless and starved animals on the street. Try to get them good homes, or give them a home, and report to the Society. If you cannot get them a home, bring them to the Homeless office.

Ask your neighbors to keep their dogs and cats in the house, and not on the street.

You can all give a collection of the poor creatures to abuse for animal. Cruelty to animals is a violation of law, punishable with fine and imprisonment.

Be very sure there is good reason before you make a complaint—else the Society may not heed so quickly next time.

Ask your friends to join the Society, and to help all animals that are abused.

China's Desolated Villages

Footprints of the Great Famine in Shensi --- Armies of Beggars Everywhere

IN his sixth letter from the Chinese famine field, Mr. Nichols, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD correspondent, gives a moving picture of the ruin and desolation wrought in Shensi by the famine, and of the condition of its unfortunate people.

SIAN, Shensi, Nov. 26, 1901.
Oh, the stillness of the plain of Sian. Not the restful quiet of a primeval wilderness, but the forced, hushed silence which follows death. Instead of the chattering and laughing of the crowds one usually meets on foot and in carts in traveling through China, there was seldom any sound but the hoof-beats of my own pony. The roads, thousands of years old, were there; the ancient fields, tilled by many generations; hundreds of mud houses rising everywhere on the horizon; but men and women and children—it was vain to look for them. They had gone. They had starved. Almost the only signs of life anywhere were flocks of crows overhead. During the entire four days, I did not pass more than thirty human beings in the road.

When one remembers that the winters of Shensi are colder than those of New York, the sufferings of the unfortunates without a roof over their heads, can be easily imagined. The roof of an ordinary Chinese farm-house is made of thatch, and when it is dry, can always be sold for firewood. But in the case of a long continued famine, the effort to sell so much roof-fuel tends to greatly depreciate the price. Two taels in the city was all that a farmer could get for the roof of his home, which might have taken weeks of labor to build. In front of a cluster of roofless houses, I found a family of seven. The mother and youngest child lived in a shack made of cornstalks. The father of sallow, emaciated faces and tattered clothes, they looked, as they came out to meet us, more like beggars asking alms than land-owning farmers. The head-man of the place occupied the only house possessing a roof. He had paid for it, he told me, by weaving cotton cloth in addition to his daily toil in the field. By working at his primitive loom from sunrise until late at night, he was able to make the equivalent of twenty-seven American cents a day.

In other villages, whose population had formerly numbered seventy and fifty, we found only twenty and ten remaining. Out of a village of Christians who had been especially helped by money from a missionary society, one-third had died, and so the story was told over and over again, everywhere on the great plain.

China. His conversation is heavily interlarded with quotations from the Confucian classics. When he talked about THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Famine Fund, his mandarin dignity relaxed.

"The money came," he said, "just when our own was gone. The United States must be different from other nations. Instead of trying to take land from China, they send us food. This American money, more than guns or bullets, has made us feel kindly towards western civilization."

"I believe that the people see now," he said to me at another time, "how foolish and wrong they were in driving out the Christian missionaries at the time of the Boxer excitement. We are beginning to realize, from the sending of this money, that Christians do not cherish hatred, but forgive, and all over this province there is a new, widespread interest in a religion which can teach such a doctrine."

The famine is over. The autumn crops were enough for immediate needs. The spring harvest promises well; but between them there is almost certain to be an interim of more hunger suffering. With no money to buy food, with few habitable homes, the people of Shensi will shiver and starve in February and March.

To day, just before Mr. Duncan's departure, the following letter of farewell came to him from Shensi's governor:

The calamities of Shensi have been exceedingly heavy. After the relief here we further received the various contributions from the West—magnanimously brought from there to here and abundantly affording relief. Truly the anxiety you, from afar, exercised on our behalf, has lessened our sorrows here. All this is a proof of disinterested friendliness and of a spirit of benevolence that knows no distinctions—regarding neither near nor far nor the barriers between. The destitute black-haired (people) have been refreshed (like land after rain) so that they greatly cherish in feelings of gratitude which are a speaking tablet of ineffaceable testimony. When I think of the advent of your chariot to this western place, to give relief with such discrimination and exhausting toil, I feel very great unrest because we here have not fully fulfilled the obligations of host to you as guests from the West. Kindly excuse us. Further, may I request your good offices in conveying my thanks to all those benevolent and learned the family pointed to the comparatively new farm-house behind him, as he told me that it was built just before the famine.

"We sold the roof for 1,200 cash" (about 70 cents), he said, "and then went into the province of Kan Su. We lived on leaves and weeds—anything; but we were fortunate we were not compelled to sell our children. The other families in the village stayed here. They all died of hunger."

He showed us his stock of provisions for the winter, about five bushels of buckwheat and as many of millet.

"What will you do when that is gone?" "We shall be hungry again," was his reply.

Out of a village of one hundred, there were only a dozen survivors. With their Begging has become a regular institution and business in Sian.

The melancholy groups on the corners are seldom molested as they grovel in the road, asking alms during the day or sleeping in the shelter of buildings at night. They are recognized not as beggars from choice, but as the survivors of farming communities. More men are idle in Sian than in most Chinese cities, and the doors of many of the shops are closed and padlocked, as the result of the hard times.

Soon after my arrival in Sian I called on Li Shao Fen, the "Footai," or governor of the province of Shensi. He received me in his yamen, and later came to see me. Li Shao Fen is a type of the old school conservative official of inland persons who so generously contributed these funds and relieved the calamity of the people here. Now that the distress is gradually disappearing and there is hope of the ordinary prosperity, I hope that in this our hearts will imprint their mutual seal and there be no more concern. Oh this account I respectfully present my compliments, and wish you truth's peace, love's light and every benefit.

I enclose my card,

LI SHAO FEN.

To-morrow Mr. Duncan will leave Sian for Shanghai, but his associates, Dr. Smith and Mr. A. G. Shorrock, will stay to distribute the relief cable to them by THE CHRISTIAN HERALD.

"Good-Bye to All, Good-Bye," is the title of a beautiful song, words and music by J. Reginald MacEachron, C.W. Marvin Publishing Company, Detroit.

The composition is of rare excellence, both words and music. It was suggested by and the theme is based upon the last words of the late President McKinley, and the refrain introduces a phrase of the late President's favorite hymn, "Nearer, My God to Thee." The first stanza reads:

"Nearer, My God, to Thee, How beautiful to know
That when our souls have passed away it is to Him
We go,
Upon a snowy pillow lay a man with dimming eye,
Waiting for the end to come to bid his friends
Good-bye.

While others wept in sorrow, he smiled a peaceful smile;
And thinking of his future home, he murmurs all
The while,
"Nearer, My God, to Thee," "Thy will be done,"
"It is His will, not mine," etc.

The music has fine harmonies, and is suitable for parlor or church. The title page is embellished with carnations, the late President's favorite flower.

If not obtainable at music stores, we will send, postpaid, for 25 cents.

Chapter XVI—Continued

DURING the seasons of sojourn in the New England hamlet, Immanuel attended the village school, and associated freely with the village children in all their work and play. He learned to swim, to skate and coast, to build a snow-fort, and lead a spirited attack on a rival fortress. He was a favorite with every one, because of his beauty and the gay sweetness of his nature. During these joyous years all the unnatural sadness which had fallen upon him like a blight, from Erastus Winch's sour nature, vanished. He was a happy, light-hearted child, growing healthily like a young tree into his appointed stature.

The old man watched over him with a yearning love, which grew with the years. One daily custom of the two must be mentioned, since out of it grew unmeasunderstand me perfectly or not," he said; "I am not able to teach you as he will. Just as you listen to me now, my lad, and try to understand, so you must listen every day to your Father. Sit quite alone and keep very still after you have bathed and dressed, and God will teach you just how to live during the day that is before you. Do not think your own thoughts; only listen. If you remember to do this faithfully every day of your life, you will always be in the right place and know how to do the right thing. And you will not fall into the tangle of foolish thoughts that makes the world seem dark and wretched to those who do not care to learn from their Father."

This was no new idea, and Moses Armitage was aware of it. He had found it universally observed, with more or less understanding of its meaning, during his ured results. It was simple enough. Moses Armitage inaugurated it thus the very day the child was given over to him formally.

"SEEMED A VISION OF FAIRYLAND TO THE COUNTRY-BRED LAD"

"Immanuel," he said to him, "you are really my boy now."

"I am glad," answered the child, and his face glowed like a flower.

"But you must not forget your Father. You are his child; you will always be. In order that you may make the best of your living, you must every day take a lesson from the Father, just as that wonderful man did of whom I told you. He will delight to teach you if you will but listen. Presently you will take lessons in French, German and Latin from teachers who know these languages. But no one can give you lessons in the art of being what you are meant to be, except your Father. I made some terrible mistakes, my boy, before I found this out. I want you to be happier than I have been; there is only the one way. Do you understand?"

The child nodded his head, his great eyes fixed on the face of his uncle with absorbed attention.

The old man observed this with a smile. "It really does not matter whether you travels in Oriental countries, and knowing the great tenacity of the Eastern idea, he conceived that the custom was not unknown in the days of Jesus, and that to those hours of communion with the Father might be traced in great measure the unfoldings of that wonderful life, which are summed up in the simple words, "And the child grew in grace, and in favor with God and man."

So, he argued, did he listen among the hills of Palestine during those years of solitude, before he emerged into the light of sacred history. And so, in his own degree, may a little child in any age grow in favor with God and man.

Chap. XVII—An Experiment

ONE sparkling afternoon in late October found the two—the old man, still hale and vigorous, and the child, now grown into a handsome lad of twelve—walking slowly down a wide avenue in America's chief city. Palaces lined the street on either side; gorgeously appareled women with haughty faces lolled on the soft cushions of the rapidly driven carriages. There was opulence of

A LITTLE HIGHLAND MAID

"MAUDY" GROSS, THE THIRTEEN-YEAR-OLD GIRL WHO CONDUCTED A SUNDAY SCHOOL

"MAUDY" GROSS—it is not a very attractive name, but it belongs to a most attractive little highland sprite, who was discovered far away in the mazes of the roadless Cumberlands. She was found by Dr. Saunders and his daughter, Louise, Missionaries of the Society of Soul-Winners.

"Maudy" was one of a lot of little the work to her during an absence of six months.

To-day, a most accomplished lady, Miss Mary McCorkle Wilson, is conducting that Mission of the Society of Soul-Winners—and little "Maudy" is a student in the Bellevue College at Wilmore, Kentucky. A noble South Carolina lady and her son have undertaken to educate "Maudy," that she may be qualified to teach her people the way of life. God alone knows what a power for good she may become in his hands. She is only one of many hundreds of bright mountain children, who are reached by the Society of Soul-Winners. The Society's schools are found in the Alleghanies of North Carolina, the Great Smoky Mountains of Tennessee, and the wide Cumberlands of Kentucky. Those who desire to help the Society in this very deserving work, can write to Rev. Dr. Edward O. Guerrant, President of the Society of Soul-

"MAUDY" GROSS

The Kentucky child who taught a Sunday School

Grosses, and Gays, and Yorks, and their playmates, who lived along the banks of the beautiful Middle Fork of the Kentucky River. Great mountains shut out all but the sky, and the children played along the banks and watched the river and the world go by. They never saw a church, a Sunday School, or even so much as heard there was a better place than Squabble Creek, or a higher house than Peter McIntosh's.

But the Soul-Winners gathered the lost sheep and lambs beneath a big tent, and taught them wonderful lessons of God's love and power. They came in crowds, out of the valleys and over the mountains, big and little, old and young, until they filled the Gospel tent. Their Sabbath School ran all the week, every day. A little organ helped them sing, and the mountains echoed the songs.

The children of the hills memorized one catechism after another, until they had mastered four, though many of them could not read. They memorized the Scriptures by chapters, to the amazement of people who never saw the like before. Among them all, little "Maudy" stood first, by common consent. She was gentle as a fawn and as swift, free as the air on her native mountains, and pure-hearted as the streams. Dr. Saunders and his faithful helpers, taught every day, and many precious souls were won. Little "Maudy," too, gave her heart to Christ. The people determined to have a church, the first one in that land beyond preachers and teachers. They hewed the logs on the mountains, floated them to a saw-mill, and hauled the planks to a mountain spur overlooking the river valley. There the church stands to-day, on Laurel Point, "beautiful for situation, the joy of the whole land."

Winter drew on, and Miss Louise and her father had to return home for a season; but the work could not stop, for crowds of hungry souls were to be fed. And who should conduct the school during the absence of Miss Louise? This was a momentous question in that mountain settlement. Little "Maudy" was equal to the emergency—probably the only one both able and willing to do it. She was only thirteen years old. The school numbered some fifty, and many of them grown. But this slip of a mountain girl of thirteen, conducted that mission-school during the whole winter, and did it well! Her teacher confidently committed

FORGIVENESS

[T] is no little thing to ask
That one forgive;
It is in truth no simple task
To toil and live;
But life can have no charm for him
Who merely moves to shun the ills
Beneath its crumbling archways dim,
Nor looks for dawn along the hills.
Sull to the crushed and withered rose
Its perfumes cling,
So life lacks love unless it shows
In suffering.
Love has no meed unless it be
The love that lasts whenever tried,
The love that bides unselfishly
Until the future shall decide.
The broken heart is watched of God;
He marks its tears,
Who brings the blossom from the sod
And fills the years.
Divinity is in that soul,
That careth though it oft reproves,
For the Creator of us all
Loves and forgives, forgives and loves.

Coffee Drinkers Require Proof.

When persons insist on taking some kind of food or drink that causes disease it is not fair to blame a Doctor for not relieving them.

Coffee keeps thousands of people sick in spite of all the Doctor can do to relieve them. There is but one way to get well. That is to quit coffee absolutely: a great help will be to shift over to Postum Food Coffee.

A case of this kind is illustrated by Mrs. E. Kelley, 233-8th Ave., Newark, N. J., who says, "I have been ailing for about eight years with bilious trouble and indigestion. Every doctor told me to give up coffee. I laughed at the idea of coffee hurting me, until about three years ago I was taken very bad and had to have a doctor attend me regularly.

The Doctor refused to let me have coffee, but prescribed Postum Food Coffee. I soon got to making it so well that I could not tell the difference in taste between Postum and the common coffee.

I began to improve right away and have never had a bilious spell since giving up coffee and taking on Postum. When I started I weighed 100 pounds, now I weigh 130. My friends ask what has made the change and, of course, I tell them it was leaving off coffee and taking up Postum.

I know husband will never go back to the old-fashioned coffee again. You can use my name if you print this letter for I am not ashamed to have the public know just what I have to say about Postum and what it has done for me."

"How?"

"Oh, something new—The Morley Ear-drum. I've a pair in my ears now, but you can't see 'em—they're invisible. I wouldn't know I had 'em in my ears, only that I hear all right."

The Morley Ear-drum makes up for the weakness of the ear, and is the most perfect, reliable, and comfortable of all ear-aiding devices. No wires, no tubes, no glass. Invisible, comfortable, safe. Adjusted by any one.

An Enthusiastic Convention
New Jersey's State Convention of Young Men's Christian Associations in Session at Camden

VERY encouraging was the situation described at the State Convention of the Young Men's Christian Associations of New Jersey, recently held at Camden. Two hundred delegates were present, representing the eleven hundred members of the Association in Jersey City, Trenton, and other cities. Mr. Frederick H. Andrews, of Plainfield, was elected Chairman of the Convention, and Mr. George C. Stebbins, of Camden, had charge of the musical exercises. Three sessions were held on each of the four days of the Convention.

MR. F. H. ANDREWS

Rev. James I. Vance, D.D., of Newark, N. J., in the course of an eloquent address, called attention to the fact that the Association now has a footing in fifty nations; its members number 521,000, speaking thirty-five languages. In the United States alone, there are 1,476 organizations, with an aggregate of 278,000 members, and holding property valued at $22,735,000. The value of its work could be seen by the position of such a town as Camden, in which were 25,000 young men, more than 20,000 of whom lived in boarding-houses. It was easy to understand how much the Association could do for such young men in affording them the comfort of friendly society and helping them to resist the allurements of the saloon and questionable resorts.

Mr. H. S. Colburn, of New York City, reminded the Convention of the testimony of Secretary of War, Root, that no influence had done so much toward moulding his character as the Young Men's Christian Association.

Captain J. B. Coghlan, who commanded the Raleigh at the battle of Manila, spoke in glowing terms of the benefits the Navy had derived from the work of the Y.M.C.A. He said: "It has only been a few years since your Association began to work among our men, but I can safely say that if the success you have achieved in other fields is in proportion to that you have had in the Navy, then your Association is one of the greatest instruments for good which has appeared in modern times. Those of you who are not thoroughly acquainted with the work of the Naval branch, can scarcely conceive of the amount of good already done. It has bettered the service to an astonishing degree. I hope you will continue your work. Remember, that by the brave and true, failures are never counted. Therefore, whatever the difficulties may be, never slack up for a minute. The true gauge of your success lies not in the numbers you may gain, but rather in the height to which you can raise your weaker brethren."

THE LIGHT OF TRUTH

(N)EY through the light of truth
Let your pathway go.
Then the way of light will show
You shall learn to know
God will lead you in the night.
If with truth you live,
And the pathway you should tread,
Conscience then will tell.

Ne'er in aught try to deceive,
To gain a better life.
For deception, in the end,
Leads to sorrow and strife.
And results that you desire
Depend on truth and love.
And your soul will realize
Deep peace and joy above.

Let the holy light of truth
Lead you to the light.
And your soul will find sweet peace,
Then, whatever betide,
Truth and love to lead the soul,
Ever guide aright.
Happiness you'll only find
Following their light.

A Regular Full-Size Package For You to Try at Our Expense

We tell you what we think about Malt Breakfast Food, but that isn't half as convincing as one spoonful of the real food at your table.

We know you will like Malt Breakfast Food—we know you will find it tastes good and is nourishing. It contains all the food-value of nature's great food-grain, wheat, acted upon and made easily soluble by the natural digestive agent, malt diastase. It thus combines malt and wheat in a delicious, nutritious, easily prepared breakfast cereal.

Malt Breakfast food is good for everybody, everywhere, at all times, but rises to its highest usefulness when used by growing children, brain workers, and nervous people of sensitive digestions.

Write us to-day and we will send, free of all expense to you, an order on your grocer for a regular sized package. We want you for your good, and ours, to use Malt Breakfast Food, and we know you will use it if you try it.

FAMOUS BIBLE READERS

A Careful Student Gives Suggestions to Readers of the Word

WILL you kindly enroll my name among your Bible readers, not because of the number of times of complete perusals of the Book during certain consecutive years, but rather because of what I believe, from personal experience, to be a more satisfactory method of using the Word of God. Forty years ago, in the glow of the early enthusiasm of conversion, I desired to do that which would at once equip me with a knowledge of the truth, and also to form a habit which, others assured me, would be a helpful factor in the development of at least one Christian virtue—love of the Word. Beginning in 1862, I took up the self-imposed task of reading the Bible entire each year. Faithfully did I bear this yoke during four years, but during the next reading (1866), my eyes were no longer holden, and I promised God that if he would forgive me, I would, in the days to come, do less long-distance reading and more studying for hidden truth.

To-day I am fully persuaded that more and better results may be obtained from the conscientious study of a few verses, topically selected, than from a cursory, and hence superficial acquaintance with six or eight sections, called chapters, each day. Personal Bible reading should be inspired by no lower motive than a sincere desire to know how to discern truth from error, and only the Holy Spirit can reveal to us what is the will of God through the medium of his Divine Word.

Such revelations will come to the seeker after wisdom; which, after all, is the principal thing. Bible research, like all other Christian activities, should have a motive, and that motive should be founded on knowledge and love, regulated by supreme law, and influenced by duty to others. Then shall the Word truly be a lamp unto our feet and a light unto our paths.

The further I journey on the western slope of life, the more I am persuaded that the precepts of my wisdom teach me, in my relation to a Book denominated "Holy," to read less and study more.

Once upon a time, there lived in Laodicea, which is the chief city of Phrygia, Pacatiana, a preacher of renown, who, addressing himself to a novitiate, used this language: "Meditate upon these things; give thyself wholly to them; that thy profiting may appear to all." Jersey City, N. J. GEO. H. CORFIELD.

Mrs. G. V. Addis, Hoyt, Pa., since 1880 has read the New Testament through thirty-eight times and the Bible several times. She adds, "I love it more and more as the days go by."

J. E. Lothrop, Dover, N. H., has read the Bible thirty-nine times.

O. B. Ward, Bellevue, Mich., has read the Old Testament sixteen times and the New hundreds of times.

The Rev. B. B. Tyler, D. D., pastor of the South Broadway Christian Church, Denver, and member of the International Sunday School Session Committee, has read the New Testament through once each month since 1864.

Preaching in the Canary Islands

Mr. and Mrs. C. S. MacKnight, who are conducting missionary work among the Spanish residents of the Canary Islands, off the west coast of Africa, writes to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, reporting very cheering progress. A great spiritual movement is taking place. The people are showing a marked interest in the Gospel teachings, and in everything that relates to the life of Christ. Influential Spaniards are furthering the work. The New Testament is now being read in many homes. Many poor come to the mission for food and clothing, and to these also the Gospel is taught. Drought for two years past has produced a famine in some of the islands. In many sections, Sunday is still desecrated by bull-fights, cock-fights, and similar spectacles. The MacKnight Mission has issued a series of "Spanish Animal Leaflets," with the view of checking cruelty to animals. Mrs. MacKnight writes:

Our book and Bible depot is now open in Las Palmas, and has a stock of Christian Spanish literature, and also a large section included for Spanish literature on kindness to animals. We wish to be known for such, for it is in hand with the Gospel, and it is a very necessary work in all Spanish lands.

The mission is located at Tapra Las Palmas, Canary Islands, and is supported wholly by voluntary contributions. The managers will gladly reply to any letter of inquiry concerning the work.

Premiums that Gave Pleasure

The pictures you so kindly sent were greatly admired. Better than all beside, they found their way to the heart of a loved invalid, who often says, "How pretty they are." Then came the book, Heaven Home and Happiness, with articles that everyone must enjoy. As I think of all these, I think one's heart must be hard, and his mind perverted, who does not find the money put into THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, well expended.

Good Advice

A writer in the Chaparrone Magazine on Flannels, Blankets and Laces insists on little wringing for woollens and no rubbing for laces. Every intelligent woman has a method of her own but all agree on those two points—hard points using ordinary bar soap—harder still with penny—cheap Washing powders.

Have used Pearlina a number of years, and like it very much for all kinds of flannel garments. They are still and clean after washing. Mrs. B. C. T.

I have given your washer a fair trial. It is one of the best washers I ever saw. It washed three pairs of my dirty and greasy overalls and overalls in ten minutes and washed them clean. My housekeeper says it would have taken her two hours to have washed them the old way. It will wash ten shirts, with collars and cuffs, in seven minutes. It will wash three washes without changing the water, only adding soap suds and about two quarts of hot water after the first wash.

I have been a delegate and attended twenty-six conventions held in different parts of the country, and my name is known on nearly every railroad in the United States and Canada. I am an engineer of the New York Division of the Erie road and have run an engine for forty years.

SAFE in the LIGHTHOUSE!

A Wanderer Tells the Story of his Rescue at the Bowery Mission.

THIS is an experience, typical of hundreds of others that have come to light in connection with the spiritual and rescue work of the Bowery Mission. It is the story of a young man whose life for years had been spent in wickedness. He had enacted the part of the Prodigal, and was fast drifting downward, when he saw the beacon lights of the old Mission, heard its voices of help calling to him and laid hold of the life-line that was flung to him. Here is his story from his own lips:

"Many times did I ask myself what is my name, during the five years I spent in dissipation and sin, and never did I think of it as much as I did the night I wandered into the Bowery Mission. It was there I first began to recall that awful past, and all the crooked and dishonest ways I had of obtaining money. 'Being an orphan, I got a friend, and into my head that I should be my own boss,' and the more I dwelt on the thought that no one should rule over me, the more determined I became that nobody should, and in trying to govern myself, I lost my reputation, friends and the confidence, as well as the love, of my relatives, and also got the name of being a crook and a rogue.

"I had a good home, surrounded on all sides by Christian influences, for which I cared nothing. I was often advised by friends and relatives to give up the life of sin, and try to live an honest, upright, Christian life, but I paid no heed. At last, through my own actions, I was forced to leave home and go forth into the world. I had a small sum of my ill-gotten money, besides jewelry and clothing, that I had stolen from my relatives, and after wandering here and there, I drifted into the Bowery Mission. I never knew anything about the missions, and never cared to know; but something prompted me to go in. I listened to the prayers, the singing and the testimonies, and still I was not moved.

"I returned next night, and when the invitation was given I went forward, meaning to be honest and sincere with God and man. I knelt down, and asked God, for Jesus' sake, to forgive me for all the wrong I had done in the past. From that day, Sept. 12, 1901, to the present time, God has wonderfully blessed me. Through the instrumentality of the officers at the Bowery Mission, I secured employment in one of the largest business houses of its kind in the United States, as assistant shipping-clerk, early in November, and to-day I have full charge of one of its many departments. I have gained the friendship of many Christian people and the forgiveness of my sins not by God alone, but by my relatives as well.

"Here, in New York, I have a good reputation as well as a good name, and I am striving day by day, with God's help, to live a Christian life, for it certainly pays. 'So I say, God bless the Bowery Mission, its officers and its Rescue League! My tongue cannot sufficiently praise them all too highly. I earnestly hope and pray that its doors will never be closed, and that through it many more souls may be brought into the kingdom.'

During the past week the following "one dollar a year" pledges in aid of the work of the Bowery Mission have been received:

Giant Flowering Caladium

Greatest foliage and flowering plant yet introduced. Leaves 3 to 5 feet long by 2 or 2 1/2 feet broad; perfectly immense, and make a plant which for tropical luxuriance has no equal. Added to this wonderful foliage effect are the mammoth lily-like blossoms, 12 to 15 inches long, snow-white, with a rich and exquisite fragrance. Plants bloom perpetually all summer in the garden, or all the year round in pots. Not only is it the grandest garden or lawn plant, but as a pot plant for large windows, verandas, halls, or conservatories, it rivals the choicest palms in foliage, to say nothing of its magnificent flowers. Thrives in any soil or situation, and grows and blooms all the year, and will astonish every one with its magnificence—so novel, effective, free growing and fragrant.

Fine plants, which will soon bloom and reach full perfection, 25c. each; 3 for 60c.; 6 for $1.00 by mail, postpaid, guaranteed to arrive in good condition.

The Revival in Samaria

A Layman's Experience in Preaching and Teaching Christ

By MRS. M. BAXTER

OUR Lord's command to his disciples had been to "preach the Gospel to every creature." They had obeyed him by tarrying in Jerusalem until they were endued with power from on high. But now that the power of God was upon them; they had begun at Jerusalem, and the further commission had yet to be carried out: "Ye shall be witnesses unto me both in Jerusalem, and in all Judea, and in Samaria, and unto the uttermost part of the earth" (Acts 1: 8). God's plan had been laid before them; but how should they know when it was time to leave Jerusalem and go farther afield?

The Lord had already taught them, when he first sent them forth to preach, "When they persecute you in one city, flee ye into another." "When they persecute you." This was to be the signal for a move. A great persecution had arisen against the Church which was at Jerusalem, and they were all scattered abroad throughout the regions of Judea and Samaria—the very next places named in God's plan for them. Is God's plan another for his Church in these days? Is it not, first, that the believer shall be filled with the Holy Ghost; then home missions; the awakening of the Church and family life at home in the power of the Spirit, which will certainly arouse persecution; then the nearer-lying mission-fields; and then the uttermost parts of the earth? The same man, Saul of Tarsus, who seems to have been a leader in the execution of Stephen under the influence of strong religious zeal, was foremost in persecuting the Church. He thought with himself—having as yet no real acquaintance with God, and following out the dictates of an unenlightened conscience—that he "ought to do many things contrary to the name of Jesus of Nazareth" (Acts 26: 9-11). Thus he "made havoc of the Church."

Persecution, then, was the recognized signal for a move. "Therefore, they that were scattered abroad went everywhere preaching the Word." Questions as to expediency, as to how it would affect their obtaining employment, how they would be able to pay their way, etc., were referred to him who sent them, and he never sent any of them at their own charges. The preaching of the Word, the telling out to others the wondrous secret which had transformed their own lives, took the first place with these early Christians; they did seek first the kingdom of God and his righteousness. Can we doubt that all necessary things were added unto them (Matt. 6: 33)? Those in whose hearts the fire of the Holy Ghost is really kindled cannot but burn and shine. They are at home when they get an opportunity to testify for their Master; and they trust God to prepare them such opportunities, and are on the watch for them.

One of those who were scattered abroad was Philip, who, as well as Stephen, was one of the seven deacons chosen by the Church at Jerusalem (Acts 6: 2-6). He went down to the city of Samaria, and preached Christ unto them. The field had been prepared, perhaps, by the woman of Samaria, whom Jesus had met outside Sychar, and a great awakening took place. "The people with one accord gave heed unto those things which Philip spake, hearing and seeing the miracles which he did. And there was great joy in that city." Persecution of believers, casting them especially upon the Lord in prayer, and power in testimony go together.

The enemy of souls manifests his enmity to the children of God, not only by stirring up outward persecution against them, but by his favorite device of bringing unsatisfactory members into the Church. Samaria was a good field for this work of Satan. There was a lack in the work there—Philip had preached Christ indeed, but we do not read that he had preached either repentance or the filling with the Holy Ghost. He may have done so, but it is not said. The Samaritans had much of which they needed to repent. Their religion was mixed with much idolatry, and the plough needed to enter deep into their hearts.

"When the apostles at Jerusalem heard that Samaria had received the Word of God, they sent unto them Peter and John, who, when they were come down, prayed for them that they might receive the Holy Ghost (for as yet He was fallen upon none of them; only they were baptized in the name of the Lord Jesus)." Possibly, Philip himself was not satisfied with his converts; he probably saw a great difference between them and those who, in Jerusalem, were filled with the Holy Ghost when they believed. "The power of an endless life" was not perceptible in his Samaritan converts, and it may have been Philip who sent to Jerusalem about this important matter. Peter and John at once perceived what was wanting; and, having prayed for the disciples, they laid their hands on them, and they received the Holy Ghost. Probably they taught them, also, how the only power to lead the true life of God is to be filled with the Spirit, and thus only could they cease from themselves and live the life of Christ, to which they were called.

THE SECRET OF ENDURANCE*

How Help and Encouragement May be Derived from a Being Invisible to Mortal Eyes

GRAND generals have said that the hardest test of a soldier's mettle is to have him stand still under fire, and that for one man who can do that without shrinking, there are a hundred who can be brave in a charge. It is much easier to rush on to an attack than to stand firm in an exposed position. Whatever may be the psychological explanation of that fact, there is no doubt that it is true, and that the same quality in spiritual matters is comparatively a rarity. When there is some great abuse to be attacked, some gross injustice to be fought, some impending outrage to be met and overcome, an enthusiasm is aroused which brings brave hearts to the front and valiant fighters into the field. There is a joy in the battle, and men struggle, and if necessary, would lay down their lives in the conflict. But there are lives in which there is no less valor, that have not the help of this movement and activity and enthusiasm. In some of our sparsely settled districts, there is one Christian family surrounded by families wholly irreligious. In some factories there is one Christian man, while the great majority, if not all, are scoffers. In some households there is one Christian, while all the other members are hostile to religion. In all these cases it requires courage of a high order to be true to the faith, to simply hold on and keep the light burning. Such lives are often a continual martyrdom, an endurance of slights and insults that wear down the spirit.

The grandeur of this kind of heroism is too often overlooked. We regard the lives of people whose lot it is to suffer rather than to do, as commonplace. Yet if we could look into the souls of such people we should find there a fortitude that is the highest kind of heroism. It may be in a rear chamber, where, year after year, a sufferer lies bearing physical pain. Who can tell what it costs such a victim to be patient and cheerful? It may be in a home where a pious woman must endure the taunts of a scoffing husband, and must strive to bring up her children in the fear of God, amid the curses and ridicule of their own father. How easy for her to let her religion go and yield to the influence around her! Or it may be in the soul itself. There are some among us whose life is one continual battle with temptation. Some inherited or acquired propensity, such as the desire for intoxicating liquor, or the fierce demand of lust, compels perpetual vigilance and a strong grasp on the enemy, that must not be relaxed for a moment. How often the poor besieged soul feels like abandoning the struggle and submitting to the enemy! In these and many more instances there is none of the enthusiasm, the glory of victory, but only the drudgery of holding the fort. It is often weary, heavy work, that brings no meed of applause, and that seems unnoticed and unknown. Yet, how grand it really is!

How is such fortitude to be acquired? What are the sources from which gentle, rail natures draw such wonderful tenacity? The writer of this epistle tells us. It comes from seeing him who is invisible. Those words sound like a paradox; but it is not difficult to understand their meaning. A person may be invisible to another at a particular time, being at a distance. Thus a man in his business may see his wife and children, who may be miles away in his home, and he may endure a good deal of hardship for their sake as he sees them who are just then invisible to his physical vision. A man who is contending for a principle may be nerved for the struggle by a vision of the improved conditions which will ensue if his fight ends in victory, as the social reformer battling against the liquor traffic, thinks of what his country would be without that gigantic evil. No such condition exists, it is invisible, but the vision of the invisible condition gives fresh vigor to his arm. He sees the invisible and is comforted and encouraged. So it is that men endure as seeing God. We cannot in the flesh see him, but he is very near to those who love him. Isaiah is represented as seeing his glory and Moses as seeing him as he passed and as talking face to face with him in the mount; but not to those men was he more present than he is to many now, who but for their consciousness of his nearness would fail in their work. We may know his ways, we may speak with him, his hand may have worked our deliverance when none other could, and so close may have been our communion with him, that he has become the most certain and assured friend we have. Thus, though invisible to mortal eyes, the eye of faith perceives him, and we can endure whatever comes, as seeing him who is invisible.

FRESH AND STRONG Food That Sends One Along

"I found a food at last that I could work on and that would keep me fresh and strong. I have been a school teacher for eleven years, and every year toward the last have felt more or less worn out, and have been bothered particularly with my stomach and serious constipation.

"Last year I used Grape-Nuts regularly at both morning and evening meals and the result was really wonderful. I have been entirely relieved of the troubles spoken of, and don't know what it is to take a dose of physic any more. The old nervousness and sleeplessness have gone. No more do I lie awake nights until my brain is in a whirl. Now I sleep all night long like a healthy child.

"I was the only teacher out of fourteen, in our public school, who did not miss a day on account of sickness during the last session. I have been able to do more hard studying than ever before, and took up the teachers' State reading work, completed the course and passed a successful examination at the last institute.

"Grape-Nuts in my case has proved the truth of the assertion that it is a brain and nerve builder. I would especially recommend it to tired, over-worked school teachers, or any other brain worker." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

It is far wiser to build up health and strength naturally with food than to crutch along on some kind of medicine and let the disease finally do its work.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS

I. For answers to the questions which appear below, when accepted, we will allow compensation for the matter used at the rate of One Dollar a hundred words. Answers should so far as possible be limited to one hundred words.

II. Answers must be received at this office three weeks in advance of the date on which they are intended to appear.

III. The editor reserves the right to condense accepted answers when necessary, and compensation will be based on the matter as printed.

IV. Do not write inquiring if your material has been accepted. If it appears on this page, you will know that it has been accepted.

V. We cannot return any MSS. sent to the Editor of THE MAIL-BAG—not even if stamps accompany them.

VI. Write only on one side of the sheet, and never send on the same sheet anything intended for any other department of the paper. Correspondents answering more than one question should append their name and address to each answer.

VII. Letters addressed to the Mail-Bag must contain the names and addresses of the writers, not for publication, but in order that answers may be sent by mail when that mode is preferable.

VIII. Address all communications intended for this department, Editor The Mail-Bag, The Christian Herald, Bible House, New York.

Readers are invited to forward new questions which they believe would be suitable for discussion in this department.

SPECIAL NOTICE

In future, only one question will be submitted each week, in order that a larger space may be devoted to a full discussion of that question. We publish herewith a list of questions to be answered on the respective dates, so that our correspondents may have abundance of time to prepare their answers.

To be Answered in the Issue of March 26

What ten American scenes and places should Prince Henry have seen or visited here, in order to receive the most accurate impression of the nation's spirit and character and of our republican institutions?

To be Answered in the Issue of April 9

Is the widespread diffusion of advanced education an unqualified blessing, or is it true, as has been charged, that it tends to produce a large class who are averse to productive industry as a life occupation, and who ultimately become a burden upon the community at large?

To be Answered in the Issue of April 16

In what way may women best utilize their influence in securing the peace of the world?

To be Answered in the Issue of April 23

What are we to infer from Scripture as to the future state? Do the statements in Revelation imply that it is a life in a magnificent city or a state of moral and intellectual progress? Will it be a disembodied condition? What is the modern Christian idea concerning it?

To be Answered in the Issue of April 30

If, as science asserts, the act of dissolution is as painless as that of birth, the individual being unconscious alike of both, how can we account for the dread with which many Christians, as well as other people, regard it?

To be Answered in the Issue of May 14

Do great national religious conventions tend to the advancement of spiritual life and work? What are the chief objections to them, and what the principal advantages to be derived from them?

To be Answered in the Issue of May 21

Is it right under any circumstances to pray for riches?

To be Answered in the Issue of May 28

Which is the purest, the most unselfish and the truest—the love of the sexes, the love between two friends, or the love that exists between parents and children, and which of the three is capable of the greatest sacrifice?

Miscellaneous Questions

Frank C., Kalamazoo, Mich. Don't you think great and good men like Carnegie, who give so much money for the good of the young men of our country, might go down a little farther and reach the children of the very poor, who do not go to school or get any start in life for good, but are growing up to fill the ranks of criminals and paupers?

There is certainly a wide field for philanthropy in the direction indicated; but Mr. Carnegie has chosen for himself another field, which is equally important. His motto is to do "one thing well," and we are not among those who would criticize him because he does not divide his energies.

M. H., Okolona, Miss. How did the cornflower come to be chosen as Prussia's national flower?

When Queen Louisa (great grandmother of Prince Henry, who is now our guest) was fleeing, a refugee before the victorious armies of Napoleon, she stopped for awhile at Memel. With her two little sons, Fritz and Wilhelm, she loved to ramble into the fields, where they would gather cornflowers to crown her with, while she in turn wreathed their fair heads with the pretty blue blossoms. When, in 1807, King Frederick William III., arranged a festival at Tilsit in honor of the Treaty of Peace between Napoleon and Alexander of Russia, the ladies and gentlemen of Napoleon's suite came blazing in jewels; but Prussia's beautiful Queen, the darling of her people, had only simple cornflowers on her hair and shoulders for decoration. Some unpleasant criticisms were made; and a French Marshal, it is said, made impudent by his master's victory, remarked upon the poverty of her adornment in a voice so loud that she could not hear. Upon which she turned and said, with gentle dignity: "Herr Marshal, know that all my jewelry is in your hands. You have sacked our country, our valuables are all gone to France. Your horses have trampled our fields; there will be no harvest; our lands are barren because of your invasion, and so it comes to pass, that even wild flowers have become as rare as jewels in Prussia." When her son, William I., came to be King of Prussia and German Kaiser, his love for the little blue cornflower was so pronounced that it has popularly come to be regarded as Germany's national emblem.

M. W., Ohio. Can a person who was really converted and joined a church, but afterwards fell into grievous sin, hope to be forgiven and restored?

There is no doubt of it, if the person is sincerely repentant and quits the sin and asks for pardon in the name of Christ. The trouble is, that in such cases, there is seldom any desire for pardon. The most difficult of all cases to win for Christ are backsliders. The writer of the Epistle to the Hebrews thought that it was impossible to get them ever again to seek the way of life. But it is very certain that those who do may find it. God's love is infinite, and all through his Word invitations the need of man. Many have arisen since his time, as he warned us there would, who have claimed to be God in human form, like Beha and Abbas Effendi now making that claim in Persia; but they were and are impostors. They are deceiving many, as Christ said impostors would (see Matt. 24: 24), but not those who look to Christ for light and guidance.

H. M. F., Fincastle, Va. Is the idea correct, that good temper, like beauty, is a certain gift of nature, which one cannot have unless born with it?

While it may be true that temper, like many other traits, is inherited, it is equally certain that even the worst of tempers may be greatly improved by judicious training, earnest personal effort, or pleasant and agreeable surroundings. Some are unquestionably born with gentler natures than others, expressing themselves in kind words and agreeable deeds.

Reader, Chicago. Is it true, as I lately heard a preacher say, that God is in every tree and flower, and everything in nature?

There can be no doubt that as God is the source of life, there is no life where he is not. It is, however, a subtle and dangerous temptation to dwell so much on this aspect of truth, as to conceive of God as a mere influence pervading the universe. That conception of him blinds us to his personality, which is distinctly revealed in Scripture. We can never acquire a full knowledge of such a those children, and would receive only children whose parents could pay. And suppose that philanthropists, indignant at the diversion of the founder's intentions, built a school to carry out those intentions, which of the two would be the original institution of the founder? Would it be the one that was first in time, but was not faithful, or the one that was doing the work that the founder proposed to do?

Here is one of a number of letters received on the open saloon question:

I want to express to you my thanks for the unmistakable words in your editorial against the open saloon. Also, for the host of testimonies you have brought before the people. May God use these words to arouse our people on this great question.

Reader, Galesburg, Ill. It is wise not to judge wholly by appearances. It is quite possible that the matter could be explained satisfactorily.

A. F. L., Marion, Mass. It is a mistake to suppose that new writers are discriminated against. Any one who writes what is needed, and writes it well, is certain to succeed.

T. E. J., White Oak, Ga. The question is equivalent to asking which is the worse, the knave or the fool? It depends upon the point of view; although naturally sympathy will usually be found on the side of the latter.

Reader, Hartford, Conn. Marriages between Catholics and Protestants generally turn out unsatisfactorily, and often bring life-long misery. There is usually difficulty concerning the faith in which the children are to be reared.

J. D. G., Centralia, Mo. 1. So it is stated. 2. Xmas is simply a contracted form of writing Christmas. It seems to have been used in the early days of the Church. 3. It was necessary in Eastern countries, but not in colder climates.

Mrs. B. W. M., Tennesse, Ga. Polygamy is practised, though secretly and by adroitly evading any open infringement of the law. Where any considerable number of people are in collusion to defeat the law, they may succeed for a time, and this is the present situation in Utah.

Anxious, Waterloo, Can. If you are forgiven, your sins are "covered." If your repentance has been sincere, and you have asked God for Christ's sake to pardon, you need no longer feel anxious about the past. It is beyond recall, and regrets are unavailing and un-Christian. Rather rejoice in the love that has forgiven so much. That which God no longer charges against you need no longer be a stumbling block in your path. If restrictions or atonement were possible, it would be your duty, but these are not possible.

HOW TO FRAME OUR ART PORTFOLIO PICTURES

Hundreds of readers who have received our beautiful Art Portfolio, write us that they think so highly of the twelve exquisite pictures contained therein that they wish to hang them upon their walls, and they ask our advice as to the best manner of framing them. The following suggestions are according to the consensus of opinion of the highest art authorities in New York City:

Use an oak frame, one to one and one-half inches wide. Choose for the color of your wood, the darkest—or nearly the darkest brown—found in your pictures. A bevelled frame sloping from the outer to the inner edge is best, as this gives more depth and better perspective to your picture; however, a flat frame is in good taste, and some of these in richly-grained wood are very effective. Have no mat; according to latest and most artistic methods, your frame should come close to the edge of your picture, just concealing the latter.

The average price of such a frame as we have described is from 75 cents to $1.00; for this you should get a well-finished oak frame with good glass. In imitation, and cheaper glass, frames can be had as low as 35 cents.

L. T., Washington, D. C. Years ago I changed the spelling of my name considerably, in order that it would sound more like an American name. I was naturalized under this changed name. Is it right, in the sight of God, to retain this name, or to return to the baptismal form?

Morally, we see nothing wrong in the change. There was no intention to deceive, and you wished to conform to what you regarded as the style of names peculiar to this country—a very difficult thing, where so many nationalities are represented. But it might become a serious question whether you could legally claim any inheritance, convey title to property, or make a will that would stand in law. You have the option of either resuming your own name, or of legalizing the other by legislative enactment. A mere variation in spelling the name might not embarrass you at any time, but any radical or absolute change is liable to do so.

Inquirer, Brooklyn, N. Y. Is it possible that the stupendous miracle of the incarnation may be repeated and that other men may arise in whom God becomes flesh?

The word possible is inappropriate in such connection, because nothing is impossible with God; but when we hear of his doing something utterly inconsistent with his ways, we know that it cannot be true, because he would never contradict himself. All the teaching of the Bible, the Epistle to the Hebrews especially, shows that Christ is the one and final incarnation of God. There is no need of another, because he fully satisfied the Divine purpose and has been found to fully satisfy

Being as the Creator of the universe must be, and it is, therefore, wiser and better that we dwell most on that aspect of him which most vitally concerns us. This is his relation to us as a Father, which Christ made so prominent in his teaching.

Anxious One, Casey, Ill. Can one be a Christian and go to dances, when one can see no harm in keeping time to the music, when you have a select crowd? I can see no more harm in a nice select dance than in a church picnic or Sunday dinner.

The Christian life does not necessarily exclude amusements that are wholesome and proper, but we do not regard the dance as in this category. While "select parties" may be all that our correspondent claims, we cannot overlook the fact that dancing at home or among friends leads to dancing abroad, to promiscuous acquaintanceships and to moral and physical ruin. To countless multitudes, the ball-room has been the open door to ruin. True, a man or woman may dance, drink, play cards without either becoming a drunkard or gambler; but if we look at the weak ones who fall irretrievably through these means, we must feel it to be incumbent on us as Christians to shun such amusements, if only for the sake of example and in order that we may not set up a stumbling-block for others.

P. S. W. Blakeslee, O. Can the assertion that the Roman Catholic Church is the original church of Christ be proved?

The Reformation was a protest against the corruption of that church. If, as we contend, the reformers revived the first principles of Christ's teaching, they can claim to have restored Christianity to its original form. Suppose, by way of illustration, that a man founded a school for teaching the children of the poor, and that in process of time the managers of the school refused to admit

THE INDUSTRIAL COLLEGE IN THE SAGE-BRUSH

How it Was Founded with Christian Pluck and a Grub-Hoe—Idaho's Most Remarkable Training School

IN the fall of '92, a frontier Home Missionary wandered into Weiser, Idaho, where, at that time, very little religious work was in progress. He was granted the use of a public dance-hall for an evening service. As a good deal of interest was manifested, the missionary decided to camp there for a time. A Sunday School was organized, and a regular Sunday service maintained. A five weeks' "protracted" meeting was held, after which a church was organized, with twenty day clothes and "looked to the hills" of New England, "whence cometh his help." Nearly $2,500 was raised, and a beautiful church building was completed.

In educational advantages the community was greatly behind. Some rough desks were made and one morning they were put into the church and an "Academy" was started. For a year the missionary, with the help of an assistant, taught the school, which soon numbered more than fifty pupils. It grew from year to year, until it has so he could sympathize with these young people. When twenty-three years old, he was told that at Oberlin, O., a poor student could pay his way in work. He went there with just money enough to buy a buck-saw, which he "pushed" for three years to pay all his expenses.

This experience stirred him to help others who were poor. He had taken up a quarter section of land near Weiser, as a homestead, and built his "claim shack" on the corner nearest the town. He decided to start an in-members. Next, a church building must be erected. The town site company donated a site, and early one Monday morning the missionary was seen swinging a grub-hoe on that lot, until the heavy growth of sage-brush with which it was covered had all disappeared. Then he changed his grub-hoe for pick and shovel, and the excavation for the foundation of a church building was speedily under way. A passer-by shouted,

"Hello, parson, what you doing?"

"Building a church," replied the missionary. "Come and lend a hand."

"What is there in it?" asked the astonished questioner.

"Nothing but a good appetite, a good conscience, and the joy of doing good."

"Not much 'grub' in a proposition like that," said the man; "but I believe I will give you a lift for an hour or two."

Many another was "hired" on the same terms; the missionary's example was contagious, and soon the work was done.

The missionary now hitched up his team and proceeded to haul stone. A good lady in Vermont had learned in some way that this missionary was walking over the mountains on long preaching trips. Full of sympathy, she wrote him a letter, inclosing a check for $100 with which to buy a horse! The parson bought the two horses, wagon and whole outfit, and had $15 left. The foundation walls went up rapidly, the missionary often taking his turn at carrying the hod. But more money was needed, so the missionary packed his grip, put on his Sun-become an important college preparatory school. Pupils paid ten dollars per term for tuition, and two dollars per week for board, besides fifty cents per week for room rent—in cash or its equivalent. But the missionary found many poor, bright young people who could not attend a "pay" school. The missionary himself had known privation and had had a battle for an education, dustrial school, in which the poorest boy or girl could get a good business education and learn a useful trade.

One morning in the fall of 1899, grub-hoe on shoulder, he began to grub sage-brush! Five acres were cleared, ploughed and fenced. Then he went East again, seeking funds to erect a small building for the school.

The effort was successful; a building was put up, and self-denying teachers were found who engaged in the new enterprise for little more than their expenses, the joy of doing good being their chief reward. But it was soon clear that the accommodations were too small. The students worked five hours each day, five days of the week, and ten on Saturday. Another dormitory was completed last year, but still there were three applicants to one vacancy in the school.

The labor of the students is turned into money, and when the buildings and machinery needed for the various industries in contemplation are completed, the Institute will be very nearly self-supporting. Farm, garden, dairy, green-house, nursery, apiary, hennery, carpenter shop, laundry, sewing school, cooking school, and millinery department will constitute a working endowment, the proceeds of which will nearly pay the running expenses of the school.

Christian in the most orthodox sense, the school is absolutely undenominational, welcoming all classes and conditions. Some children of Mormon parents are now among the pupils. It owes its life to the TEXT—Matt. 23: 37:

"Even as a hen gathereth her chickens under her wings, and ye would not."

JERUSALEM was in sight as Christ came to the crest of Mount Olivet, a height of seven hundred feet. The splendors of the religious capital of the whole earth irradiated the landscape. There is the temple. Yonder is the king's palace. Spread out before his eyes are the pomp, the wealth, the wickedness, and the coming destruction of Jerusalem, and he bursts into tears at the thought of the obduracy of a place that he would gladly have saved, and apostrophizes, saying: "Oh, Jerusalem, Jerusalem, how often would I have gathered thy children together, even as a hen gathereth her chickens under her wings, and ye would not."

Why did Christ select hen and chickens as a simile? Next to the appositeness of the comparison, I think it was to help all public teachers in the matter of illustration to get down off their stilts and use comparisons that all can understand. The plainest bird on earth is the barnyard fowl. Its only adornments are the red comb in its head-dress and the wattles under the throat. It has no grandeur of genealogy. All we know is that its ancestors came from India, some of them from a height of four thousand feet on the sides of the Himalayas. It has no pretension of nest like the eagle's eyrie. It has no lustre of plumage like the goldfinch. Possessing anatomy that allows flight, yet about the last thing it wants to do is to fly, and in retreat, uses foot almost as much as wing. Musicians have written out in musical scale the song of lark and robin red-breast and nightingale, yet the hen of my text hath nothing that could be taken for a song, but only cluck and cackle. Yet Christ, in the text, uttered while looking upon doomed Jerusalem, declares that what he had wished for that city was like what the hen does for her chickens.

Christ was thus simple in his teachings, and yet how hard it is for us, who are Sunday School instructors and editors and preachers and reformers, and those who would gain the ears of audiences, to attain that heavenly and divine art of simplicity. We have to run a course of literary disorders as children a course of physical disorders. We come out of school and college loaded down with Greek mythologies, and out of the Theological Seminary weighed down with what the learned fathers said, and we fly with wings of eagles and flamingoes and albatrosses, and it takes a good while before we can come down to Christ's similitudes, the candle under the bushel, the salt that has lost its savor, the net thrown into the sea, the spittle on the eyes of the blind man, and the hen and chickens.

A Figure of Humble Life

There is not much poetry about this winged creature of God mentioned in my text, but she is more practical and more motherly and more suggestive of good things than many that fly higher and wear brighter colors. She is not a prima donna of the skies, nor a strut of beauty in the aisle of the forest. She does not cut a circle under the sun like the Rocky Mountain eagle, but stays at home to look after family affairs. She does not swoop like the condor of the Cordilleras to transport a rabbit from the valley to the top of the crags, but just scratches for a living. How vigorously with her claws she pulls away the ground to bring up what is hidden beneath! When the breakfast or dining hour arrives, she begins to prepare the repast, and calls all her young to partake.

I am in warm sympathy with the unpretentious old-fashioned hen, because, like most of us, she has to scratch for a living. She knows at the start the lesson which most people of good sense are slow to learn—that the gaining of a livelihood implies work, and that successes do not lie on the surface, but are to be upturned by positive and continuous effort. The reason that society and the Church, and the world are so full of failures, so full of loafers, so full of dead-beats, is because people are not wise enough to take the lesson which any hen would teach them, that if they would find for themselves, and for those dependent upon them, anything worth having they must scratch for it. Solomon said: "Go to the ant, thou sluggard." I say, Go to the hen, thou sluggard. In the Old Testament God compares himself to an eagle stirring up her nest, and in the New Testament the Holy Spirit is compared to a descending dove, but Christ, in a sermon that began with cutting sarcasm for hypocrites and ends with the paroxysm of pathos in the text, compares himself to a hen.

One day, in the country, we saw sudden consternation in the behavior of old Dominick. Why the hen should be so disturbed we could not understand. We looked about to see if a neighbor's dog were invading the farm. We looked up to see if a storm-cloud were hovering. We could see nothing on the ground that could terrorize, and we could see nothing in the air to ruffle the feathers of the hen, but the loud, wild, affrighted cluck which brought all her brood at full run under her feathers, made us look again around and above us, when we saw that high up and far away there was a rapacious bird wheeling round and round, and down and down, and not seeing us as we stood in the shadow, it came nearer and lower, until we saw its beak was curved from base to tip, and it had two flames of fire for eyes, and it was a hawk. But all the chickens were under old Dominick's wings, and either caught a glimpse of us, or unable to find the brood huddled under wing, darted back into the clouds. So Christ calls with great earnestness to all the young. Why, what is the matter? It is bright sunlight, and there can be no danger. Health is theirs. A good home is theirs. Plenty of food is theirs. Prospect of long life is theirs. But Christ continues to call, calls with more emphasis and urges haste, and says not a second ought to be lost. Oh, do tell us what is the matter. Ah, now I see, there are hawks of temptation in the air, there are vultures wheeling for their prey, there are beaks of death ready to plunge, there are claws of allurements ready to clutch. Now I see the peril. Now I understand the urgency. Now I see the only safety. Would that Christ might this day take our sons and daughters into his shelter, "as a hen gathereth her chickens under her wing."

The fact is, that the most of them will never find the shelter unless while they are chickens. It is a simple matter of inexorable statistics that most of those who do not come to Christ in youth never come at all. What chance is there for the young without divine protection? There are the grog shops. There are the gambling hells. There are the infidelities and immoralities of spiritualism. There are the bad books. There are the impurities. There are the business rascalities. And so numerous are these assailments that it is a wonder that honesty and virtue are not lost arts. The birds of prey, diurnal and nocturnal, of the natural world, are ever on the alert. They are the assassins of the sky. They have varieties of taste. The eagle prefers the flesh of the living animal; the vulture prefers the carcass. The falcon kills with one stroke, while other styles of beak give prolongation of torture. And so the temptations of this life are various. Some make quick work of death, and others agonize the mind and body for many years, and some like the living blood of great souls, and others prefer those already gangrened. But for every style of youth there is a swooping wing, and a sharp beak, and a cruel claw, and what the rising generation needs is a wing of protection.

Fathers, mothers, older brothers and sisters, and Sabbath School teachers, be quick and earnest, and prayerful, and importunate, and get the chickens under wing. May the Sabbath Schools of America and Great Britain within the next three months sweep all their scholars into the kingdom. Whom they have now under charge is uncertain. Concerning that scrawny, puny child that lay in the cradle many years ago, the father dead, many remarked, "What a mercy if the Lord would take the child," and the mother really thought so, too; but what a good thing that for it became world-renowned, and one of God's most illustrious servants—John Todd. Remember, your children will remain children only a little while. What you do for them as children, you must do quickly, or never do at all. "Why have you never written a book?" said some one to a talented woman. "She replied, 'I am writing two, and have been engaged on one work ten years, and on the other five years—my two children. They are my life-work.' When the house of John Wesley's father burned, and they got the eight children out, John Wesley the last before the roof fell in, the father said: 'Let us kneel down and thank God. The children are all saved, let the rest of the place go.' My hearers, if we secure the present and everlasting welfare of our children, most other things belonging to us are of but little comparative importance. Would God that all the children of our day might be born into the army of the Lord! No need of letting them go a long way on the wrong road before they turn around and go on the right road. The only time to get chickens under wing is while they are chickens.

But we all need the protecting wing. If you had known when you entered upon manhood or womanhood what was ahead of you, would you have dared to undertake life? Most people, according to their own statement, have found life a disappointment. Indeed, we all need shelter from its tempests. About three o'clock on a hot August afternoon you have heard a rumble that you first took for a wagon crossing a bridge, but afterward there was a louder rumbling, and you said, Why, that is thunder! and sure enough the clouds were being convoked for a full diapason. A whole park of artillery went rolling down the heavens, and the blinds of the windows in the sky were closed. But the sounds above were not more certain than the sounds beneath. The cattle came to the bars, and moaned for them to be let down that they might come home to shelter, and the fowl, whether dark Brahma or Hamburg or Leghorn or Dominick, began to call to its young, "Cluck!" "Cluck!" "Cluck!" and take them under the wagon-house or shed, and had them all hid under the soft feathers by the time that the first plash of rain struck the roof. So there are sudden tempests for our souls, and, oh! how dark it gets, and threatening clouds of bankruptcy or sickness or persecution or bereavement gather and thicken and blacken, and some run for shelter to a bank, but it is poor shelter, and others run to friendly advisers, and they fail to help, and others fly nowhere, simply because they know not where to go, and they perish in the blast, but others hear a divine call, saying: "Come, for all things are now ready." "The spirit and the bride say, Come." And while the heavens are thundering terror, the Divine voice proffers mercy, and the soul comes under the brooding care of the Almighty "as a hen gathereth her chickens under her wing."

The Need of Warmth

The wings of my text suggest warmth, and that is what most folks want. The fact is that this is a cold world, whether you take it literally or figuratively. We have a big fireplace, called the sun, and it has a very hot fire, and the stokers keep the coals well stirred up, but much of the year we cannot get near enough to this fireplace to get warmed. The world's extremities are cold all the time. Life to millions of people at the South and many millions of people at the North is a prolonged shiver. But when I say that this is a cold world, I chiefly mean figuratively. Take what is an unpopular position on some public question and see your friends fly as chaff before a wind-mill. As far as myself is concerned, I have no word of complaint, but I look off day by day and see communities freezing out men and women of whom the world is not worthy. Now it takes after one and now after another. It becomes popular to depreciate, and defame, and lie about some people. The worst thing that ever happened to them was their cradle and the best thing that will ever happen to them will be their grave.

What people want is warmth. Many years ago a man was floating down on the ice of the Merrimac, and great efforts were made to rescue him. Twice he got hold of a plank thrown to him and twice he slipped away from it, because that end of the plank was covered with ice, and he cried out, "For God's sake give me the wooden end of the plank this time," and this done, he was hauled to shore. The trouble is that in our efforts to save the soul, there is too much coldness and icy formality, and so the imperilled one slips off and floats down. Give it the other end of the plank. Warmth of sympathy, warmth of kindly association, warmth of genial surroundings. The world declines to give it, and in many cases has no power to give it, and here is where Christ comes in; and as on a cold day, the rain beating and the atmosphere full of sleet, the hen clucks her chickens under her wings, and the warmth of her own breast puts warmth into the wet feathers and the chilled feet of the infant group of the barnyard, so Christ says to those sick and frosted and disgusted and frozen of the world. Come in out of the March winds of the world's criticism, come in out of the sleet of the world's assault, come in out of a world that does not understand you, and does not want to understand you; I will comfort and I will be your warmth, "as a hen gathereth her chickens under her wing."

Vicarious Suffering

But notice that some one must take the storm for the chickens. Ah! the hen takes the storm. I have watched her under the pelting rain. I have seen her in the pinching frosts. Almost frozen to death, or almost strangled in the waters, and what a fight she makes for the young under wing if a dog, or a hawk, or a man come too near! And so the brooding Christ takes the storm for us. What flood of anguish and tears that did not dash upon his holy soul. What beak of torture did not pierce his vitals. What barking Cerberus of hell was not let out upon him from the kennels. Yes, the hen takes the storm for the chickens, and Christ takes the storm for us. Once the tempest rose so suddenly the hen could not get with her young back from the

SERVING A MEAL IN THE AUDITORIUM

A HOLIDAY DINNER

Bringing the Wanderers in

A Sunday Service with the Breakfast Association of Philadelphia

ON a noisy business street in the heart of Philadelphia, there stands a plain, roomy edifice, with pointed gable. Over the door is the sign, "Sunday Breakfast Association." Upstairs is a plain, light, pleasant auditorium, which is usually occupied by an audience quite different from the average Sunday church congregation. When the writer visited the place on a recent Sunday, every bench in the good-sized room, and in the large gallery, was filled with men of all ages and nationalities. Each care-worn, weather-beaten face was a page of human weakness, wickedness and folly. There were a few boys, evidently just started on the downward way, mingling with the older men. Torn and tattered and foul though their garments were, still there were not a few intelligent faces and high foreheads, proving that not all were illiterate or lacking polish. In almost every adult visage could be traced the trail of the serpent drink.

It is intemperance that has brought most of the men to the mission during all the years of its existence. Many of these wretched, homeless and seemingly hopeless men have been coming for years.

"There are men here," said one of the managers, who have been judges on the bench, and doctors and lawyers. The ushers and servers and those you see in the gallery are redeemed men. Many hundreds give their hearts to Christ in this mission each year."

There was a brief song service, in which most of the men sang heartily. Then a tall man (a leading layman of a downtown church) stepped forward, and told in an entertaining way how, as a little fellow, he had been unable to resist temptation. His recital put the audience in good humor.

Now, the waiters made their appearance with big baskets of biscuits and cups, and tanks full of steaming coffee. The doxology was heartily sung, the divine blessing was invoked, and then the cups were distributed. Each man received a large portion of bread and several cups of coffee, if he desired, the organ playing meanwhile.

At the Sunday breakfast hour, the meal furnished consists of a large roll, two big corned-beef sandwiches and coffee. There is also a substantial New Year's dinner for homeless men.

The Sunday Breakfast Association movement started twenty-three years ago. But it had its beginning in the desire of a number of returned men to meet for prayer and conference. The free breakfast idea came from seeing a poor famished man staggering along the cold streets. At first only the breakfast was served, but soon it became evident that spiritual work was urgently needed and the association was reorganized on an evangelical basis.

"There are six hundred men here," said one of the workers on a recent Sunday, "and downstairs there is an overflow meeting of two hundred or three hundred more. The work is now purely evangelical and non-sectarian, and it is all in the hands of busy business men, who give their time voluntarily to it. They are ably assisted by the Women's Auxiliary. The breakfast and tea services are but a part of the varied work. There is something of an evangelistic character going on every day. Our Apollos Union is an organization of redeemed men. Our children and Christian Endeavor Societies, our kindergarten, and our Bible school all meet here. Nearly ten thousand men came forward for prayer during the past year. Many have been reunited to their friends and families; nearly seven hundred signed the pledge voluntarily. We help men to start anew by getting them employment. Many who have been reclaimed become eager workers for the Master."

At nine o'clock, the interesting and helpful tea service came to an end. A great majority of the men passed quietly out, but fully one-third remained to the after-meeting. When the leader requested those who were tired of their erring life to stand and say so, the words came from no less than thirty hoarse and broken voices—men standing up for Jesus, a sight to make the angels sing.

ground to the barn, and there she is under the fence all dead. Self-sacrificing even unto death! And does it not make you think of him who endured all for us? So the wings under which we come for spiritual safety are blood-spattered wings, are night-shadowed wings, are tempest-torn wings.

But now the summer day is almost past, and the shadows of the house and barn and wagon-shed have lengthened. The farmer, with scythe or hoe on shoulder, is returning from the fields. The oxen are unyoked. The horses are crunching the oats at the full bin. The air is bewitched of honeysuckle and wild-brier. The milkman, pail in hand, is approaching the barnyard. The fowls, keeping early hours, are collecting their young. "Cluck!" "Cluck!" "Cluck!" and soon the eyes of that feathered nursery are closed. Theachelors of the winged tribe have ascended to their perch, but the hens, in a motherhood divinely appointed, take all the risk of a slumber on the ground, and all night long the wings will stay outspread and the little ones will not utter a sound. Thus at sundown, lovingly, safely, completely, the hen broods her young. So, if we are the Lord's, the evening of our life will come. The heats of the day will have passed. There will be shadows and we cannot see as far. The work of life will be about ended. The hawks of temptation that hovered in the sky will have gone to the woods and folded their wings. Sweet silences will come. The air will be redolent with the breath of whole arbors of romises sweeter than jasmine or evening primrose. The air may be a little chill, but Christ will call us, and we will know the voice and heed the call, and we will come under the wings for the night, the strong wings, the soft wings, the warm wings, and without fear, and in safety, and then we will rest from sundown to sunrise, "as a hen gathereth her chickens under her wing." Dear me! How many souls the Lord hath thus brooded. Mothers, after watching over sick cradles and then watching afterward over wayward sons and daughters, at last themselves taken care of by a motherly God. Business men, after a lifetime struggling with the uncertainties of money markets and the change of tariffs, and the underselling of men, who, because of their dishonesties, can afford to undersell, and years of disappointment and struggle, at last under wings where nothing can perturb them any more than a bird of prey, which is ten miles off, disturbs a chick at midnight brooded in a barnyard.

My text has its strongest application for people who were born in the country, wherever you may now live, and that is the majority of you. You cannot hear my text without having all the rustic scenes of the old farmhouse come back to you. Good old days they were. You knew nothing much of the world, for you had not seen the world. By law of association, you cannot recall the brooding hen and her chickens without seeing also the barn, and the hay-mow, and the wagon-shed, and the house, and indeed all the scenes of your first fourteen years, and you think of what you were then and of what you are now, and all these thoughts are aroused by the sight of the old hencoop. Some of you had better go back and start again. In thought return to that place and hear the cluck, and see the outspread feathers, and come under the wing, and make the Lord your portion, and shelter, and warmth, preparing for everything that may come, and so avoid being classed among those described by the closing words of my text, "as a hen gathereth her chickens under her wings, and ye would not." Ah, that throws the responsibility upon us. "Ye would not." Alas! for the "would-nots."

If the wandering broods of the farm heed not their mother's call, and risk the hawk, and dare the freshet, and expose themselves to the frost and storm, surely their calamities are not the mother's fault. "Ye would not!" God would, but how many would not.

When a good man asked a young woman who had abandoned her home and who was deploring her wretchedness, why she did not return, the reply was: "I dare not go home. My father is so provoked, he would not receive me home." "Then," said the Christian man, "I will test this," and so he wrote to the father, and the reply came back, and in a letter marked outside "Immediate," and inside saying "Let her come at once: all is forgiven." So God's invitation for you is written, "Immediate" on the outside, and inside it is marked, "He will abundantly pardon." Oh, ye wanderers from God and happiness and home and heaven, come under the sheltering wing. A vessel in the Bristol Channel was nearing the rocks, called the "Steep Holmes." Under the tempest, the vessel was unmanageable, and the only hope was that the tide would change before she struck the rocks and went down, and she remained stood on the deck, watch in hand. Captain and crew and passengers were pallid with terror. Taking another look at his watch, and another look at the sea, he shouted, "Thank God, we are saved! The tide has turned! One minute more and we would have struck the rocks." Some of you have been a long while drifting in the tempest of sin and sorrow and have been making for the breakers. Thank God, the tide has turned. Do you not feel the lift of the billow? The grace of God that bringeth salvation has appeared to your soul, and in the words of Boaz to Ruth, I invite you to "the Lord God of Israel, under whose wings thou hast come to trust."

A MISSION HOUSE SURROUNDED

SCENES IN THE GREAT YANGTSE FLOOD

RELIEF WORK AT WUHU

As a member of the Yangtse Flood Committee, appointed in Shanghai, the writer has been an eye-witness of and sharer in the work of relief.

We reached the field the first of November, just as the cold weather was coming on; at this time hundreds were flocking into Wuhu from the interior, as they had heard that THE CHRISTIAN HERALD had sent up a large sum to be distributed in the flooded district of the Yangtse valley. A relief committee was formed at Wuhu, with the British Consul, Mr. Kerr, as chairman, and we were soon down to business. We first had to think out a plan to give relief, and to give it systematically, thus avoiding a riot. Each member of the committee was assigned to feed a certain number. He was to report as to results, and to state how much more was needed.

The poor people simply came by thousands. It was a sad sight to see them, for there was the nursing child, and the helpless old man and woman; the blind and the crippled, all begging, and knocking their heads to us as they plead for help. This flood, as you know, extended for one hundred and fifty miles back on either side of the river, and those living within this region had lost their all. They will be dependent on outside help until next year's harvest. Some of the photographs sent will give you some idea of the magnitude of the flood, and hence of the sufferings the people passed through last summer when it was at its worst.

Miss Mitchell, of the Methodist Mission, has done, and is doing, as readers of this journal already know, a good work in her soup kitchen, feeding many hundreds of women per day; about 2,000 women and 700 children are provided for there. She also has been supplied from THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Relief Funds, and will need much more help before the winter is gone. Boats come right up to the back door of our Mission House, this being twenty-five feet above regular high-water mark. The house of the Commissioner of Customs is on a hill one mile from the river. Boats and large junks come straight up to it over the paddy fields. The water has not risen so high for many years. The tree sticking up through the water is thirty feet tall; it is five feet higher than high-water mark. Altogether we have about 600 men on the dykes; and this keeps 2,400 people in food. There are 250 under my own superintendence; and I direct them in constructing new dykes or stopping breaches in dykes already built. After work hours we preach the Gospel to our people; the crowds gather about us and listen eagerly, as hungry for the Bread of Life as for material food, and standing in as great need of it.

In the matter of dyke-building, a great deal needs to be done here, and done at once. But, alas! as yet all things move slow in China. There is more ceremony and red-tape here than we have at home. We Americans have not time for tape, red or white, especially in relief work. A paid agent in charge, with $20,000 or $30,000 to devote to relieving present necessities through supplying work on the dykes, could establish safeguards against another flood. Men, women and boys will gladly work building dykes or stopping breaks in them at five cents a day; this five cents will keep three people from starving.

We are giving out about $100 per day now. We can never leave our door but what we have dozens of these poor people running after us and crying out for tickets. We have put the men who can work on the dykes at 100 cash (five cents) per day. This enables them to feed themselves, keeps them out of mischief and at the same time provides new dykes which will serve as some protection in the future. The only trouble is we will not have enough time or money to finish all that needs to be done.

We have the poor fellows in mat huts for the winter; but even then their misery cannot be told. One has to see it to form in any sense a just idea of it. We really need one man who can give his entire time to them. We believe here that China is coming out of her darkness and misery, and I am sure America will do, in the future as in the past, her part to bring China into the light. This is a seed-time for the Yangtse valley, but bright days are in store.

Wuhu, China.

REV. Z. C. BEALS.

[It will be remembered that the story of Miss Mitchell's foreign section of Hankow is so essentially Western that it is called on this side of the world the Chicago of China. Besides being a centre of the tea trade, Hankow is a most important forwarding and shipping point to the interior. Hankow is the terminus of the steamship lines on the Yangtse, which bring it within four days of Shanghai.

There is little of interest in Lower Yangtse scenery. The river is always broad and muddy. The banks are low and uninteresting, and one can easily understand what slight barriers they form against the wild unwieldy river when it rises to its full strength in the spring freshets. The rivers of this empire have a habit of not being "at home," as the Chinese say; it is not at all unusual for a river to slip away and change its course many miles during the flood season, as the Yellow River has done in Shantung. So it was with the Yangtse last Spring. The waters have now returned to their original bed, but the havoc they wrought remains. The Yangtse flows below Hankow, through a low country, where its banks are under the most favorable conditions but little higher than the river. It places the Chinese have strengthened them by additional buttresses and dykes. During last June and July the Yangtse rose higher than it usually does, as the result of spring freshets, and swept away the dykes.

The result was, that for a distance of more than two hundred miles along the river, thousands of acres were flooded, and the inhabitants rendered homeless. Not as many persons lost their lives in drowning as was reported at the time in America, because the waters rose slowly, and in most cases gave the inhabitants time to escape to the hills; but their houses, cattle everything they had in the world were lost. In many places the Yangtse was more than twenty miles wide. As the river slowly receded, large pools of water—in some cases small lakes—were left in the hollows so that over the once, closely-cultivated fields one may see ponds and marshes. Next to the famine in Shensi, the Yangtse floods of last spring are, perhaps, the greatest of China's sufferings.

The river has now returned to its natural bed, but the whole country that centres around Wuhu is desolate for miles and miles. An imperial edict was issued by the Emperor when the Court was at Sian, appealing for aid. It was met with a fairly generous response from China throughout the empire, but the imposition of taxes with which to pay the indemnity claims have made Chinese philanthropy for the next few years almost an impossibility. The foreigners of Shanghai came to the aid of the starving people of the Yangtse valley. They have not forgotten that the same men whose crops and homes are buried beneath the Yangtse waters of last spring, stood by the foreigner in the trouble of 1899, and under the leadership of such viceroys as Li Kun Yi and Chang Chih Tung, refused to obey the Emperor's order to exterminate the foreigners. The agreement between them was the Yangtse compact, to which, it is hardly too much to say, that every American and European in Southern China owes his life.

It is estimated that more than a million persons are homeless, and a large sum of money is being distributed by the Shanghai Relief Committee, through the British Consuls, at the various ports on the river. A soup kitchen has been opened by Miss Mitchell, an American missionary at Wuhu, where more than 1,600 are fed every day. Every man who receives famine relief for himself and his family is compelled to work at rebuilding the dykes which will fortify the rice fields against the river more strongly than before.

INTERNATIONAL SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON FOR MARCH 10
ACTS 8: 26-40

By Dr. and Mrs. Wilbur F. Crafts

GOLDEN TEXT: WITH THE DEATH OF CHRIST, THE CURSE OF THE LAW WAS BROKEN, AND WITH THE MEETINGS OF THE HOLY SPIRIT, THE CURSE OF SIN WAS BROKEN.

The Lesson Story

TO be standing outside a house, wishing very much to get in, but not being able to do so because the door is locked and you have no key, is not very pleasant, particularly if through the windows one sees a circle of happy people. Such was the case of a traveler who had come all the way from Ethiopia, a country south of Egypt, a journey of a thousand miles or more, to Jerusalem. In his country he had in some way heard of the true God, and the land and beautiful temple in Jerusalem, where throngs of people came together to worship him at the time of great feasts. Perhaps the story had come down from the Queen of Sheba, who had journeyed from his country to Jerusalem long before, or perhaps some little captive maid from Palestine had told the story in that land. This Ethiopian determined to go and see for himself, as the Queen of Sheba had done. He could well afford to take the journey, for he was one of the highest officers, the treasurer, of the Queen of Ethiopia. He made the journey in a chariot, no doubt richly gilded, and he was probably accompanied by servants and guards. But great as he was, he was not permitted to go in with the Jews to worship God in the inner parts of the temple. He could go only into what was called the Court of the Gentiles. Between that court and the place where sacrifice was offered to God, there was a barrier which he dared not pass. It was a marble fence, four and a half feet high, which in many places contained tablets on which was engraved a warning to any but Jews not to come further on pain of death. But there—in Solomon's porch, perhaps—he would ask the Jews he met so many questions that they would tell him he must read the Scriptures, and especially Isaiah, if he wished to know what the Jews believed. He bought that part of the Bible—perhaps other parts also, each written by hand on leather, which made it expensive, and rolled up in a scroll. He thought this would tell all he wished to know, and so started homeward.

As he rode, he read aloud, as they are accustomed to do in Bible lands to this day. Even in school, all the children read their lessons aloud at the same time, which makes a babel of confusion. He read, but could not understand it all. Another door seemed to be tightly closed against him. But Jesus himself had looked down from heaven, and had seen that this man would need a teacher. Did he ever think that God sends teachers to children, too? Jesus told Deacon Philip, who was preaching to great crowds in towns and cities of Samaria, to go down a certain road. Philip did not know why he was told to do so, but he obeyed at once.

He had not been long on the road before he saw this Ethiopian riding in his chariot. God said, "Draw near to this man, for he needs you." Philip "ran," for he was on foot, and the chariot might otherwise get out of reach. He heard the Ethiopian reading from the Greek Septuagint, the Book of Isaiah, and he asked, "Do you understand what you are reading?" "No," was the reply, "but I wish someone could explain it to me. Will you?" So Philip got into the chariot and took a seat beside the earnest squire, and told him that the words of Isaiah referred to the death of Jesus on the cross for us. The Ethiopian believed what was told him, and became a friend of Jesus. He wanted to be baptized at once, to show that he was fully determined to be a follower of Jesus. There was a river flowing by the road, and so the chariot was stopped, and right here and then Philip baptized him. There was no longer any barrier, any closed door, between the Ethiopian and Jesus, who had said, "I am the door; by me, if any man enter in, he shall be saved." That "door" to the heart of God the Ethiopian had entered, and so "he went on his way rejoicing," even though he had to lose his teacher, who went away to preach again to great crowds in the cities.

As the Ethiopian rode homeward, we may be sure he read Isaiah to the end, with Jesus as the key to every chapter. He understood it so well that we are told, though not by the Bible, that when he had returned to his own country he taught other people to love and serve Jesus Christ, including his queen.

Illustration and Application

Like a treasure-box containing five gems is verse 35, which holds the five great truths of this lesson:

1. Philip began at "that same Scripture"—a part of the Old Testament—and "preached Jesus."
 2. Philip, the deacon, the layman, "preached."
 3. Philip "preached unto him"—a congregation of one.
 4. Philip, the white man, preached to the black man.
 5. Philip, the untitled walker, preached to the lordly rider.
- All of which teaches that from every Scripture every believer is to preach Jesus to every unsaved soul, regardless of artificial distinctions of race and class.

The angel said, Arise and go. . . . He arose and went. Here is a noble case of prompt, unquestioning obedience. Philip, the deacon, who had been holding successful revival meetings in the cities and villages of Samaria, was suddenly told by an angel to leave that work and go down a desert road. There was not a word of explanation, and he did not pause to question why he should be transferred from so fruitful a field of work to one so unpromising. Surely the angel found God's will done that time on earth as it is in heaven; promptly, earnestly, lovingly, and without asking questions. It was like Abraham, who went from his home land at God's call, "not knowing whither he went," but he knew with whom he went. Philip's case recalls, also, the time when Jacob, hesitating to make that same journey, in his case a return home, consulted his godly wives, who said, "Whatever God hath said unto thee, do." As the ten lepers who cried out to Christ for cure were not healed at their first appeal, but were told to go to the priests, and "as they went, they were cleansed," so as Philip went obediently down the desert road he found the great work he was to do.

In the home, the Church, the State, we need this lesson of prompt obedience. "If God would tell me to do something, wouldn't I do it?" exclaimed a boy of eight in a Christian home. "Go to bed," said his father. The boy began to whimper. "How's this?" said the father. "You just said if God told you to do something, you would do it." "How do you know God wants me to go to bed?" "I know God has said, 'Obey your parents.' They are God's lieutenants to tell you what you ought to do." "Yes, I see," said the boy cheerfully; "Good night."

Behold, a man of Ethiopia. (Compare Isa. 61: 1-3.) Here was an inquirer whose steps God was also guiding providentially, so that his path might cross that of the Christian worker whose aid he needed. "The steps of a good man are ordered of the Lord." This seeker after

The Gospel for all Races

"THE SPIRIT SAID UNTO PHILIP, GO NEAR AND JOIN THYSELF TO THIS CHARIOT."

God was using what light he had. He had turned to the Bible, but that is not enough. A Christian heart must interpret it to a seeking heart. Seldom does the Book save without the help of a living soul. This inquirer had even gone a long way to church, and was still unsaved. Philip did not draw back when the Holy Spirit bade him "Draw near" to this black man. He "ran" eagerly to his appointed task. There was, indeed, no condescension in it, for Philip was one of the plain people on foot, while the Ethiopian was a Queen's treasurer, one of the "carriage people." The story, therefore, carries the double lesson, that we are not to hold back our Gospel message because of any distinctions of race or class. The familiar story of Lord Wellington at the Lord's table needs to be told again and again. As he knelt at the church altar, a poorly clad servant, who did not know him, came and knelt beside him. The janitor, or verger, hastily whispered in his ear to call him away. "Let him remain," said the duke, "for we are all equal here." A young soldier, just returned from the Philippines, declares it is useless to try to Christianize the savage tribes in the interior of those islands. In proof of which he says, "They come down trees head first just like monkeys, and wear only a loin cloth, and their children not even that." "Shooting Filipinos," he says again, "is like shooting monkeys." He needs to read the missionary records of bushmen and hottentots and cannibals transformed into Christian gentlemen of purer lives and broader sympathies than his own—whole villages with scarcely a crime a year and daily family worship in every house.

Christ in the Old Testament

Christ in the Old Testament. The story of the Ethiopian's journey is a beautiful illustration of the truth that Christ is the fulfillment of the promises made in the Old Testament. The Ethiopian, in seeking for the true God, was seeking for Christ. The story of his journey is a beautiful illustration of the truth that Christ is the fulfillment of the promises made in the Old Testament.

A certain man on the Malabar Coast had long been uneasy about his spiritual state, and had inquired of several devotees and priests how he might make amends for his sins. He was told to fast four hundred miles, to be blunted, through his sandals, and on these spikes to walk a distance of about 480 miles. He undertook the journey and traveled a long way, but could do no more. The day he halted under a large shady tree, a certain man came and preached to him the words, "The blood of Jesus Christ his Son hath redeemed us from all unrighteousness." While he was preaching, the poor man's heart was broken, and he fell on his knees and cried aloud, "This is what I want."

Philip preached unto him. This is the great thing we need to learn, preaching to the hearts of men.

Conversion by Conversation. We learn that, it will not take a hundred Christians a whole year to add one to their number, as now. The art of Christian conversation ought to be systematically taught in the churches, as one of the noblest arts. Wayside preaching of one to one was common with Jesus. In the book of John, we find seventeen sermons of his to audiences of one, two of them as great as any he preached—the sermon on regeneration to Nicodemus, the ruler, and the sermon on woman at the well of Samaria, at the other end of the social scale.

Bishop McCabe tells this story: In a strange city, as the hackman got down off his box and opened the door to let me out, I dropped a quarter in his hand, and as I did so I grasped it and said: "Good-night; I hope to meet you again in glory." I had often done that, and I thought nothing of it in this case. I went into the house, met my host, and retired to my room for the night. About midnight my host knocked at my chamber door and said: "Chaplain, that hackman has come back, and he says he has got to see you to-night. I told him he had better wait until morning, but he said, 'No, sir; I must see him to-night, and I know that he will be willing to see me.'" When the hackman came up, a broad-shouldered, rough-looking man, with a whip in his hand, he stood there in my presence with the tears rolling down his cheeks like rain. Said he: "If I meet you in glory, I have got to turn around. I have come to ask you to pray with me." What a privilege it was to pray with that man!

All about us are hearts like the Ethiopian, that need some one to guide them—some of them of that same hue, and others whose hearts are black with sin and sorrow. "Draw near" and lead them into the light.

The first missionary who went among the Wyandottes found at the appointed time and place of his first meeting only one poor old Indian woman waiting to hear him, but, like Philip, he preached unto her Jesus, and the next day she brought another with her, and thus began the work that leavened a whole tribe. When Dr. Duff had determined that if India was to be Christianized it must be by occupying the children's hearts with truth before it was rooted and grounded within them, he opened a school in that country; but after all his anxious preparations he found only five little boys of the poorer classes assembled in his schoolroom on the first morning of the opening term. These he taught faithfully, "not despising the day of small things," and we see to-day as the fruit of that Christian faithfulness in a few things, the great Christian "College of India," with students counted by the thousand.

Great Men Saved. The story of the Ethiopian's journey is a beautiful illustration of the truth that Christ is the fulfillment of the promises made in the Old Testament. The Ethiopian, in seeking for the true God, was seeking for Christ. The story of his journey is a beautiful illustration of the truth that Christ is the fulfillment of the promises made in the Old Testament.

It is not the poor alone that accept the Gospel. The story of the Ethiopian's journey is a beautiful illustration of the truth that Christ is the fulfillment of the promises made in the Old Testament. The Ethiopian, in seeking for the true God, was seeking for Christ. The story of his journey is a beautiful illustration of the truth that Christ is the fulfillment of the promises made in the Old Testament.

The True Joy of Life

"THE joy of life" is a phrase frequently heard from the lips of worldly people and the votaries of pleasure. It expresses to them the sum of that philosophy which declares that "there is but one life to live; make the most of it." It implies that he is a wise man who lives up to his opportunities, in the purely human sense, and who extracts the greatest amount of enjoyment possible, in all situations and conditions. Such is the philosophy of selfishness, which takes little cognizance of anything that does not contribute to the gratification of some of the senses.

But while there are a thousand joys in life, many of them pure and noble in themselves, there is a higher altitude of enjoyment which is accessible only to those whose hearts have been touched by that Divine sympathy which impels them to stoop down and lift up their fellow-beings. Next to the consciousness of union with Christ, there is nothing that gives to the life of the Christian so much of real zest and exhilaration as service unselfishly and lovingly rendered for others. Almost with his first experience in such service, he feels the thrill of a new sensation; he discovers a new meaning in life, and the light that streams in upon his soul grows brighter and broader as he goes forward. He realizes that to be like the Master, his must be a career of sacrifice; and he must crucify self, if he would give to his spiritual nature the opportunities for growth it demands. Soon he is convinced that there is no other pleasure that equals the joy of such service.

Only the other day, a friend told us this incident: During the later stages of our orphan work in Armenia, a business man in New York undertook the support of a little orphan. His check had been regularly forwarded, and his little ward in that distant land was making promising progress. Our informant brought to his attention a case of urgent need at home, where a family were in sore want. "You might do well," he urged, "to let some one else take up the care of the Armenian child, while you could do something for these people. There are doubtless others who would take her off your hands." A moment the business man looked at him in silence. Then he said, with great earnestness: "My friend, you do not understand this as I do. That little child over in Armenia has wound herself about my heart as I never thought it possible for any one to do. I may never see her in this world, but she is very dear to me. I have written to her, and prayed for her; and I feel that, before God, I am to a large extent responsible for her future. Nothing in the world could make me give her up, and the knowledge of her simple love and confident dependence on me, is the purest pleasure I have ever known. No; I will help the family you plead for, and may even undertake the support of one of them; but I cannot give up my little missionary orphan, who has been the unconscious means of giving me so much pleasure of a kind I never knew before."

We believe a similar experience could be related by thousands of readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, who have felt the joy of this particular kind of Christian service. But whether the object of our helpfulness is an orphan child in Armenia, India or China, or some poor, afflicted family in the slums of any of our home cities, the substantial and enduring joy that comes of voluntary, unselfish, sympathetic service rendered in Christ's name, is equally certain.

A flower that never blossoms, a dry tree, a parched spring—these are types of the lives that are centered upon self, and which give nothing to others. The heart quickened by the Divine love gives out its richest treasures unstintedly, and thus fulfils its mission here. As the blossom fills the air with its perfume; as the tree gives cool and generous shade to those who come near it; as the sparkling brook irrigates and gives life and beauty to the woods and fields, so does the influence of a life of Christian service carry blessings everywhere, even to the ends of the earth. It has discovered the secret of the true joy of living.

—A SINGULAR STORY appears in an influential Italian journal, the Corriere della Sera, to the effect that an aged recluse, named Core, who died at Jerusalem twenty years ago, left among the belongings found in his retreat, a very curious manuscript. It was examined by many persons, who were, however, unable to decipher it. Finally, several learned Hebraists saw it and pronounced it very ancient Hebrew. They deciphered the title as an epistle of "Peter, the Fisherman, servant of Jesus, son of Mary, to the people, in the name and by the will of the Lord." The document professes to have been written by Peter in his ninetieth year "in the house of Bolier, near to the Lord's Temple." It is not yet by any means settled that the document is a genuine epistle, and experts are still examining it.

Revival in Australia

GLAD news comes from the great Southern Continent. A revival of an extent and a depth never before known in that region is sweeping over the land, and multitudes of souls are being gathered in the spiritual harvest. The first augury of the coming blessing was noted nearly a year ago, when a number of Christians, impressed with the growing indifference of society to the claims of religion, united to pray for a blessing. Soon the first tokens of a gracious answer to their prayers were observed. In the city of Brisbane, special services were held, and the attendance grew. After two weeks, a daily prayer meeting was held, and other services were begun simultaneously in various quarters of the city. Some ministers then visiting the colony from England and Scotland gave their assistance, and the movement extended. All denominations shared in the blessing. One minister of a church in Brisbane said that of all the families in his congregation, there was not one that had not felt the mighty awakening, in the conversion of one or more of its members. For more than four months this work has been going forward, and now calls for help are coming from other parts of the colony. There is scarcely a town within a hundred miles of Brisbane, which has not sent to that city for a preacher to come and aid in the harvest of souls. In one instance, a deputation traveled one hundred and sixty miles to secure the services of an evangelist, and would not return without a definite arrangement for one being sent.

The latest news is to the effect that the movement has spread throughout Queensland, and that there are strong hopes of all Australia being stirred. One worker has already gone to Tasmania in response to an urgent request, and has commenced a most hopeful campaign. Continuous services on the Lord's Day begin at ten in the morning and do not conclude till nearly midnight. It is no uncommon thing for people to drive into the towns from settlements twenty miles away to attend the meetings. The movement is all the more remarkable because of its contrast with the preceding apathy. Society then seemed to have given itself up to business and pleasure-seeking. Now the whole community in certain large sections appears intent on religious matters to the neglect of all other interests.

It is a notable fact that the movement should have originated, as such movements have done in other lands and other times, in a spirit of prayer being poured out on the church. That is the natural order. God's hand is not shortened. He is still able and willing to bless when there is a sincere desire for his blessing. That desire may be tested by apparent failure at the outset; but when the seekers are really in earnest and are full of faith, the blessing comes eventually. Would that the blessing, beginning in the youngest of the world's commonwealths, might spread to older lands, and the whole world share in the beneficent outpouring of the Spirit!

The Toronto Convention

FULL of significance to the Christian world is the great Convention which has just closed its sessions in Toronto. The Student Volunteer Movement has evidently become one of the mightiest elements of aggressive Christianity. The presence of more than two thousand students and professors, representing five hundred institutions of learning, proves how firm a hold the missionary idea has taken of our educated young men. Time was when the missionary was regarded as a man who had failed to make his mark in the home churches and when the cause was considered almost fanatical. The recent Convention proved, if proof had been needed, how great a change has taken place in Christian opinion. The most brilliant, the most able, the most distinguished of the undergraduates are consecrating their lives to foreign missions. The spectacle of these young men, glowing with enthusiasm, eager to begin their work, will not soon be forgotten by any who witnessed it. Never before in the history of the Christian Church has such an army of devoted, cultured men been gathered for service in the heathen world. The Church is giving its best fruits and laying on the altar sacrifice of incalculable value. Nor are the volunteer men who are depending on learning or talent for success. The speeches showed that they feel most profoundly their dependence on the Holy Spirit for the power to reach the heathen heart. But ability has its place, as we know by experience. The subtle systems of heathen philosophy hold a place in the minds of the devotees which cannot be captured by the ignorant man whom the learned pundit despises. In these new recruits he will meet foemen whom he will respect—men who knowing and recognizing the good there is in his creed can demonstrate the superiority of the religion of the Cross.

How the heart thrills at the watchword of the organization rings in the ear!—"The Evangelization of the World in this Generation." What does that mean? It means that after nineteen hundred years the parting command of the ascending Christ is to be obeyed. "Go ye into all nations," he said, and he has waited until now for the laggard Church to answer to the call. Now is soberly and resolutely determined that in every land on earth the Gospel shall be proclaimed. This, too, is no blind impulsive campaign, but a carefully planned systematic enterprise, in which the obstacles have been well considered and the cost deliberately counted. I must have cheered the hearts of the veteran missionaries who were in that Toronto assembly, who have toiled all their lives in an apparently hopeless cause to see their work taken up by these vigorous, earnest young men. The missionary cause has been so dear to them that they counted the world and its prizes well lost that they might give it their years and their strength; but now that the pioneers have grown gray in the service and the weight of years is on their shoulders, how glad they must feel as they see the best of our young men ready to take up the burdens they have reluctantly laid down. And the young men, are they discouraged at the sight of the veterans closing their lives without an of the rewards they might have won with less of effort and self-sacrifice in secular callings? By no means. They know well that none of the prizes the world counts most precious can be gained in that service. But they do not waver, for "the love of Christ constraineth."

How pitiful beside this noble self-sacrifice is the stupendous barrier in the path to success! These young men are giving their opportunities, their talents, their very lives to the work. Will not the Church supply the funds for their support? The sacrifice that would be necessary is small indeed compared with that the volunteers are making. Let all share in this magnificent undertaking, and let every one who performs must refrain from an active share, at least have a part in enabling some herald of the Cross to go to his work unhampered by financial anxiety.

Topics of the Hour

—THE CABLED REPORTS of Miss Stone's liberation were premature. Up to February 20, she had not been set free although her release was daily looked for.

—MRS. T. R. ARMITAGE, who lately died in England, was Honorary Secretary of the British and Foreign Blind Association, founded by her husband thirty years ago. Upon his death she took up his work. She gave the Association its home and the salary of all its officials. She had trained and kept in employment about eighty blind women in London. She lately gave $5,000 to start a school for the blind in Cairo.

—REV. ARTHUR SMITH, of Tientsin, Chairman of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD China Famine Fund Committee, in recent letter has this to say of the effect produced by the relief work:

The general effect is well worth noting, at a time when there is so much dissatisfaction with foreigners, on account of the heavy and now chronic taxes to pay the obligations. Your enterprising journal has a large part in this good work. Such grants are not without an effect, both upon the minds of the official class (including the blind and prejudiced court) as well as on those of the "stupid people," who have always formed so large a part of the population of this great Empire.

The most important result of all is that noted in the letter from Dr. Moir Duncan in Shensi, where the attitude of the Chinese people and officials toward our missionaries has undergone a complete transformation.

EVANGELIST YATMAN'S DOLL SERMON

JUST before leaving the home land for his winter's evangelistic work in Great Britain, the Rev. Chas. H. Yatman, the famous evangelist and leader of the Ocean Grove Young People's meetings, devised a new and decidedly unique method of teaching Gospel truths, by helpful illustrations. His idea took the form of a series of "Little Sermons," or Talks, the first being the "Doll Sermon," which was just what its name indicates, a talk illustrated by costumed dolls, showing the progress of Christianity. His aim was to teach the universality of the Gospel.

Encircling the front of the platform stood five white-draped tables, the "platforms" from which the dolls were to speak. While the audience was singing a familiar missionary hymn, the curtain at the back of the platform parted and a young lady entered, bearing the first of the mimic preachers, which she placed on a table to the extreme right of the leader. These "doll preachers" represented the red Indians, dressed in their quaint garb, and with the straight, coarse black hair hanging around their dusky faces.

Following quickly upon the entry of the dolls, appeared a little girl in white, bearing a banner, upon which was inscribed in large white letters the word "Jesus," while underneath could be distinctly seen, though written in smaller type,

Christ, the same yesterday, and to-day, and forever. (Heb. 13: 8)

Taking her position, with banner held aloft, behind the "red-faced doll-babies," she recited, in a clear voice,

REV. C. H. YATMAN

THE INDIAN DOLLS

THE MALAY DOLLS

THE CAUCASIANS

FROM CHINA

THE NEGROES

the verse of Scripture her banner proclaimed. Mr. Yatman then told in a few words of the red man's need of Christ, and the duty we, as Christians, owe to him. Then another little company appeared in the doorway, only this time the "preachers" were "brown-faced dollies," representing the people of the Malay race and the banner read "For," and underneath

I know whom I have believed, and am persuaded that he is able to keep that which I have committed unto him against that day.

Once again the curtains parted, and representatives of our fair Caucasian race appeared—dainty dollies, gowned in white. Their banner bore upon its silken folds

ALL things work together for good to them that love God.

Next came yellow dolls, representing the great Mongolian race. These dollies, with queues and strange oriental dress, drew smiles from the audience, and caused Mr. Yatman to remark that "John Chinaman, converted, was one of the finest specimens of manhood to be seen in this old world." The banner that waved over their table heralded forth these words:

THE gift of God is eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord.

banner seemed to have a truer, deeper meaning than ever before to the hearts of the people. It read:

For God so loved the WORLD, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life. (John 3: 16)

As the last banner was presented, Mr. Yatman silently pointed to each in turn. The first words of all read:

JESUS FOR ALL THE WORLD

At a quiet word of command from the speaker, the girls, with their banners, quickly changed places, and the inscription was changed to

ALL THE WORLD FOR JESUS

The speaker then gave some actual experiences among the peoples represented by the various dolls. "Go ye into all the world and preach the Gospel" were not idle words, coming from the lips of this earnest worker, standing as he did on the threshold of a third missionary world-circling journey. He is now conducting Evangelistic services in Ireland. LULU PAULINE WHINNA.

OUR COMPLETE COURSE IN SHORTHAND

ISAAC PITMAN'S 20th CENTURY REVISION
By Special Arrangement with Isaac
Pitman & Sons, 33 Union Square, N. Y.

LESSON V.

44. The student will find the exact value of the short vowels by pronouncing each in conjunction with a following consonant. In order to gain familiarity with them, he should write them before the different consonants, and pronounce the combination; thus, at et it ot ut ööt ad ed id od ud ööd and so on with other consonants from p to r (down). When he has done this, he should contrast each short vowel with its corresponding long vowel; thus, aht at, eht et, eet it, ahd ad, ehd ed, eel id, awt ot, oht ut, ööt ööt, avd od, ohd ud, ööd ööd.

ahm am, ehm em, eem im,

awm om, ohm um, ööm ööm.

45. As a result of this practice, many common words will be made, of which the following are examples:—

at, ash, add, am, Ann.

ehd, etch, egg, edge, ell.

it, itch, if, ill, odd.

off, or, up, us.

SHORT VOWELS BETWEEN TWO CONSONANTS

46. FIRST and THIRD-PLACE short vowels are written in the same position as their corresponding long vowels; as tack, tick, pap, pip, rock, rook.

47. SECOND-PLACE short vowels are written before the second consonant; as get, wreck, butt, tub, gull, lug.

48. Compare the places of second-place long and short vowels in the following diagrams and words:—

SECOND-PLACE LONG VOWELS AFTER THE FIRST CONSONANT

2 3 2 3 2 3 2 3 2 3

SECOND-PLACE SHORT VOWELS BEFORE THE SECOND CONSONANT

2 3 2 3 2 3 2 3 2 3 pale, pell, cope, cup, robe, ruh, take, Teck, roam, rum.

9. Each animal may go to the Hay; all may take of it.
10. The farm, though bare and chalky, Jim and Bob hope may pay in March.

REVIEW

1. How many short vowels are there?
2. How do the short vowels differ from the long vowels?
3. Give the sounds of the six short vowels followed by the consonant t.
4. Give the signs by which they are represented.
5. How do the signs of the short vowels differ from those of the long vowels?

6. Give six words illustrating the powers of the short vowels.
7. What is the position of a first-place short vowel between two consonants? A second-place short vowel? A third-place short vowel?

Diphthongs

49. There are four double vowels or diphthongs, namely i, ou, oi, u, as heard in the words vie, vow, boy, and due. The first three are represented by a small acute angle, and the fourth by a small semicircle, thus,

I v, OW A, OI I, U A

The component vowels in each case may be supposed to be:

50. The triphthong wi, as heard in wife, is represented by a small right angle, thus WI⁴

51. The diphthong oi is written in the first-place, and therefore always at the beginning of a stroke, as toy, coy, Roy. The diphthong u is written in the third-place, and therefore always at the end of a stroke, as cue, your.

52. The diphthongs i and ow and the triphthong wi may be written either in first, second, or third-place, as is most convenient, as isle, tile; fowl, vowel; twibill.

53. Both i and wi may be joined initially to a downstroke, as item, ivy, ice, ire; white, wife.

54. Both ow and oi may be joined initially to upward l, as owl, oil.

55. Both ow and u may be joined finally to a downstroke, as bough, vow, pew, due. After the consonant n, the diphthong u may be written thus, new, and ow thus, now; i is joined to n thus, nigh.

56. Learners sometimes confuse the diphthong wi with the short vowel i; also u with the short vowel u, and ow with the long vowel oh. The following pairs of words illustrate the contrast between diphthongs and vowels:

bite, bit; right, writ; tube, tub;
use, us; route, wrote; sow (noun), sow (verb).

57. When a diphthong and vowel, or two vowels, occur between two stroke consonants, each should, if convenient, be placed against the consonant to which it naturally belongs; thus, newer, Louisa.

The student is recommended to purchase the Key to the Short-hand Instructor, which forms a Key to all the Exercises appearing in these lessons, as well as to all the Review Questions. It is an indispensable companion for all students mastering the art without a teacher. The price of the Key is 50c., and all orders should be sent to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD office. Lesson No. VI. will appear in the issue of March 19.

In some houses, doors are always closed with a bang. Slam goes the front door after father in the morning! Slam bang after Johnny when he goes to school. Slam when Miss Prue rushes off to catch up with a classmate. And, to the key of that vociferous door, the music or the noise of that home is set, all day long. Try, dear sinners, to reform. Shut the door quietly. It is just as easy, just as effectual and ten times as pleasant.

SUNSHINE EVERYWHERE

The Annual Meeting of the International Sunshine Society will be held in the Waldorf-Astoria on May 29, from 9 A.M. until 6 P.M. It has been decided to hold a Sunshine Carnival on the evening of the 25th in the Carnegie Lyceum, where several hundred children will take part in a little play for children, called "Effie's Visit to Cloudland." A reception will be held after the performance, from 10.30 to 12 o'clock.

When the general Federation of Woman's Clubs meets this year at Los Angeles, California, perhaps the largest club represented there will be the Sunshine Society. A special train will leave Jersey City for California, April 23, making a trip of about three weeks, returning by the way of Salt Lake and Denver.

How Christian Herald Sunshine Grows

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Branch is doing genuine Sunshine work, and among its many beautiful deeds is that of paying the expenses of a Sunshine member from Denver, S. C., for treatment in the Post-Graduate Hospital, New York. The young woman who is the beneficiary of this kindness, has been in poor health for two years. It was a great blessing to her when the cost of a serious operation, necessary to effect a cure in her case, was promptly met by THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Sunshiners.

Miss Susan L. Parsons, President of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Sunshine Branch, has resigned, and Miss Ella J. Klein has been appointed in her place. This Branch is in a most flourishing condition. Under the direction of Miss Parsons it has scattered Sunshine all over the land. There are now over 800 active members.

E. Glover Mansfield, Jr., of West Haven, Conn., has paid his dues for 1902 by paying the tuition of three children in the Live Oak School at Baton Rouge, La. The first boy selected to receive this Sunshine scholarship, and who is to be known as the "Sunshine Scholar," is Harry Green. Harry is a bright and worthy boy, and his father is a preacher to poor people; between times he earns what he can at gardening, and his wife takes in washing to help support the family. Harry has always worked in the cotton fields. Mr. Glover pays the tuition of two other scholars in this school. The children of Live Oak all belong to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Sunshine Branch. One boy, as his dues, saws wood for a poor old woman. The scholars are all enthusiastic Sunshiners. Miss Bitzel, of Morris Plains, N. J., also is paying the tuition of a boy in this school, thus making four Sunshine scholarships secured through THE CHRISTIAN HERALD.

Will members of THE CHRISTIAN HER-

IRENA KLINK

ALD Sunshine Branch write letters to Miss Celicia Barger, Dogwood, Ala., for her birthday, March 9? Miss Barger is a "shut-in." Master Ernest Miller, of Albany, Ore., would appreciate cheerful letters and magazines. He is an invalid never free from pain. The Sunshine Society of Christian Endeavor at Lake Valley, N. M., wants magazines and books for their free library.

Miss Kate Hackett, of Putnam, Conn., an invalid, asks for books for her free circulating library. Factory girls call for book every night. Silk pieces for quilts are asked for by Mrs. Alida Flanders Fenn-ville, Mich., and Miss Lizzie Bailey, of Monroe Center, Me. Mrs. Bertha H. Tompkins, of Whitman, Mass., would like a Sunshine letter for Easter from members. Who has a wheel chair to pass on?

Our picture of Miss Irena Klink, President of a Sunshine Band in Syracuse, was "snapped" while she was on her way to perform some sunshine work. In her basket are tempting parcels of provisions, a warm coat hangs over her arm, and in her bundle she carries clothing for a family that has suffered from the Syracuse flood. This young president is a veritable ray of sunshine, and a member of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD branch.

Sunshine in Germany

Mrs. S. L. Russell, of 192 Wyona St., Brooklyn, President of the Sunshine Home for Girls in Dresden, is about to return to Germany, and will take with her ten or more students.

In this Sunshine Home every one feels that she is among friends. It is a general rendezvous for all American Sunshiners who happen to travel in that direction.

GET MAD

When Friends Tell the Truth.

Many people become coffee toppers before they realize it, and would be angry if thus described even by a close friend.

It will pay anyone to examine carefully into whether or not coffee has gained the mastery over them. A coffee toper may suspect that his or her ails come from coffee drinking, but they will invariably charge the disease to some other cause, for right down in the heart they realize that it would be practically impossible to give up coffee, so they hope against hope that it does not hurt them, but it goes on with its work just the same and the result is complete collapse and nervous prostration, lasting sometimes for years, unless the poison that causes the disease is discontinued.

There are hundreds of thousands of illustrations of the truth of this statement.

Any person addicted to coffee can make the change from common coffee to Postum Food Coffee without trouble, provided the Postum is properly prepared so as to bring out the color, flavor and food value. It has a rich black brown color and changes to the golden brown when good cream is added.

The change will work wonders in any one whose nervous system or stomach has been unbalanced or disturbed by coffee.

How shall we account for the fact? We must bear in mind that the Pantheistic tempter is not the devil in horns and hoofs, but the devil transformed into an angel of light, who comes to mankind to-day as he did to the Saviour in the wilderness, with the offer of the kingdoms of the world and all the glory of them, on the one sole condition of accepting him as Lord and master. This is all he asks. No change of religion and no change of life. All things to all men in a sense somewhat different from that of the apostle.

Synopsis of the Earlier Chapters

Erastus Welch, a small farmer, finds in his barn early one winter morning the body of a beautiful young woman. At her side is a new born infant. His wife, Elizabeth, wishes to adopt the child; which she does, and a stormy scene follows, in which the wife carries her point. She finds on the body of the deceased a Bible, on the fly-leaf of which is inscribed a text and a name. Elizabeth Welch names the child Immanuel, from the words of the text in the Bible belonging to the unknown mother. He grows up, adored by Elizabeth, but unnoticed by her husband, till he reaches the age of five years. Which then decides that the boy is old enough to be of use about the farm. He treats him so harshly that the child runs away and finds a refuge in the home of Moses Armitage, an old man, who favors him, in his human resemblance to his own dead son. Moses Armitage hears that his brother is dead, and goes to the lawyer employed by the brother to learn the particulars. He hears that his brother was enormously rich when he died, but left no will. The only surviving child was a daughter, who, having married against her father's wish, had been cast off. In tracing her, he discovers that she was the woman who had died in Erastus Welch's barn. The child Immanuel, whom he had sheltered, was consequently his own nephew and the heir at law to Moses Armitage's brother's vast property. In the course of his investigation he visits the Welch home, and arrives with the boy just as Elizabeth, worn and worried by the loss of Immanuel, is dying. Before her death, she directs that the Bible found on Immanuel's mother's body be given to him. Moses Armitage, anxious that the boy should be so trained that when he grows up and has control of the money should do good with it, takes him to New York and shows him how miserable the poor are.

IT was announced in the Mulberry street school on the following day, that a friend of the school had provided hot soup and bread ad libitum for those who needed such refreshment.

Immanuel continued to come and go between the school on Mulberry street and the palace on the avenue. As the weeks wore away he became more and more silent and thoughtful. One evening he appeared before his guardian with a folded paper in his hand and a determined look upon his face. "You said I might ask the housekeeper what was done with all that is taken away from our table," he began rapidly. "Mrs. Camp is very kind and polite; I learned many things. I put them down on this paper, for I wished to remember." He spread the sheet on the old man's knee, then retreated, somewhat anxiously, to a position behind his chair.

"What is this?" exclaimed Moses Armitage: "Expenses of table—expenses of servants' hall—salaries—wages! What is all this to you, my lad?"

"Mrs. Camp was making up her books for the month; she let me copy some of the figures. It seems so much—for just you and me, uncle!"

"But you like living in this house—you like being rich, my lad."

"I—I should like it if the other boys could live in houses like it; if they could be rich, too. But—"

Moses Armitage laughed; a curious, husky laugh. "Would you like to go with me to-morrow and see how some of these schoolmates of yours live?" he asked.

"Yes, I should like it. I want to see."

And so it came about that these two—the child, who held the power of a prince in his small, unconscious hands, and the old man, his guardian—went down into the region of the fair city's shame and darkness. In company with a stolid sergeant of police they toiled up foul, rickety stairs, in darkness, haunted by evil, unnamable odors exhalant from fetid sinks, and damp, rotting timbers. They saw innumerable children, all pallid, all dirty, all starved in mind and body. They saw women with terrible faces, hard, despairing, death-like. They saw men, sweating over their ill-paid work in stifling dens, or idling in narrow, filthy courts. Misery everywhere, and horrors all the more horrible, because the human beings hopelessly immersed in them seemed not to realize their sufferings. Sounds of laughter and singing hung on the foul air of a den, where a hag-like woman served out some hideous decoction from the keg on which she squatted; the laughter was even more terrible than the unsmiling faces of the children.

"I have seen enough, uncle," whispered the boy, after several hours spent in these explorations. His face was white, his dark eyes dilated with horror. When they were once more in the open air, he looked up into the narrow strip of blue sky visible between the tops of the tall buildings. "Why does God let such things be?" he asked in a stifled voice. "Are these people wicked because they are poor, or poor because they are wicked?"

"Some people would tell you both," said Moses Armitage, thoughtfully; "they say the pendulum swings betwixt the two; they are poor because they are wicked, and wicked because they are poor."

"But the children—there are thousands of them. They have done nothing wrong."

"If the children could be saved from being wicked—which is to say ignorant, they would also be saved from being poor," said his guardian slowly. "There is enough for all."

"We have too much—far too much!"

"That may be true, my lad, but suppose I should bring down to this place every day a barrel of gold coin and give it to these people; what then?"

The screen door of a vile saloon nearby swung open to admit a couple of frowsy women. The boy glanced inside, then turned his face aside. "They would spend it there," he said with a gesture of loathing; "it would do no good. We can do nothing, then."

"One who had money—a great deal of money—and who loved his fellow-beings—these poor little babies, these boys and girls—yes, and these wretched men and women more than his dollars, could do much." The old man's voice was low and anxious; he looked down into the child's face almost beseechingly.

"I cannot do much," answered Immanuel, meeting the look with one of full confidence. "But I can give what I have. Let us come down here to live, you and I, uncle; we can find a clean place near the school. It would not cost much—not nearly so much as that great house. We do not need so many servants, nor so much to eat, nor the carriage; we can walk just as we used to do. Will you, uncle? Oh, say that you will! I just hate that house; I have hated it for a month! It makes me sick to look at our table and remember the miserable, pinched faces at school. If we lived near them, uncle, we could do something to help, could n't we?"

And Moses Armitage, mindful of that other lad, who at twelve years of age was fain to be about his Father's business, could not say him nay.

Chapter XVIII.—De Profundis

AND now began a new chapter in this singular education of a capitalist. Moses Armitage had come to believe during his years of contact with the pure young life that had come into his keeping, that as the Man of Nazareth was sent into the world to seek and to save that which was lost, so also is every

ANY ONE CAN

Prove the Value of Scientific Food.

A good straightforward test of food is worth much to humanity. The following is interesting:

Mr. T. K. Durboraw of Greenfield, O., says: "After 3 months' sickness with grip I found I had lost 42 pounds, with little appetite and almost no digestion. Wife finally put me on Grape-Nuts and I actually lived on this food, taking it three times a day, and a cup of Postum Coffee at each meal for about four weeks."

When I began I was so nervous and weak that my strength was exhausted even by dressing, and, of course, I was unable to do the work loaded upon my desk, but I hampered away without any tonics or medicines, only my diet of Grape-Nuts and Postum three times a day. I found at the end of 23 days my nervousness gone, strength greatly increased and that I had gained 16 pounds.

Finally, after getting back to good health again I, of course, took on different kinds of food, and, as a change, began using—for breakfast. After a while some peculiar spells began to appear in the morning with deathly sickness and nervous lassitude. I took treatment for biliousness but that did not avail.

About a month ago I gave up the — for breakfast and took on Grape-Nuts again. These morning attacks left me entirely in a day or two and I feel that I have had sufficient evidence of the scientific value of Grape-Nuts as a vitalizing, perfect food, that does not require the heavy work of the stomach occasioned by the use of starchy foods we use so much nowadays."

HIS WORK CLOSED

Rev. George C. Needham's Career of Usefulness Suddenly Ended

OUR readers will learn with general regret that the well-known evangelist, Rev. George C. Needham, is dead. He had returned to his home at Narberth, near Philadelphia, from a Gospel tour in Tennessee, and intended taking a brief rest before beginning a campaign in Chicago, when he was seized with neuralgia of the heart, and on February 16 he passed away.

Mr. Needham was highly respected on both sides the Atlantic, and his meetings here and abroad were always largely attended. He was a native of Ireland, and at the time of his death was fifty-six years of age. He was only twenty years old when his addresses and sermons attracted wide attention, and he was then engaged in a lucrative business, but the call to preach the Gospel was so clear and unmistakable, that he had no hesitation in leaving all to devote himself exclusively to the Lord's service. He consulted the late Pastor C. H. Spurgeon about the advisability of taking a college course; but Mr. Spurgeon counselled him to go right on preaching without further preparation, and he followed that advice. After two years devoted to evangelistic labor in England and Ireland, he came to America, bringing cordial letters of introduction from Mr. Spurgeon. He early became associated with Mr. Moody, and enjoyed intimate friendship with that distinguished evangelist in the following years. Mr. Needham traveled extensively, preaching in all our great cities, and making extended tours throughout the country. A few years ago he visited Japan and China, and held Bible readings which were highly appreciated by the missionaries and the English-speaking people. He was a frequent contributor to the press, and produced also several volumes on theology and prophecy, which had a wide circulation. He also published a life of Pastor C. H. Spurgeon, which was extensively read here and in England.

and has control of 840 more. It possesses several thousand dollars' worth of farming implements and machinery. It has about twenty-five head of live stock as a nucleus for a complete practical dairy.

Eight competent teachers give instruction in the various departments. The Idaho Industrial Institute as duly incorporated and conducted on the lines indicated, will doubtless be a great blessing to very many poor but worthy young people in the "New West," and will fit for useful citizenship many who could never hope for an opportunity to attend a college or university where expenses must be met in cash. More buildings and machinery are needed, also funds to build an irrigating reservoir, to stock the dairy and to establish other industries. Rev. E. A. Paddock, president of the Institute, is now in the East, interesting friends in support of this work. Contributions may be sent to Prof. T. P. Maryatt, treasurer, at Weiser, Idaho. THE CHRISTIAN HERALD will also receive and forward to the treasurer of the Institute any contributions that may be sent to this office, and President Paddock will answer any inquiries and supply all necessary information to inquirers.

HENDERSON'S SEEDS. 1902

Giant Ruffled Pansies

A remarkable strain of Giant Pansies, the flowers of which are so large and full that the broad petals seem to be "gathered" to the stem, causing them to be fluted from centre to circumference, not unlike "frilled" velvet. The unusual substance of the flowers, aided by these corrugations, enables them to present bold, handsome faces, even during the driest summer weather. The flowers are extraordinarily large and are borne on strong stems well above the foliage; they are nearly all five-blotted on the "odier" pattern, and contain rich combinations of coloring, including some new tints and blendings. The plants are vigorous and large, and flower abundantly.

Mixed Colors. Price 25c. per pkt., 5 pkts. for $1.

PREACHED SIXTY YEARS

Dr. Newman Hall, Eloquent Preacher and Brilliant Author Called to his Reward

AMERICA had no more enthusiastic admirer or more devoted friend in the English pulpit than Dr. Newman Hall, who died on February 15, at the age of eighty-six. In the days when England and the United States were on anything but friendly terms, and bitter things were being written in the press of both countries, the famous preacher wrote, lectured and preached untiringly to convince his countrymen of the admirable qualities of the American people. When his church built their spacious and graceful new home in London, he insisted on the tower which was its most conspicuous feature, being named Lincoln Tower, and the Stars and Stripes were inwrought in its masonry. Dr. Hall visited this country several times and made extensive tours. During one of his visits shortly after the war, he was invited to preach before Congress in the Capitol, and his sermon was long afterwards remembered as one of marvelous power.

Dr. Hall settled in London in 1854. He was converted in the year 1830, and though then only sixteen years of age, he began preaching in the open air to the crowds of idlers who loitered about the fields of Maidstone, his native town. He had even then a singularly forceful, attractive style, which always won him a hearing. Some wealthy Christian friends who were impressed with his ability, sent him to college, where he graduated with high honors in 1841. His first pastorate was at the seaport town of Hull, where for thirteen years he labored with great success. On going to the larger sphere in London, he soon attracted notice. His church was the one made famous by the eccentric preacher Rowland Hill, but it soon proved too small for the eloquent Dr. Hall. A new church was built, of which he remained pastor until 1892, when he retired, and was succeeded by Rev. F. B. Meyer. He continued, however, to preach, and in 1896, when he celebrated his eightieth birthday, a troop of friends, among whom were the Rt. Hon. W. E. Gladstone, the Duke of Westminster, the Archbishop of York, and Sir George Williams, united to render him a tribute of esteem. He was a prolific writer, especially of short tracts. One of his works entitled, "Come to Jesus," was translated into fifty languages, and had a circulation of over four million copies.

THE OTHER SIDE

On a calm, still night, when I see the light
Of the moonbeams full and fair;
When I lift my eyes to the starlit skies,
And I long for a mansion there.

Oh! my heart will sing for its Lord and King
This song so glad and free;
If the outside of Heaven is so beautiful,
Oh! what must the other be.

Oh! they need no light of the moon by night
In that realm so bright and fair,
Nor the sun by day to brighten the way,
For the light of the Lamb is there.

In the sweet "still hour," when I feel the power
Of the Saviour's love so dear,
When I long to rest on his gentle breast,
And I feel not a shade of fear.

How to Paint a House Cheap

And Have it Guaranteed to Look Better, Wear Longer and Cost Less Than the Best White Lead Paints.

Never Fades, Cracks, Chalks, Peels or Blisters, and is Not Affected by Gases.

Fifty Sample Colors Prepaid to Any Address Absolutely Free.

The cost of painting the house and barn, out-buildings and fences is a heavy burden. Cheap paints soon fade, peel or scale off and white lead and oil costs so much and has to be replaced so often that it is a constant expense to keep the bright, clean appearance so desirable in the cosy cottage home or the elegant mansion. To meet the needs of the small purse and at the same time give the rich, lasting, protecting effect of a first-class paint caused the manufacture of Carrara Paint, and it is the best paint for house, barn or fence; for interior or exterior work it has no equal. It is smoother, covers more surface, brightens and preserves colors, is used on wood, iron, tin, brick, stone or tile and never cracks, peels, blisters or chalks; it does not fade; it outlasts the best white lead or any mixed paint and it covers so much more surface to the gallon that it is cheaper in the first costs than most cheap paints. The following are a few of the large users of Carrara Paint.

Pennsylvania R. R. Co.; Pullman Palace Car Company; Chicago Telephone Company; Central Union Telephone Company; Field Museum, Chicago; Kenwood Club, Chicago; Cincinnati Southern; C. & E. I. R. R. Co.; Denver & Rio Grande R. R.; Wellington Hotel, Chicago.

From railroad box car to elegantly furnished general offices of the great railways; from race track fences and stables to fancy club house; from plain brick walls and stone fences to tin roofs and interior finish of stately hotels; from country barn or hay shed or cheap outbuilding to farm residence, suburban home or luxurious city residence, Carrara is used because it lasts longer, never fades, never cracks, never blisters, never peels, covers more surface than the highest priced paints and costs less than the cheap mixed paints that injure instead of protect. There is but one Carrara. It is made by the Carrara Paint Agency, 283 Carrara Works, Barberton, Ohio, and anyone having a house to paint should send for 50 sample colors, free, of this great paint that has stood the most rigid tests for 25 years, and bear in mind that it is the only paint ever manufactured that is backed by a positive guarantee in every case. A NOBLE PURPOSE*

Self-Indulgence in Eating and Drinking a Defilement of the Body and an Injury to the Moral Well-Being

ONE distinguishing characteristic of the Jewish faith is the emphasis it lays on purity of life. Its prominent heroes are Joseph, resisting temptation in Potiphar's house; Moses, choosing association with his people rather than with Pharaoh's princes; Samuel, in contrast with the sons of Eli; David, the simple shepherd lad, unspoiled by the corruption of Saul's court; and Daniel, refusing the king's food, and yet proving superior to the other students, both mentally and physically. It is probable that the writer of the book wished it to be understood that Daniel's superiority at the end of the three years was, not so much a result of his abstinence, as a reward from God for his obedience. It may have been a result, too, as God's rewards generally are, but the feature that would most impress the Jewish mind was that which survived till Apostolic times, and is still observed at the present time by orthodox Jews. The meat and wine which Daniel refused was doubtless unclean according to Jewish law, having been dedicated to Bel and Nebo, the Gods of the Babylonians. It is, however, easy to believe that the boys, probably not more than fourteen years old, would thrive better in body and mind on the simple fruits, referred to under the general name of pulse, than on the rich viands and the wines left over from the king's repasts.

Daniel's example is worthy of being followed by the young people of our own time. It has been abundantly proved in all ages, that plain simple food and pure water build up a stronger constitution than do dainties and intoxicating liquors. The hardy Scottish race, to be found thriving and holding responsible positions in every country on earth, is a conspicuous illustration of the fact. The overwhelming majority of them started in life as poor boys, whose chief food until they reached manhood was oatmeal. Experience has shown that rich men's sons only occasionally attain eminence in any walk of life. It is the boys who are acquainted with hardships, who never yield to self-indulgence, who rise to the front rank. Especially is this true of intoxicants. They are the bane of mental and physical life. Even those who indulge in them in moderation, are distinctly the worse for the indulgence. In spite of all that may be urged in favor of prohibition, our real hope of becoming a sober nation is in encouraging in boys and young men habits of total abstinence. The boy who learns to like water as a beverage, is far less likely to fall under the drink curse than he who is restrained by law from procuring the liquor to which he has become accustomed. It is, therefore, a matter for regret that the Bands of Hope, which half a century ago were inculcating the principle of total abstinence among young people, should have become unpopular in our cities. It is a glorious work to rescue and redeem the drunkard, but a far better work to give our boys an early training in abstinence.

This is the great problem of our time and country. How to secure a generation of total abstainers, who will be our statesmen and judges and leaders of society when the present generation drops out, may well be the object of deep concern to patriotic citizens. Say what we will about it, drunkenness is far too common among us as a people, and it is a notorious fact that the moderate drinker is too often an occasional victim. Not one man in ten of those who habitually drink in moderation, can truthfully boast that he has never found his brain befogged and his passions excited by over indulgence. There come times inevitably when he is the worse for liquor. Therefore, the only safe course is to let it severely alone. In this way a safe example is set to young people, and it is by example that we exert the strongest influence over them. The intemperate temperance advocate, who raves and curses the drink, has no influence over the boy who sees his father drink, but has never seen him intoxicated. He is liable to think that it is safe to adopt his father's rule, and to regard the temperance advocate as a fanatic. But the boy may not have the strength of mind that his father has; his business may take him into stronger temptation than his father endured, and so he may fall. This fact should be a warning to all good men. Howsoever safe they may be from falling under the power of drink, they ought to abstain for the sake of example. If every good man would place himself on record in this matter, it would do more to influence young people than all the statistics and all the impassioned harangues that could be produced. So long as they can point to good men who use the drink in moderation, and get no harm from it, so long shall we have our young people falling into this hideous vice of drunkenness. We must not forget our Lord's warning, that he who is the cause of one of these little ones offending, is in worse condition than if a millstone had been tied around his neck and he had been cast into the sea.

BOBBY'S PRAYER

"I'm going to the attic, to pray, mother,
For the teacher at school said so,—
That little boys needed to pray, mother,
As much as they needed to grow."
And off he rushed to the attic,
For Bobby was quick on his feet;
"Amen! Lord Jesus, I'm coming—"
And then he rushed into the street.
At eve, his steam was expended,
Bobby's engine slowed up, you see,
And the little boy sat very quiet,
With hand on his mother's knee.
"I went to see Robin, who's crippled,
We used to be chums, you know;
But since he fell down from the ladder
Poor Robin will always be slow.
I told him that he must pray, mother,
But he can't run or climb any more;
So he just said, 'Lord Jesus, I'm coming,'
As he lay on the cot by the door."
"Amen! Lord Jesus, I'm coming,"
What a beautiful prayer to pray,
Whether up in the attic with Bobby,
Or where Robin, the poor cripple, lay.
For out of the mouths of infants
Cometh many a word that is wise,
To teach us our bounden duty,
And lead us safe home to the skies.

SAPOLIO

*Topic of the Christian Endeavor Society, Epworth League, and Baptist Young People's Union for March 16. Daniel 1: 8-20.

BY MRS. M. BAXTER

His answer was as frank as the question had been: "How can I, except some man should guide me?" And seeing that in Philip had found just what he was longing for, he desired Philip that he would come up and sit with him." This was a great honor from an Oriental officer; but these two men were so much in earnest about eternal things that the trivialities of ceremony, etiquette, or taste occupy them. To Philip the fate of an immortal soul was hanging in the balance; how should his mind rest for an instant upon the honor done to him in person? The touch on his side was eager to learn.

WITHOUT SPENDING A PENNY

We have paid it in valuable premiums, and you can have one as well as they. These ladies simply wrote us a letter, and we sent each one, prepaid, a package of Hold Fast Skirt and Waist Supporters. Each sold as many as she chose to her friends and sent us the money; and we sent her, freight prepaid, her choice from our hundred premiums. We will do the same with you. The picture shows the Supporter. It is the only automatic supporter ever invented. No hooks needed; no buttons; no sewing of any kind. You ladies know what a convenience that means. There are one million and a half women wearing them now, and every woman who sees them wants one. There was never an easier article to sell, as the price is only 25 cents each. Simply show the Supporters to your friends and they will sell themselves. You will sell as many in each family as there are women and girls, and each one sold sells others. You can thus earn a premium that will last you a lifetime, in a few odd moments that would otherwise be wasted. Last year over one million of the Supporters were sold in this way. We have premiums for selling any quantity, from a half-dozen up to a gross. You can sell as few or as many as you choose, and get a premium accordingly. Try it and see how easy it is. See what a pleasant opportunity this is for spending your leisure profitably. Write today before someone else sells to your friends, Since our first general advertising appeared last year, we have sold nearly $900,000 worth of Brooklyn property to people in all parts of the world, from Alaska to Manila, South Africa and Brazil, besides almost $1,500,000 worth to residents of New York City itself. Those Who Investigated Added $280,000 to Their Original Purchase. Of the 840 people to whom we sold lots, 429 have visited New York at our expense. Two asked for their money back, and got it. (One of these has just opened negotiations with us again), 108 persons confirmed their original purchases, and 319 increased their holdings to an aggregate of $280,000; the most marvelous stamp of commendation ever given a commercial house. A letter to us will give you their names, doubtless some in your own locality. Any of these writers will doubtless gladly answer your inquiries if you enclose a two cent stamp.

Doubled and Doubled Again.

172 Maple Street,
Waterbury, Conn., Nov. 29, 1901.
Messrs. Wood, Harmon & Co., New York City:
Gentlemen: I have the honor of being one of your first customers to purchase in the new section of Rugby. Mr. Jackson prevailed upon me to visit Rugby, when I increased my holdings from one $480 lot to two $1100 lots on a Linden Boulevard corner. I have since induced a number of my friends to invest, together with my two brothers, and have also secured another double lot corner ($2200) on Linden Boulevard. I can safely speak for my friends, as well as myself, that we are well pleased with our investments and from the cordial treatment we always received from your representatives; we all feel perfectly at home when doing business with Wood, Harmon & Co.

Yours truly,
WILLIAM O. FLORIAN.

"Frank and Truthful Representations."

University of Wisconsin,
Madison, Wis., Nov. 20, 1901.
The surest way to systematically save a stated amount each month furnishes an interesting problem to most men on a salary, for upon its satisfactory solution depends the future comfort and independence of both family and self.
My investment in two of your Rugby lots last spring, after a thorough personal examination of nearly a week, was my solution of this problem. My investigation proved that every condition of your advertisement was fulfilled and more. I was especially surprised and pleased to note the high grade building and street improvements adjacent to the property. It is perfectly obvious to one on the ground that Rugby is in the direct path of the ever accelerating growth of the Greater New York, and must necessarily share in the near future, the certain and rapid rise in values due to that growth.
The acknowledged success of Wood, Harmon & Co.'s numerous real estate ventures can be justly attributed to their wisdom in selecting the properties and to their frank and truthful representations regarding the same. I have written more conservatively than I feel.

"Thoroughly Convinced of Genuine Value."

Allegheny, Pa., Nov. 22, 1901.
Wood, Harmon & Co., 256-257 Broadway, New York.
I am glad of the opportunity to commend Rugby property to anyone seeking a good investment. On reading the advertisement of lots in Greater New York at such rare bargains, viz., small payments, low interest, all improvements, life insurance, and non-forfeiture contracts, and assured increase of values, I felt investigation of the firm making the offer advisable. I was assured Wood, Harmon & Co. are worthy of fullest confidence. I then decided to inspect the property with a view to purchasing. This investigation so thoroughly convinced me of genuine values, I made double the investment I had intended. As to business courtesy and fairness of treatment I cannot too highly commend Wood, Harmon & Co.
Very truly yours,
A. R. VAN FOSSEN.

"Best Investment I Could Have Made."

345 Lafayette Avenue,
Pasadena, N. J., Nov. 19, 1901.
Wood, Harmon & Co.:
Gentlemen—I desire to express my satisfaction at having become a customer of yours. I am positive that it is the very best investment that I could have made. I think a visit to Rugby by anyone of ordinary intelligence will enable them to endorse what I say. It is but five months since I bought my lots; but it would have to be a very large advance on what I paid to induce me to sell them, and then it would only be with the view of securing a much larger slice of Rugby. I am also convinced that Wood, Harmon & Co. live up to all that they say and will fulfill all that they promise.

W. R. POWELL.

"Very Much Pleased with My Investment."

809 Germania Avenue,
Schenectady, N. Y., Nov. 20, 1901.
Wood, Harmon & Co.:
Dear Sirs—I desire to express my gratitude to you for the interest and prompt attention shown me during all my dealings with you, and I am very much pleased with my investment at Rugby. I, like some others, was somewhat slow about investing money in land I had not seen, and dealing with a firm I was unacquainted with, but on arriving in New York and making a thorough investigation of things, found Rugby to be far beyond my expectations, and every word advertised to be absolutely true. Anyone thinking of investing in New York real estate would do honor to themselves in dealing with a firm that is a firm and always ready to make good every statement uttered. The low rate of interest, the insurance and non-forfeiture from loss of employment or sickness are of vital importance to be considered before buying—advantages not found elsewhere. Sincerely yours,
LEWIS H. SKINNER.

FREE TRIP TO NEW YORK.

As a guarantee of good faith, we agree with all persons living East of Chicago to pay you in cash the cost of your railroad fare to New York and return, if you visit our property and find one word of this advertisement a misrepresentation; or in case you buy, we will credit cost of the fare on your purchase; to those living farther away than Chicago, we will pay an amount equal to round-trip Chicago ticket.

An Old Customer's Tribute.

Wood, Harmon & Co., City:
Gentlemen: Nearly a dozen years ago I bought at one of your Scranton, Pa., properties, and have followed with interest your successful operations there and in other cities. Having since removed to Brooklyn, and hearing of your new suburb Rugby, I immediately bought two lots before the opening, which is perhaps the best testimony I can offer as to my confidence in your judgment and in your fair treatment of customers, as you had always done the right thing by me, by my brother, and by others I know some of whom have bought through my influence and are more than satisfied, as I am. I believe Rugby has a great future, and only wish I might invest still more heavily.
Wishing you the success you deserve and are sure to have, I remain, sincerely yours,
ARTHUR B. METCALFE,
203 Cornelia street, Brooklyn.

"Brooklyn Good, Rugby Exceptionally So."

Kewanee, Ill., Nov. 26, 1901.
Wood, Harmon & Co.:
Gentlemen—I became interested in Brooklyn property through your magazine advertisement; more interested through the maps and descriptive matter sent at my request, and most interested by what I saw in New York. I wanted to see the property before I bought; could not afford to make a mistake, so visited New York last October. I found Rugby better than I had imagined; perfect building lots on beautiful streets, conveniently located in the greatest city in America, handsome houses being built, the whole property as beautiful as a park; with every convenience at hand.

I bought in Rugby because the prices were such as I could pay, the terms perfectly fair, and the reasons for a rapid increase in value so convincing that to my mind they amounted to a certainty. Any Brooklyn property at a fair price is good, but Rugby is exceptionally so.
Respectfully,
HARRY R. CLEARS.

Prefers His Lots to Principal and Interest.

Charters Trust Company,
Pittsburgh, Pa., Nov. 22, 1901.
Messrs. Wood, Harmon & Co., 256 Broadway, N. Y.:
Gentlemen—When I first saw your advertisement relative to your New York City lots I thought the offer too good to be true, but after a thorough investigation, through reliable sources, I found your company to be trustworthy and responsible. Following this information I ordered you to make selections for me.
When I visited New York at your expense, I was greatly surprised at the beauty of my lots, everything just as represented and nothing exaggerated in the least. As to prices, one would wonder how they can possibly be so cheap with such fine surroundings. Taking all into consideration, I think too much of my investment to consider your offer to return my money with interest.

Very truly yours,
H. F. LINNENBRINK.

"At Once Increased My Holdings."

Walkhill, N. Y., Nov. 21, 1901.
Wood, Harmon & Co., New York City:
Sir—Last spring when I bought a lot at Rugby I did so through correspondence with you, and later when I visited Rugby at your expense to inspect the property I was so favorably impressed and found your representations of the same so true in every respect that I not only retained my original purchase but at once increased my holdings. Should you at any time desire to refer any purchaser to me, I will cheerfully vouch for your honesty and fair dealing. Yours very respectfully,
J. M. BOWMAN, M.D.

Has Solved the Income Question.

1738 Curtis Street,
Denver, Colo., Nov. 18, 1901.
Messrs. Wood, Harmon & Co., New York:
Gentlemen—How to provide for an income when incapacitated for labor by old age is the problem of life. I have solved the question. I read your astonishing advertisement last June—an investment that almost anyone can easily provide for. And for property not in a "mushroom town," but in a location where the leading

New York papers predict that values of real estate will enhance from five to tenfold within the next five or six years.

Within an hour after reading your advertisement, I sent you a letter containing money for first payment on two lots. As soon as my last payment is made I expect to erect as large a building as possible, and own an income property that will support me. Yours truly,
N. T. PLUMMER.

Invested $1,120 Instead of $480. Why?

Williamstown, Pa., Nov. 21, 1901.
Messrs. Wood, Harmon & Co., New York:
Gentlemen—When I saw your advertisement of lots for sale in Greater New York for $480 and up, I concluded, here is another scheme to pawn off swamp lands on the public. But when I noticed your offer, "Free Trip to New York," I decided to go and see it, and if as represented would risk $480 in a city where nearly anything would grow into value. I went, was shown over the grounds, was more than pleased with its condition and the process of beautifying it. It took but little pointing out to convince me the city was by natural conditions to grow in the direction of Rugby; hence it would greatly increase in value. At once I invested, not $480, but $1,120, and have since sent several of my friends there. They all bought, and are all pleased. I have no hesitancy in recommending it as all you represent it to be. Respectfully yours,
WILLIAM J. DURBIN.

REMEMBER OUR OFFER:

For $10 down and $6 per month until paid for, we sell you a regular New York City lot, full size, subject to the following guarantees from us: If at the expiration of the year 1902 this $480 lot is not worth $576—or 20 per cent. increase—based on the price at which our corps of salesmen will then be selling similar lots, we will refund all of the money you have paid us with 6 per cent. interest additional. If you should die at any time before payments have been completed, we will give to your heirs a deed of the lot without further cost. If you should lose employment or be sick you will not forfeit the land. Write for full particulars on these points.

Isn't this evidence sufficiently convincing to warrant your sending the initial payment of $10, or at least writing to us for the full details of this marvelous proposition?

In fact (as lots are SELLING VERY FAST), we will say this: In order to secure for you the earliest possible advantage of selection, and an immediate share in the increase of values, we agree to return to you—cheerfully and without quibbling—all the money you have paid us, if you are not PERFECTLY SATISFIED on examining our entire proposition within one year, that it is just as represented. Isn't this fair? Sit right down and mail us $10. YOU'LL NEVER REGRET IT. Address:

Questions of the Week

1. In what sense may euchre, bridge whist, and similar games be considered helpful or hurtful to social life in well regulated, church-going communities?

Card-playing often leads to gambling. Gambling is always harmful to any person or community. If a Christian plays cards without gambling, other Christians are in danger of following the example and going a little further, until they become gamblers, and perhaps confirmed gamblers. A mother was showing to her family a fine silver cup she had won at a "progressive euchre" party, and to her great surprise her young son exclaimed, "I can beat that, for I won ten dollars at the pool table last night." How could she rebuke him when partner in the same sin? Again, it is a waste of time; something better can be done. If it is needful for recreation, something unquestionable and more beneficial can be substituted. Exercise in the open air, walking or wheeling, visiting the sick and needy, and even reading aloud, would be far more consistent and enjoyable and profitable. It is not for the Christian to lay down rules for the people of the world, but it is no harm for him to know his own duty; "God first," should be his motto. The most consecrated Christians never attend "euchre parties," but are engaged in the simple work of building up themselves in the faith, rescuing sinners, training them in a holy life, and going about doing good. This is the simplest, easiest, healthiest and happiest life. W. J. MOSIER.

They may be helpful when they hold the young people at home, and are taught to be honest in playing and warned about the evil of gambling. These games are hurtful when used in excess. Church-going people ought to be Christ-living people. And we ought to use, and only use, these things that are helpful in building up his kingdom. I do not think or believe a game of euchre will put a good stone in God's kingdom. Man is a being of habit, and when a habit gets planted, it grows with great rapidity and to excess, unless the man or woman is of a strong will power. I would say the less a Christian man or woman has to do with these games, the better for them, for their neighbors and for Christ's kingdom. REV. WM. H. DAVY.

"A well-regulated church-going community" must have diversion. "Not all are up to music," say the advocates of these games, "or have brains enough for chess, or care to show their ignorance in such games as authors, cities, history, etc. We want games of chance, not skill alone; so by all means give us cards.

If by his method of getting gain he causes suffering, is he not an unjust steward? 2. By profession he is a Christian, that is, he has the spirit of Christ. In one word, that spirit is unselfishness—he gave himself for others. W. B. L.

It would depend upon the effect which such increase of cost might have. It might prove a great blessing both to producer and consumer. When it enables the producer to give more work and better wages to the poorer classes, it is right. When it would benefit only himself, or his class, to the injury of all others, it would be wrong. This is the principle involved when one votes for the tariff. Those who vote for it, do not regard themselves as doing an immoral act. They feel that whilst they may be benefited by it, most others would also be helped.

A. G. EAGLESON.

3. Is there such a thing as "harmless flirtation?"

There is no such thing as "harmless flirtation," because flirtation in any form appeals to the lower instincts—vanity, insincerity, love of admiration and conquest, trifling with affection, and even to the coarser human passions—and is a sure indication of a selfish reflect the rays of light passing through it. Light rays passing through a total vacuum are invisible. If we prepare a box a foot square so that in three sides, two of which must be opposite, glasses are fitted air-tight, and the inside of the box, glasses excepted be well smeared with tar and hermetically sealed, it will be found that in a few days the tar will have caught all suspended particles, and that the rays of the sun will pass through the glasses on opposite sides of the box, and be luminous on emerging, but will be invisible to an eye placed at the third glass, there being no longer any medium to reflect the light rays from their direct course. Now the fields of ether beyond our atmosphere being a perfect vacuum containing no reflective matter whatever, allow the sun's rays to pass through them at will, and they give no evidence of their presence or passage until they strike something material enough to reflect, i. e., change their course, enter the eye and thus become visible. This is why we can see the moon and planets by night, and terrestrial objects by day, and why the ether beyond our atmosphere is non-luminous at night, while the sun's rays are passing through it in all directions freely. WM. W. CASE.

5. Why was it right to discriminate in the pay of the laborers in the parable in Matt. 20: 1-16?

This parable stands in close connection with the preceding chapter, and its evident purpose was to illustrate the sentiment of its closing verse: "Many that are first shall be last, and the last shall be first." The parable has reference to rewards, and illustrates the method of their bestowment upon the followers of Christ, namely, in such a way that the last shall be equal to the first, and the first last—a way that rewards faithfulness of service, rather than length of service or the amount accomplished in the service. The purpose of the parable, being understood, it cannot properly awaken any question as to discrimination in the matter of the pay of the laborers. As to the transaction of the householder, as represented in the parable, there was no injustice in it. He agreed with the first laborers for "a penny a day," while with the others no specified amount was agreed upon, and he could pay them what he pleased. Further, the Saviour does not necessarily approve the course of the householder, and we are not required to show that it was either right or wise, as an act of man toward men, but only that rewards in the kingdom of God are thus bestowed without reference to the time of service, another and very different consideration actuating our Heavenly Father in this matter—namely, faithfulness. B. F. WHITEMORE.

The parable was an answer to Peter's question (Matt. 19: 27), "Behold, we have forsaken all and followed thee: what shall we have therefore?" In a word, it was a rebuke of the bargaining spirit. Those who follow Christ for the sake of the reward, and not from love of him, will not be defrauded. They will have all that God has promised them, but they are not those whom he most loves. A parent who promises a child a reward for a certain service, or for good behavior, and notices that the child performs the task or behaves himself better than at other times, when no reward is promised, does not approve of the child's spirit. He does not like to see the child doing for money the thing that he does not do for love, as he ought to do. Still, he keeps his promise and pays, as he agreed. But the child who does cheerfully and readily, as the parent requests, without any promise of reward, is the one whom the parent approves. That child would surely be rewarded, though no reward had been promised.

The householder in the parable makes his bargain with the first gang of laborers. The phrase, "when he had agreed with them," clearly implies negotiation. With the others he made no bargain, merely giving his promise to pay whatsoever was right. They trusted him, and went to work. He liked the confidence they showed, and he gave them more than they expected. The early morning laborers had no just ground of complaint. They received all they had stipulated for. All through Christ's ministry he showed the same spirit. He craved personal love and confidence, to trust in him. Peter's question must have chilled Christ's spirit. This man who, Christ supposed, was following him for love, was there for what he could make out of it. Hence, the rebuke of the parable. EDWARD WRIGHT.

ANNUAL CLEARING SALE

OUR Annual Clearing-Out Sale begins this week. A Concern handling as many volumes as does THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, is apt to find at the end of a busy season a large number of books which—although practically uninjured—cannot be honestly sold at regular prices, because of some blemish known or visible, perhaps, to no one but the publisher.

Take, for instance, the wear and tear resulting from the handling of books at the counter. Careless people will rudely open a book and turn it back to test its flexibility. Of course the threads stretch, and the book can no longer be considered a perfect copy—and yet this defect would pass the untutored eye unnoticed. While there is nothing on the outside to indicate the "stretch," and although the life of the book is in no way impaired, we feel it our duty to consider a book so handled as legitimately subject to a discount.

But even though a book be not rudely used, if exposed on the counter, somehow or other it will get slightly rubbed, or a little dusty, and after a few days of service as a specimen book, it is laid aside as defective, though not a page is torn, and the cover remains practically unblemished. Then when the season is over these books are carefully examined and brightened up, and sold at a reduction from the regular price.

Since the last clearing-out sale during the course of the year, we have accumulated a limited number of Red Letter Testaments, practically new but for the imperfections noted above, which, although originally 50 CENTS EACH and which is positively limited to the stock described. We guarantee that no books with torn pages or torn covers are included in this lot, and we further guarantee to refund the money, should the purchaser not be satisfied with the bargain. We know this is a remarkable proposition in connection with a bargain-counter sale, but we shall stand by this guarantee in every case.

FOR SUNDAY SCHOOL CLASSES THESE BOOKS ARE PARTICULARLY DESIRABLE AS EASTER GIFTS. In quantities we will send them at the rate of Five Dollars for the dozen, delivery charges prepaid.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD BOOK DEPT., Bible House, New York

Teach the children to play. It will develop shrewdness, sharpness and other Christian (?) graces. But explain to them how "playing for keeps" is all wrong with marbles on the sidewalk and all right in the parlor at a card party, for bric-a-brac. And bric-a-brac does furnish up so lovely! The minister ought to take a hand and get some ornaments for the parsonage and win souls. Yes, they just fit into this high latter-day civilization." Consequences? That once fine fellow, losing his all and blowing out his brains in a gambling den, or that well-dressed lady reeling on the street—poor fools!—they were none of our relation. But what will people do in heaven? Among its delights the Bible never mentions cards. FRANCES H. WOOD.

2. Can a professed Christian, who has been blessed with marked success in business and has accumulated wealth, consistently use his money for the purpose of increasing the cost of the necessities of life?

To use one's wealth, to increase the cost of the necessities of life is inconsistent with the profession of a Christian, for two reasons, namely: 1. The Christian is a steward, accountable to God for the manner in which he uses what has been committed to his keeping.

and cruel nature. The habit of flirting is like that of drinking—the more one indulges in it, the more he longs for it. Any habit that tends to lower the standard of true manhood or womanhood, can never be called "harmless." MRS. G. E. KRAUTH.

No. Flirting is trifling with the affections which God considers sacred, and nothing sacred should ever be trifled with. Flirting necessarily implies prevarication. Sincerity is one of the greatest virtues of the human heart; insincerity, the very foundation of all flirtations. Although one may not succeed in deceiving, and consequently does not harm his subject, still he degrades himself. There is no neutral ground; either one party or the other will always suffer. Anything that is not elevating and ennobling certainly cannot be said to be harmless. VIRGINIA JORDAN.

4. "If the 'sun is always shining' through the fields of ether beyond our atmosphere, and if the light we see in the planets be reflected sunlight, why is not the ether beyond us distinctly luminous by night, as well as day?"

The atmosphere is luminous because it holds particles of matter in suspension which

"WHERE TWO SEAS MEET"—SCENE OF THE SHIPWRECK

PAUL AND THE APOSTLES

THE PAUL'S BAY

ON PAUL'S ISLAND OF SHIPWRECK

Malta and the Evidences that Identify it with the Scene of the Apostolic Narrative

PRIOR to the landing in Malta of the great Christian orator, Paul, or "Saint" Paul, which dramatic event occurred more than eighteen hundred years ago, the inhabitants of the Maltese Islands, for many centuries, worshiped mythological Gods. Distinct and interesting remains of Pagan temples, and fairly well-preserved stone figures of gods worshiped in them, form not the least attractive features of ancient Malta, in the eyes of archaeologists and students of history. But all that kind of worship, and most of the galaxy of the gods themselves, disappeared as by magic very soon after the dripping apostle climbed up the rocks, out of the sea, and set his foot on the apparently inhospitable, but really kindly, buff-colored shores of Malta.

THE SHIPWRECK

The spot where Saint Paul's ship was driven ashore, in the great euroclydon storm of 60 A. D., is the world-famous bit of coast on the north side of Malta, where "two seas meet"—that is to say, a short strip or ligament of shelving sand between the small island of Selmoun and the mainland of Malta, over which ligament, in certain winds, the inflowing Mediterranean seas meet and commingle with the outflowing waters of St. Paul's Bay. I believe it is altogether safe to assume that St. Paul's Bay, in Malta, is the actual scene of the shipwreck. Expert navigators, who have scientifically studied the Bible narrative of the shipwreck, give it, as their unbiased nautical judgment, that the habits and motions of the winds and waves and drifts and currents are even, at this day, in entire consonance with the Scriptural story. History and tradition unite in confirming the generally accepted belief that Malta—ancient Melita—is the land whereon the apostle's fatally wounded and helpless vessel was driven. Other Mediterranean islands or coasts have claimed the honor, and hotly, if not learnedly, argued their claims, of the famous shipwreck; but the consensus of intelligent opinion and sentiment points unerringly to Malta. It were but a fruitless task to thrash over the already thoroughly thrashed out sheafs of grain that have passed through the winnowing hopper of controversy. Earnest students of historic truth who start fair, and, like sleuth-hounds, follow the scent to the finish, as I tried to follow it, are quite sure that Malta, of all the claimants, best fulfills the recorded conditions of the historic catastrophe. There are fewer and briefer gaps to bridge over in Malta's claims than those which yawn widely in the claims of her would-be rivals. And as for straightaway traditions, which are the legitimate offspring of truth and fact, of the apostle's wreck, landing, reception and residence in the island, why, the woods of Malta are full of them—or the "woods" of Malta would be full of them if there were any such things as woods there. There being no woods, one hunts in the garish open, with no misleading shadows to divert the hunter's quest.

Hence, as it is, and as it has been for about a score of storied centuries, traditions of the acts of the greatest of the apostles and of his goings to and fro, and of his accomplishments and miraculous achievements while a sojourner in the Fior del Mondo, have been handed straight down from generation to generation of Maltese with entire and undeviating integrity and no fundamental changes from their original recital. Rocks, shores, caves, sites, statues, legends, grigias, towers, churches and even public houses are all so many warrants confidence in these traditions.

To my thinking, after a residence of twelve years in Malta, there is not enough doubt as to the fact of St. Paul's wreck, or as to the fact that the bay that bears his name. Detail upon detail, exact and fixed and circumstantially convincing of his life while in Malta, are met with everywhere throughout the island. The picturesque, if grotesque latter-day traditions, that are believed in by the ignorant and superstitious classes, and which too often are cooked up by wandering, sensation-loving scribes for the delectation of helpless, far distant readers, are easily shifted from the venerable and believable. The Maltese guides and cab-drivers are, for gainful purposes, the greatest sinners in reeling off apocryphal traditions and in pointing out spots of unidentified historical interest. I recall an incident to the point. The late Bishop Newman and I were on our way to join a family picnic at St. Paul's Bay. In driving across the flat, russet-colored valley of Musta, I spied by the roadside a promising solitary yellow boulder. For the bishop's edification—for he was not unfond of a facetious jocular— I inquired of the pliant cabman if that boulder wasn't somehow connected with St. Paul? The man was promptly equal to the occasion. "To be sure, signore," he said; "after the shipwreck the good saint climbed up on that rock and dried his clothes, and to him there St. Luke brought honey and olives and the wine of Melleha. You could see the imprint of the holy saint's fingers and toes if the griegales (euroclydon, i. e., northeast gales) had not worn them out." That settled it, and thereafter the big wayside rock became a "relic of St. Paul" of no mean proportions.

St. Paul's Bay is situated nine miles northwest of Valletta. It is an inlet, of considerable size, say one and a-half miles wide, and extending lake-like, broadly inland about three miles, with a leg extending still further inland. Soundings show twenty fathoms of water at the entrance, gradually shoaling toward the upper extremity of the bay. The seaward opening of the bay would be much wider, but for the craggy lump of an island—like a gigantic eye-tooth—that stands at the right of the mouth. On the highest point of this island "Selmoun" (it is an "island" only when the griegales drive the swollen seas over, thus engulfing the sandy ligament that connects it with the "mainland") stands, facing out to sea, an heroic-size marble statue of St. Paul, whose right arm is extended in a gesture that blesses passing mariners, who, on their ship's decks, turn their faces toward the saint, and bow themselves and bend a knee, as their vessels scud toward or away from the Grand Harbor of Valletta. This "Island of the Statue" is a barren, forbidding, feet-bruising rock, with tufts of wiry grass in the crevices and interstices. A small flock of skinny goats secures a dry and precarious existence on this inhospitable spot, by browsing on the salty brambles, and sipping spoonfuls of left-over rain-water in the tawny or purple shallows. I several times rowed or sailed over to this island from the mainland, and toiled up the heart breaking rocks to the statue, and each time found the excursion more of a task than before. The statue of the apostle stands, with not a little majesty in its commanding oratorical attitude, on a sadly dilapidated, marble-faced pedestal, the carved Latin inscription having been mutilated by vandal tourists who, very infrequently be it stated, visit the spot. The statue is a spirited one of much forcefulness and marked dignity, and is not unworthy of the great man it represents. Through a spirit of sheer misanthropy, Maltese

Forgiven and Forgotten

TEXT—Hebrews 8: 12:

"Their sins and their iniquities will I remember no more."

THE national flower of the Egyptians is the heliotrope, of the Assyrians is the water lily, of the Hindoos is the marigold, of the Chinese is the chrysanthemum. We have no national flower, but there is hardly any flower more suggestive to many of us than the "forget-me-not."

We all like to be remembered, and one of our misfortunes is that there are so many things we cannot remember. Mnemonics, or the art of assisting memory, is an important art. It was first suggested by Simonides of Ceos five hundred years before Christ. Persons who had but little power to recall events, or put facts and names and dates in proper processions, have, through this art, had their memory reinforced to an almost incredible extent. A good memory is an invaluable possession. By all means, cultivate it. I had an aged friend who, detained all night at a miserable depot in waiting for a rail-train fast in the snow-banks, entertained a group of some ten or fifteen clergymen, likewise detained on their way home from a meeting of Presbytery, by, first, with a piece of chalk, drawing out on the black and sooty walls of the depot, the characters of Walter Scott's Marmion, and then reciting from memory the whole of that poem of some eighty pages in fine print. My old friend, through great age, lost his memory, and when I asked him if this story of the railroad depot was true, he said: "I do not remember now, but it was just like me." "Let me see," said he to me, "have I ever seen you before?" "Yes," I said, "you were my guest last night, and I was with you an hour ago." What an awful contrast in that man, between the greatest memory I ever knew and no memory at all.

A Neglected Art

But right along with this art of recollection, which I cannot too highly eulogize, is one quite as important and yet I never heard it applauded. I mean the art of forgetting. There is a splendid faculty in that direction that we all need to cultivate. We might, through that process, be ten times happier and more useful than we now are. We have been told that forgetfulness is a weakness and ought to be avoided by all possible means. So far from a weakness, my text ascribes it to God. It is the very top of Omnipotence that God is able to obliterate a part of his own memory. If we repent of sin and rightly seek the Divine forgiveness, the record of the misbehavior is not only crossed off the books, but God actually lets it pass out of memory. "Their sins and their iniquities will I remember no more." To remember no more is to forget, and you cannot make anything else out of it. God's power of forgetting is so great that if two men appeal to him, and the one man, after a life all right, gets the sins of his heart pardoned, and the other man, after a life of abomination, gets pardoned; God remembers no more against one than against the other. The entire past of both the moralist, with his imperfections, and the profligate, with his debaucheries, is as much obliterated in the one case as in the other. Forgotten, forever and forever. "Their sins and their iniquities will I remember no more."

This sublime attribute of forgetfulness on the part of God you and I need, in our finite way, to imitate. You will do well to cast out of your recollection all wrongs done you. During the course of one's life he is sure to be misrepresented, to be lied about, to be injured. There are those who keep these things fresh by frequent rehearsal. If things have appeared in print, they keep them in their scrap-book, for they cut these precious paragraphs out of newspapers or books and at leisure times look them over, or they have them tied up in bundles, or thrust in pigeon-holes, and they frequently regale themselves and their friends by an inspection of these flings, these sarcasms, these falsehoods, these cruelties. I have known gentlemen who carried them in their pocket-books, so that they could easily get at these irritations, and they put their right hand in the inside of their coat pocket over their heart, and say: "Look here! Let me show you something." Scientists catch wasps and hornets and poisonous insects and transfix them in curiosity bureaus for study, and that is well. But these of whom I speak catch the wasps and the hornets and poisonous insects and play with them and put them on themselves and on their friends and see how far the noxious things can jump and show how deep they can sting. Have no such scrap-book. Keep nothing in your possession that is disagreeable. Tear up the falsehoods and the slanders and the hypercriticisms.

Imitate the Lord in my text and forget, actually forget, sublimely forget. There is no happiness for you in any other plan or procedure. You see all around you in the church and out of the church dispositions acerb, malign, cynical, pessimistic. Do you know how these men and women got that disposition? It was by the embalming of things pantherine and viperous. They have spent much of their time in calling the roll of all the rats that have nibbled at their reputation. Their soul is a cage of vultures. Everything in them is sour or embittered. The milk of human kindness has been curdled. They do not believe in anybody or anything. If they see two people whispering, they think it is about themselves. If they see two people laughing, they think it is about themselves. Where there is one sweet pippin in their orchard, there are fifty crab apples. They have never been able to forget. They do not want to forget.

They Never Will Forget

Their misery is supreme, for no one can be happy if he carries perpetually in mind the mean things that have been done him. On the other hand you can find here and there a man or woman (for there are not many of them) whose disposition is genial and summery. Why? Have they always been treated well? Oh, no. Hard things have been said against them. They have been charged with officiousness; and their generousities have been set down to a desire for display, and they have many a time been the subject of tittle-tattle, and they have had enough small assaults like gnats and enough great attacks like lions to have made them perpetually miserable, if they would have consented to be miserable. But they have had enough divine philosophy to cast off the annoyances, and they have kept themselves in the sunlight of God's favor and have realized that these oppositions and hindrances are a part of a mighty discipline, by which they are to be prepared for usefulness and heaven. The secret of it all is, they have by the help of the Eternal God learned how to forget.

Another practical thought: when our faults are repented of let them go out of mind. If God forgets them, we have a right to forget them. Having once repented of our infelicities and misdemeanors, there is no need of our repenting of them again. Suppose I owe you a large sum of money, and you are persuaded I am incapacitated to pay, and you give me acquittal from that obligation. You say: "I cancel that debt. All is right now. Start again." And the next day, I come in and say: "You know about that big debt I owed you. I have come in to get you to let me off. I feel so bad about it I cannot rest. Do let me off." You reply with a little impatience: "I did let you off. Don't bother yourself and bother me with any more of that discussion." The following day I come in and say: "My dear sir, about that debt. I can never get over the fact that I owed you that money. It is something that weighs on my mind like a millstone. Do forgive me that debt." This time you clear lose your patience and say: "You are a nuisance. What do you mean by this reiteration of that affair? I am almost sorry I forgave you that debt. Do you doubt my veracity, or do you not understand the plain language in which I told you that debt was canceled?" Well, my friends, there are many Christians guilty of worse folly than that. While it is right that they repent of new sins and of recent sins, what is the use of bothering yourself and insulting God by asking him to forgive sins that long ago were forgiven?

God Has Forgotten Them

Why do you not forget them? No; you drag the load on with you, and 365 times a year, when you pray, you ask God to recall occurrences which he has not only forgiven but forgotten. Quit this folly. I do not ask you less to realize the turpitude of sin, but I ask you to a higher faith in the promise of God and the full deliverance of his mercy. He does not give a receipt for part payment, or so much received on account, but receipt in full, God having for Christ's sake decreed, "your sins and your iniquities will I remember no more." As far as possible, let the disagreeables of life drop. We have enough things in the present and there will be enough in the future to disturb us without running a special train into the great Gone-By to fetch us as special freight things left behind. Years ago, when there was a great railroad strike, I remember seeing all along the route from Omaha to Chicago and from Chicago to New York, hundreds and thousands of freight cars switched on the side tracks, those cars loaded with all kinds of perishable material, decaying and wasting. After the strike was over, did the railroad companies bring all that perished material down to the markets? No, they threw it off where it was destroyed, and loaded up with something else. Let the long train of your thoughts throw off the worse than useless freight of a corrupt and destroyed past, and load up with gratitude and faith and holy determination. We do not please God by the cultivation of the miserable. He would rather see us happy than to see us depressed. You would rather see your children laugh than to see them cry, and your heavenly Father has no fondness for hysterics.

Not only forget your pardoned transgressions, but allow others to forget them. The chief stock on hand of some people is to recount in prayer meetings and pulpits what big scoundrels they once were. They not only will not forget their forgiven deficits, but they seem to be determined that the church and the world shall not forget them. If you want to declare that you have been the chief of sinners and extol the grace that could save such a wretch as you were, do so, but do not go into particulars. Do not tell how many times you got drunk, or to what bad places you went, or how many free rides you had in the prison van before you were converted. Lump it, brother; give it to us in bulk. If you have any scars got in honorable warfare, show them; but if you have scars got in ignoble warfare, do not display them. I know you will quote the Bible reference to the horrible pit from which you were digged. Yes, be thankful for that rescue, but do not make displays of the mud of that horrible pit, or splash it over other people. Sometimes I have felt in Christian meetings discomfited and unfit for Christian service because I had done none of those things which seemed to be in the estimation of many.

Necessary for Christian Usefulness

for I never swore a word, or ever got drunk, or went to compromising places, or was guilty of assault and battery, or ever uttered a slanderous word, or ever did anyone a hurt, although I knew my heart was sinful enough; and I said to myself: "There is no use of my trying to do any good for I never went through those depraved experiences;" but afterward I saw consolation in the thought that no one gained any ordination by the laying on of the hands of dissoluteness and infamy. And though an ordinary moral life, ending in a Christian life, may not be as dramatic a story to tell about, let us be grateful to God rather than worry about it, if we have never plunged into outward abominations. It may be appropriate in a meeting of reformed drunkards or reformed debauchees, to quote for those not reformed how desperate and nasty you once were; but do not drive a scavenger's cart into assemblages of people, the most of whom have always been decent and respectable. But I have been sometimes in great evangelistic meetings where people went into particulars about the sins that they once committed, so much so that I felt like putting my hand on my pocket-book or calling for the police, lest these reformed men might fall from grace and go at their old business of theft or drunkenness or cut-throatery. If your sins have been forgiven and your life purified, forget the waywardness of the past, and allow others to forget it.

But, what I most want in the light of this text to impress, is that we have a sin-forgetting God. Suppose that on the Last Day—called the Last Day because the sun will never again rise upon our earth, the earth itself being flung into fiery demolition—supposing that on that Last Day a group of infernal spirits should somehow get near enough the Gate of Heaven and challenge our entrance, and say: "How canst thou, the Just Lord, let those souls into the realm of supernal gladness? Why, they said a great many things they never ought to have said, and they did a great many things they ought never to have done. Sinners are they; sinners all." And suppose God should deign to answer, he might say: "Yes, but did not my only Son die for their ransom? Did he not pay the price? Not one drop of blood was retained in his arteries, not one nerve of his that was not wrung in the torture. He took in his own body and soul all the suffering that those sinners deserve. They pleaded that sacrifice. They took the full pardon that I promised to all who, through my Son, earnestly applied for it, and it passed out of my mind that they were offenders. I forgot all about it. Yes, I forgot all about it. 'Their sins and their iniquities do I remember no more.'"

A Sin-Forgetting God

That is beyond and above a sin-pardoning God. How often we hear it said: "I can forgive, but I cannot forget." That is equal to saying: "I verbally admit it is all right, but I will keep the old grudge good." There is something in the demeanor that seems to say: "I would not do you harm; indeed, I wish you well, but that unfortunate affair can never pass out of my mind." There may no hard words pass between them, but until death breaks in the same coolness remains. But God lets our pardoned offenses go into oblivion. He never throws them up to us again. He feels as kindly towards us as though we had been spotless and positively angelic all along.

On Paul's Island of Shipwreck

line, and, translated into English, reads as follows:

To the Apostle Paul, the master of the world and teacher of the Gentiles, the Father and patron of the Maltese people, this statue, raised on the very spot "where two seas meet," and on which he was cast in safety by shipwreck, for the conversion of the whole island, has been, in commemoration of so great an event, dedicated by Saviour Borg, partly by means of funds subscribed by the people, and partly at his own expense, A. D. 1845. Through the favor of F. Xavier Caruana, Bishop of Malta (prohulgentia F. Xavier Caruana Melitar Ep.) it is accorded to all persons who repeat a "Pater noster" and an "Ave Maria" before this statue and in its honor, that by such an offering they shall deliver themselves from forty days of purgatorial pains.

Reverend William Tallack, when writing of the scriptural associations of Malta, notes that the euroclydon in connection with "leeway" would drive the apostle's ship (when in the position of "lying to") in a direction a little north of west. This is precisely the bearing of Malta with respect to the south of Crete. And, further argues or rather explains this careful observer, the distance from St. Paul's Bay from Cape Matala, or rather from the Isle of Clauda, is 476 miles. The apostle's ship had been drifting for thirteen days as "the fourteenth" had only just begun. Her drifting rate and distance would have varied a little, according to size, circumstances, currents, and wind. Experienced seamen, to whose expert judgment the integrity of the Scriptural "log" has been referred, and in cases without reference to that particular ship in which St. Paul sailed, concur in the decision that any vessel, under such circumstances, would drift at the rate of about a mile and a-half an hour, or thirty-six in the twenty-four. This rate for thirteen days amounts to 468 miles—a distance so nearly identical with the actual one as to turn "coincidence" into proof. Then, too, there is the looming fact that the modern soundings at the entrance of St. Paul's Bay are the same as those recorded in the Bible—twenty and fifteen fathoms—and that there is now as then a bed of mud at the "place where two seas meet, at the side of a 'creek' with a 'shore'—a most unusual circumstance in Malta—these and other concurrent facts and conditions forcibly confirm the soundness of Malta's claim to the famous shipwreck.

Strangely enough, many beautiful, exquisitely beautiful, wild flowers grow on the ragged, jagged, almost soilless surface of Selmoon, delicate, primrose-like ones, and queenly but diminutive trefoil, with rich, red velvet blossoms. Somehow these affecting flow'rets in their forbidding setting teach a lesson to the traveler. They seem to remind one that

In the rugged fields of duty
Springeth flowers of wondrous beauty;
Pilgrims o'er the desert going
Find the asodels a-growing;
Where the reaper mows and passes,
Violets cuddle in the grasses.
In life's unexpected places
Holy angels leave their traces.

The two most prominent objects in and adjoining St. Paul's Bay are the statue on Selmoon, and the square-built, mouse-colored stone castle or palace on the nearby western promontory. This old palace, like all the old palaces in Malta, has a history. It was formerly a country residence of the Grand Masters. It is now empty, its lofty rooms are bare and echoful. It is owned by the government, as likewise are all the other palaces of the Grand Masters, and is only used nowadays by a permit of the Governor for picnic parties of British officers and their invited friends. There is, however, a structure at St. Paul's Bay of more historic interest than the more imposing old palace. It is a square-built tower of native stone, severely plain, weather and storm-stained till it is mottled in gray and drab shades that only time can paint. It was erected in 1600 by Grand Master Wignacourt (he of the giant stature and enormous armor), who laid the foundation stone on February 10, the anniversary of the shipwreck. The Grand Master rode out of walled Valletta on his great horse, on through the plain of Nasciar (named for the Nazarene) and came to St. Paul's Bay attended by grand crosses, commanders, and knights galore, all radiant in shining armor and under streaming gonfalons, every gallant man of them with the eight-pointed Maltese Cross on breast or shoulder. The smooth-faced clergy from Citta Vecchia, the ancient capitol, mustered in full force, litanies were sung, solemn prayers were said, and then the Grand Master duly and truly laid the first stone of the tower, of which (it is recorded) the cost of erection was defrayed by himself.

At the inner extremity of St. Paul's Bay is a sandy beach, abounding in sea shells, and nearby are a few fishermen's flat-roofed stone cottages, and a spring of water, surmounted by an ornamental erection of carved stone containing an image of Paul. This is called in Maltese Ain tal Razzul—the fountain of the apostle.

"ST. PAUL'S ROCK," ISLE OF MALTA

This has been its name for immemorial ages. On the foundation is the inscription: Omnes gentes venient et glorificabunt nomen Domini—that is, "All nations shall come and glorify thy name." At this spring the apostle is said to have quenched his thirst.

The little casal, or village, at the head of St. Paul's Bay, is composed of a small church and a few houses, dominated by the Tower of St. Paul. Near the tower is the church, a mere chapel, and commonly dust-strewn without and within. This church stands upon the supposed sight where the "barbarians" lighted a fire to warm the shipwrecked crew. The church contains several old paintings, some of them dim by age, and a few colored drawings, illustrative of the events connected with the landing of St. Paul. Centuries of religious services have given its interior a worn and faded appearance—more ancient and venerable than its actual years demand. One small bell hangs in an exposed, diminutive belfry. A ribbed-leather curtain hangs at the entrance door. Artificial flowers, deplorably faded and dusty, and a stream of water, usually dirty, are about the only home-furnishings in the church. It had into the fire just mentioned that the specific stone, the spot which had fastened on his hand. Some writers have said that there are no more remains there in the island of Malta. In my twenty-year residence in the island I saw a number of snakes. To my own garden, I once presented a sort of altar. I have seen them killed by passing vehicles, or by public carts. I have seen them killed by the police. I have seen them killed by the police. I have seen them killed by the police.

I have seen them killed by the police. I have seen them killed by the police. I have seen them killed by the police. I have seen them killed by the police. I have seen them killed by the police. I have seen them killed by the police. I have seen them killed by the police. I have seen them killed by the police. I have seen them killed by the police.

Paul may be said to be the patron saint of the whole group of Maltese islands. Even in a higher and wider degree than the fame given to Malta by the long and brilliant occupation of the island by the Knights of St. John of Jerusalem, is the fame and renown that came to it when Paul was tossed upon its storm-beaten shores. The Maltese annually celebrate the anniversary every tenth of February, and it is an extremely interesting fact to note that these anniversary are celebrated with more and more detail of pomp and augmented splendor of ceremony, and always with unimpaired purity and profound sincerity as the years come and go.

Those people, in the sacred narrative, are spoken of as "barbarians": but historians record many acts of barbarians that put to the blush some Christian performances. Besides, barbarians, as the term was used in the olden days, implied a people who spoke a foreign tongue—a language other than that employed in, say, Athens and Rome. Thus St. Paul, in I. Cor. 14: 21, says: "If I know not the meaning of the voice, I shall be unto him that speaketh a barbarian." If the shipwreck had taken place at Meleda, near the Illyrian coast, as has been claimed, the term barbarian would have been improper, for the inhabitants of Meleda spoke the Greek language. Certain it is that the Pagan Maltese of the first century A.D. gave St. Paul and his ship-fellows of their pity, help and sustenance. Those who had the fine privilege of being intimately connected with the relief of the apostle's distress were fisherfolk.

The first time I visited St. Paul's Bay it was on such a dull, gray day, and as I viewed it from the cliff-like heights of Casal Nasciar I marveled at the dreary grayness of the barren landscape and of the sullen sea nibbling at the coast, at the scanty foliage of olive and fig-trees on the low, rocky hillsides of Bingemma, with their ancient embrazured rock-tombs: at the ash-hued square towers and church domes in the heavy, level distances: at the low-hanging, sirocco-laden sky: at the depressing loneliness of the scene. But when next I went there—lo! the heartless landscape, the morose sea, the bleak sky were not there. They had made way for soft-yellow houses, for the silver sheen of olive leaves and the dark green carob trees, for converging roadways that were little short of being ribbons of softest buff and shining mauve, for a domed sky of deep serene blue, and for a sea whose loveliness was as the loveliness of a poet's conception of the Crystal Sea.

There are certain names so magnetic that their pronunciation thrills all who hear it. Such is the name of the Italian soldier and liberator, Garibaldi. Marching with his troops he met a shepherd who was in great distress because he had lost a lamb. Garibaldi said to his troops: "Let us help this poor shepherd find his lamb." And so, with lanterns and torches they explored the mountains, but did not find the lamb, and after an unsuccessful search late at night they went to their encampment. The next morning Garibaldi was found asleep far on into the day, and they awakened him for some purpose and found that he had not given up the search when the soldiers did, but had kept on still further into the night and had found it, and he pulled down the blankets from his couch, and there lay the lamb, which Garibaldi ordered immediately taken to its owner. So the Commander of all the hosts of heaven turned aside from his glorious and victorious march through the centuries of heaven and said: "I will go and recover that lost world, and that race of whom Adam was the progenitor, and let all who will accompany me." And through the night they came, but I do not see that the angelic escort came any further than the clouds, but their most illustrious leader came all the way down, and by the time his errand is done our little world, our wandering and lost world, our world fleecy with the light, will be found in the bosom of the Great Shepherd, and then all heaven will take up the cantata and sing: "The lost sheep found." So I set open the wide gate of my text, inviting you all to come into the mercy and pardon of God: yea, still further, into the ruins of the place where once was kept the knowledge of your iniquities. The place has been torn down and the records destroyed, and you will find the ruins more dilapidated, and broken, and prostrate, than the ruins of Melrose or Kenilworth, for from these last ruins you can pick up some fragment of a sculptured stone, or you can see the curve of some broken arch, but after your repentance and your forgiveness, you cannot find in all the memory of God a fragment of your pardoned sins so large as a needle's point. "Their sins and their iniquities will I remember no more."

Six different kinds of sounds were heard on that night which was interjected into the daylight of Christ's assassination: the neighing of the war-horses, for some of the soldiers were in the saddle, was one sound: the bang of the hammers was a second sound: the jeer of malignants was a third sound: the weeping of friends and followers was a fourth sound: the plash of blood on the rocks was a fifth sound: the groan of the expiring Lord was a sixth sound. And they all commingled into one sadness. Over a place in Russia where wolves were pursuing a load of travelers, and to save them, a servant sprang from the sled into the mouths of the wild beasts, and was devoured, and thereby the other lives were saved, are inscribed the words, "Greater love hath no man than this, that a man lay down his life for his friend."

Many a surgeon, in our own time, has, in the hour of a patient's death, taken the patient's hand, and said: "I will save you, if I can." But all other things being equal, it is better to be saved by a surgeon than to be saved by a friend. After a long and painful struggle, I have been able to say to you, "I will save you, if I can." I accept the promise, and I will remember no more.

GOD'S TEMPLE DEFILED

TEMPERANCE LESSON

INTERNATIONAL SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON FOR MARCH 23
EPHESIANS 5: 11-21

By Dr. and Mrs. Wilbur F. Crafts

GOLDEN TEXT: "BE NOT DRUNK WITH WINE, WHEREIN IS EXCESS." EPHESIANS 5: 18

Lesson Surroundings

THE words of our lesson are found in a letter to the church at Ephesus. (See Acts 18, 19, 20; Rev. 2: 1-7.) That city was only second to Rome in grandeur. It was the capital of Asia Minor, all provinces of which contributed to building its great Temple of Diana, one of the seven wonders of the world, 425 feet long by 220 wide, with 127 columns sixty feet high, to support its roof; built of purest marble, that glowed like a comet in the blaze of the sun, as seen from the Icarian Sea on the west. The city itself was like an amphitheatre, with mountains on the other three sides. It was Asia Minor's capital for pleasure as well as religion, for it had also a theatre that would seat 24,500. There was also a stadium or circus, 685 by 200 feet, where criminals, captives and martyrs fought naked with wild beasts as a holiday diversion. Paul's remark that he had "fought with beasts at Ephesus" is probably a reference to such a conflict, from which he must have escaped, as Daniel did, through some Providential interposition. He fought there also with "still more savage men," savage in their selfishness though boasting of their culture. When his preaching led many to give up the worship of Diana, so that the traffic in idols and shrines fell off, the men whose evil traffic was affected got up a mob and tried to kill him, all of which reminds us of the liquor traffic to day, as the utter ruin in which the once prosperous city now lies reminds of the ruin of the traffic's victims.

Illustration and Application

Walk in love, even as Christ. (5: 2). All through this lesson light and darkness are set side by side. We are told what to do, as well as what not to do. The keynote of the chapter is, "Be imitators of God." We are urged to "walk in love" and "light," and, on the negative side, to have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness, but rather "reprove them." There, again, is the positive note. We are not alone to shun evil, we are also to "reprove" it, to battle against it; and not one form of evil only, but all. Every vice may appropriately be considered in a temperance lesson, for they are all fostered and fattened by intoxicating drinks.

Be ye not foolish. Repeatedly in this chapter, as in Proverbs, it is declared that wrong-doing is foolish, as well as wicked. The knave is a fool. If there were no heaven or hell, wrong-doing would still be insane folly, for it destroys health and self-respect and home peace and the priceless jewel of reputation. Shakespeare exclaims:

O that men should put an enemy in their mouths
To steal away their brains!

A Western stage-driver, who was offered a flask of whisky, refused in decided tones: "I don't drink. I won't drink. I don't like to see anybody drink. I am of the opinion of those mountains. Keep your top cool. They've got snow, and I've got brains; that's all the difference."

Be not drunk with wine, wherein is riot. Many a wine-drinker tries to persuade himself that whisky makes all the "riot," and that if we could only get everybody to substitute wine there would be little drunkenness or disorder. But France, where more wine is used than anywhere else, and homemade wine at that, also drinks more distilled liquor per capita than any other nation, and the very worst kind—absinthe. Only a few days ago, the French premier, M. Waldeck-Rousseau, said: "THE SCOURGE OF ALCOHOLISM THREATENS THE VERY EXISTENCE OF THE RACE."

While we are quoting rulers, let us add the words in which our own President Roosevelt has described the "riot" that comes out of the saloons: "The liquor business tends to produce criminality in the population at large, and law-breaking among the saloon-keepers themselves." Any beverage containing alcohol, by whatever name called, will "make the drunk come," and whatever makes drunkenness makes disorder, just as any flame, whether torch or slow match, will set off powder. Speaking of flame, reminds us by contrast of what Dr. Joseph Parker, of London, recently said: "I could make a garden of Eden in the east end of London in three months if I had my own way. I should do nothing but burn down all the breweries, and shut up all the public houses."

Burne-Jones, the great artist, has personified "Temperance" beautifully, as a woman pouring out water to put out a fire that is just starting at her feet. Let it remind mothers and teachers to quench the fires of appetite in their homes at their very beginnings; aye, better to prevent the fires of appetite from starting by making God's wonderful gift, water, the favorite beverage of the home. Speaking of fire, recalls the recent startling figures of this country's loss from fires, many of them due to fraud or carelessness. In the last year these losses were $150,000,000. But $1,060,000,000, more than seven times as much, was spent in drink, which, in turn, destroyed another equal sum in the crime and poverty expenses caused by it. Not alone property but life is destroyed by the drink. Recently, a mother in a drunken stupor was lying on a lounge in her wretched home while her neglected children played with the fire. The baby's dress caught, and it was burned to death because the mother was too drunk to come to the rescue. She was committed to the House of Correction, but the traffic that produces such tragedies in thousands of homes of poor and rich was left undisturbed. In Jacksonville, Florida, 148 city blocks were recently burned, making 10,000 people homeless and blotting out $15,000,000 of property—all due to a defective electric light wire, a break of a fraction of an inch—a suggestion of the ruin wrought in many a life by one slight breaking away from right doing.

Be filled with the spirit. Here the spiritual is set off against the spirituous. What comes out of the wine glass—riot, ruin, untruth, loss of soul—is in dark contrast to what comes to us if we welcome for our stimulation the Holy Spirit, who gives peace, happiness, truthfulness, eternal life. The wine develops the animal in us downward. The Holy Spirit develops the angel in us upward. Very appropriately ancient drinking-cups were the heads or horns of beasts, to which reference is still made when one speaks of "taking a horn."

The drink does indeed make the drinker beastly, and not infrequently he is tossed on the horn. Among our rough barbarian ancestors in ancient Europe, it was considered a sign of weakness not to swallow a pint or so of their fiery drinks at a gulp, and so when glasses came to be used they were made that they would not stand, giving us the word "tumbler," that is still appropriate, if no longer to the glass, at least to the man who uses it.

From the earliest times men have noted, in prose and poetry, how drink makes man a beast. There is a legend that when Noah was planting a vineyard, Satan watered the roots with the blood of an ape, a lion and a hog, and that consequently those who drink wine first act like silly apes, then like fierce lions, then like wallowing pigs. Drink awakens a whole menagerie of animals in man's lower nature. The image of God gives place to the mark of the beast.

THE BACCHANALIAN ORGY IN BELSHAZZAR'S PALACE

A lovely little Christian girl of eleven years, who went from New York to live on a Western ranch, was greatly pained by the swearing and drinking and Sabbath-breaking of the cowboys, and so planned a little allegorical dialogue for the big kitchen on Sunday evening, to which they all came. She had trained her brother Frank and her little sisters to take the various parts. One represented the soul, another an evil spirit, and a third the good spirit. There were scenes of temptation, the evil spirit enticing the soul to do wrong, while the good spirit, on the other side, besought the soul to do right. At last right triumphed, and Christine, the little manager, sang:

A soul is won! a soul is won!

There were tears in the eyes and quickened home memories in the hearts of the cowboys that night, and let us hope some of them became victors over their temptations, and accepted the spirit of love in place of the spirit of woe. In the old days, when many more than now in the churches used to drink, the cellar of a church was used to store liquors, which prompted this appropriate rhyme:

There are spirits above and spirits below,
The spirits of love and the spirits of woe;
The spirits below are the spirits of wine,
The Spirit above is the Spirit divine.

The Spirit above, that has at last made it impossible to rent church cellars for the storage of liquors, will some day make it seem as absurd for a Christian to store liquors in the more sacred temple of his body. "Your body is the temple of the Holy Spirit." "If any man defile the temple of God, him shall God destroy" (I. Cor. 3: 16, 17; 6: 19). That beautiful temple of Diana, containing a statue of the goddess said to have fallen from heaven, was burned by vandal hands. Greater yet is his crime who by kindling passion with alcohol destroys in himself the image of God and the temple of the Holy Spirit.

The lesson text does not explicitly teach total abstinence, which we believe is the only cure for intemperance, but it is taught in the imperative mood in I. Thess. 5: 22, "Abstain from every form of evil" (Revelation). Is it an "evil" to use as a beverage a poison which harms even when it does not intoxicate, and harms others by example if not otherwise? We are not permitted to indulge in an evil moderately, but must shun it altogether. Here is sure ground for the pledge of total abstinence. Surely, when 51 per cent. of the employers of this country are requiring total abstinence of their employees when on duty (an increasing number when off duty also), and when the German Emperor is recognizing this as one reason why American trade is outrunning that of Europe even in their own markets, the churches ought not to be doing less for abstinence in behalf of the higher interests of religion and Christian citizenship. Andrew Carnegie has recently said, "No rule that a man can adopt will bring him greater reward than this—to abstain absolutely from alcoholic drink."

A bright boy, who had been taught the nature of strong drink, and promised ever to shun it, one day visited a rich uncle who was not a teetotaler. He offered the boy a glass of wine, which he declined. Wishing to see how far he could be tempted, he urged the boy to drink, and finally offered him the gift of a watch if he would drink. He declined, saying: "Please don't tempt me; if I keep a teetotaler, I can some day buy a watch of my own; but if I drink and take your watch, I may later on have to pawn it to get bread."

Let us abstain most of all because God commands it, but also for our brother's sake, who may be harmed by our example (I. Cor. 8: 13), and for our own sake. Let us adopt some family or class pledge as a shield against temptation. Here is one that was in the childhood home of that famous temperance worker, the late Miss Frances E. Willard:

A pledge we make, no wine to take,
Nor brandy red that turns the head,
Nor fiery rum that ruins home,
Nor whisky hot that makes the sot,
Nor brewers' beer, for that we fear,
And cider, too, will never do;
To quench our thirst we'll always bring
Cold water from the well or spring;
So here we pledge perpetual hate
To all that can intoxicate.

A wonderful pledge-signing movement is now going on in England, in which seventeen religious denominations, under the leadership of Rev. F. B. Meyer, D.D., have united to secure 1,000,000 pledges. THE CHRISTIAN HERALD has a sufficient number of readers to equal this movement. Why not all sign the pledge?

ADDENDA. Since the World's Temperance Sunday in November, the temperance question has become more than ever a national and world issue. On Jan. 25, 1902, the last State "came into the union" in the matter of scientific temperance education. It has taken twenty years to bring them all in. This most important of all temperance achievements, won by the white ribboners under the lead of Mrs. Mary H. Hunt, should be defended by all true friends of childhood against every attack. On that same January 25, the Gillett-Lodge bill, to protect aboriginal races in the Pacific Islands having no civilized government, against American rum and guns, having previously passed the Senate, was favorably reported to the House, assuring its passage, which occurred on Feb. 1. This bill, prepared by the Reform Bureau, is what the venerable Dr. John G. Faton has so long desired. Its passage commits the House of Representatives to the policy declared by the Senate on Jan. 4, 1901, and by President Roosevelt, through Secretary Hay, on Dec. 11, namely, the protection of all the mission fields of the world against intoxicants and opium. It would be fitting that all adult classes, unless the whole church takes action, should vote an endorsement of this or some similar resolution: "Resolved, that—Church (or class) of—, State of—, hereby endorses the proposal of President Roosevelt, through Secretary Hay, to negotiate an international treaty to protect native races everywhere against intoxicants and opium. Attest:— Pastor (or teacher)."

Yet another matter gives increased zest to our temperance lesson to-day, namely, the International Sunday School Convention, to meet in Denver in June, which will appoint a new Lesson Committee, must therefore vote whether it will continue the order that at least one temperance lesson shall be designated in each quarter. Surely, Dr. Joseph Cook used to say, the Church ought not to fall below the State in teaching this moral duty. When our National and State governments require forty temperance lessons a year, the Church can hardly reduce its too short list of four. The lesson to-day "breaks the continuity" of our lessons, but it is in order to recall the preacher who was charged with wandering from his text, but was justified by another because he had wandered to the hearts of his hearers. If by studying Paul's message to wicked Ephesus before we reach it in historic order we "break the continuity" of the drink habit the sooner in some home or heart, the rhetorical loss will be more than offset by the moral gain.

Let us never forget that the liquor habit, even in moderation, is injurious to the constitution, and when it is indulged to excess is fatal. Like that historic orgy represented in the illustration on this page, it leaves the citadel of our bodies exposed to the attack of all kinds of disease, and incapacitates us for resisting the enemies which wait to destroy us.

Prince Henry's American Journeyings

THE programme of Prince Henry's reception and journeyings in this country, as previously given in this journal, ran smoothly, with only minor changes here and there. The storm, of course, threw his ship one day late, and it was Sunday, February 23, when the Kronprinz Wilhelm drew up at her pier. The Prince, standing on her bridge, called attention to a church clock which was striking noon. The guns of Forts Wadsworth and Hamilton, of Admiral Evans' squadron off Tompkinsville, and of Governors' Island, had boomed thunderous welcome, and the small craft of bay and river had whistled with all their might, while bugles blew and bands played and flags dipped, but perhaps the royal visitor accepted the striking of that church clock as the happiest omen of the hour in which he reached our country. His first act on touching American soil was to salute "Old Glory." As in the full-dress uniform of German Vice-Admiral, his breast blazing with decorations, he walked down the gangway of the Kronprinz, a brilliant suite of German nobles and naval officers following him, he noticed above his head a big American flag, and paused to lift his hat, while the assembled crowd cheered him. Across the pier, at the Hohenzollern, Admiral von Baudissin and staff and a fine array of German jackies awaited him. In the main saloon he was quickly called upon by the President's representatives and Mayor Low, who welcomed him in the name of the nation and municipality; and by Captain Sargent, who bore the good wishes of Admiral Dewey. After American congratulations had been tendered, the German Ambassador, with a gorgeous following of attaches, boarded the yacht. As the Prince landed Sunday instead of Saturday, some of the ties Hay and Long, and, under cavalry escort, rode to the White House, where he paid his respects to the President, who immediately returned the call, the Prince receiving him at the German Embassy. Everybody—officials, clerks, little girls, and boys, and colored people—were out to see and cheer the Kaiser's brother. Luncheon at the Embassy, a call from the District Commissioners and other notables, a visit to the capitol, where he saw both Houses of Congress in session, and a state dinner at the White House, were crowded into His Royal Highness' first day in Washington. At midnight, he was on his way back to New York, and next morning the Kaiser's American-built yacht was launched at Shooter's Island, receiving her name from Miss Alice Roosevelt in these words: "In the name of the Emperor of Germany, I christen this yacht Meteor." The young lady then cut the cord which bound the ship to her cradle, and the Meteor—a thing of beauty, all white and gold, and in brave array of flags and pennants—sped swiftly down her ways and into the water, a fair new bride of the sea. Never was ship wedded to ocean in presence of more distinguished company, for there with the Kaiser's brother were our national and municipal magnates, army and navy officers, and Germany's brilliant corps of representatives, with many of our prominent citizens, and a large concourse of those sovereigns without crowns—the American people. There, too, on holiday, were the workmen of the shipyard—the men who had helped to fashion the Kaiser's goodly craft. President Roosevelt called for three cheers for the Kaiser; the Prince for three cheers for the President, and the President again for "three cheers for the guest who has won all our hearts." Then Miss Roose-

City Hall, where the freedom of the city, in the name of nobles and the common and sustained by a lunch-some market, was conferred upon him by the Mayor in the presence of the Aldermen Board. The Prince made his response to the Mayor's address, expressing his hearty appreciation of American hospitality, and his earnest desire for continuance of cordial relations between Germany and America. He drove to the Hohenzollern in an open carriage, which he would not have closed, because he wanted to see the people and knew they wanted to see him; all the way, he turned a smiling face, bowing and saluting right and left to high and low. A dinner with Mayor Low, attendance on a music festival in his honor, entertainment by the Deutscher Verein, Arion Club, the business men of the city and the Press of the United State, under the leadership of the Staats Zeitung, were among the notable features of his stay here. At the Arion, 320 German societies marched before him, singing. At the luncheon given him by our "Captains of Industry" he met such chiefs of finance, labor, commerce and invention as J. Pierpont Morgan, Charles M. Schwab, George J. Gould, W. K. Vanderbilt, Thomas Edison and others whose names have prominent place on the roll of American enterprise. February 27 found him again in Washington, where he attended the McKinley Memorial Services at the capitol and visited Mount Vernon, laying two wreaths on Washington's tomb and planting a linden tree near by. His evening was spent at the White House, where he dined unofficially with the President and his family. Next day, he visited our Naval Academy, at Annapolis, and there features arranged for the day of his arrival were not carried out. At midnight, he and his party started for Washington on the "Prince Henry Special," as the train of cars which take him on his journeys is called. At Baltimore, where there was a short stop, the Mayor, prominent citizens, and a chorus singing German songs, welcomed him. He was met in Washington by Secrevult, her arms overflowing with roses laid in them by the Prince, was cheered at his instance. Later in the day, he presented her, on behalf of his imperial brother, with a gold bracelet, bearing the Kaiser's miniature, set with diamonds. After the Presidential party had been entertained on the Hohenzollern, the Prince visited Mayor Low at showed the same warm interest in our marine affairs as had marked his trip to the Brooklyn Navy Yard. Midnight, Feb. 28, with his suite and Admiral Evans, who has acted as his aide here, he started on his Southern and Western tour. At every place where a stop was made, His Highness received a like cordial greeting to that with which New York had welcomed him.

The Scarlet Line of Redemption
From one of our readers (Mrs. O. H., New York), comes this beautiful suggestion, with receipt of the Red Letter Bible:
It seems very impressive to me, more so, perhaps, because of our early association. When closing my father's estate, I kept the record of all debtors, and our lawyer said to me: "When a bill is paid, draw a line of red ink through that name, and you will always know at a glance who has paid." You can imagine how that scarlet line told me over and over the story of the blood which redeems us, and I thought of God's great mercy and grace. Many times I have used it in personal work, and this new edition, with the redemptive suggestion in color, makes it a powerful influence to me. I trust many may be led to the Lamb of God in this way.

A Bible Class Leader's View
Mr. H. B. Oldeman, New York City, writes: "I am very well pleased with the Bible and I think it will be a great help to all who use this beautiful Red Letter Bible. It will be a great help in my work when I find a name, and can say to the class, 'This are the words of my Blessed Redeemer.'"

Praises the Art Portfolio
I have received the Art Portfolio, and am very pleased with it. It is a beautiful book, and I think it will be a great help to all who use it. It will be a great help in my work when I find a name, and can say to the class, 'This are the words of my Blessed Redeemer.'"

Official Recognition

ONE of the most significant signs of our time in relation to missionary work, is the official recognition of practical Christianity which comes from two countries. The kindness, magnanimity and beneficence which spring from love of Christ, and have been exhibited in India and China, have evidently made an impression on the official mind that was never made by the preaching of the Gospel. There is not converting grace in such beneficence, and we would not be justified in supposing that either nation would be converted to Christianity by the kindness conferred on it; but it has opened the way for missionary work to an extraordinary extent, and has done much to remove the prejudice which hitherto has prevented the missionary reaching the hearts of the heathen to whom he has tried to preach. As our readers have had a large share in these magnificent benefactions, they have a right to know how hopeful are the results which they have done so much to achieve.

The first testimony is an extract from the report of U. S. Consul-General Fee, of Bombay, to the State Department at Washington, D. C., on the arrival of the Quito, with its cargo of corn, sent by the readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD to feed the starving people of India. Mr. Fee reports that at the meeting held in Bombay to welcome the vessel, prominent Hindoos were present, and appeared to be deeply affected by the splendid benefaction. "Much enthusiasm," he says, "was exhibited over the graciousness of this timely gift of the good people of America to starving famine-sufferers in India. A Te Deum went up from many a heart for this magnificent gift." Mr. Fee forwards letters from Lord Curzon, Viceroy of India, and Lord Northcote, the Governor of Bombay, addressed to him, "in which they speak in the highest terms of the generosity of the American people." Later, Mr. Fee reports the suffering from plague and famine in various districts, and says that THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Committee "saved many lives imperilled by disease and famine, and mitigated much distress by means of the large gifts of money, corn and blankets sent by the generous people of America." One of the bright spots," he adds, "in this appalling struggle, has been the heroic efforts of the Christian missionaries in their noble work of relieving famine distress, and I write it with pride and reverence, that many of them are Americans." How gratifying it is that these noble men and women, whose efforts our Consul-General thus praises, were enabled by the generosity of our readers to do this grand work! Every one who contributed to the fund, howsoever small his contribution, has a share in this appreciative recognition.

Still more remarkable is the testimony that comes from China of the changed attitude of the official mind toward Christianity. In a proclamation recently issued by Ts'en, the Governor of Shansi, which he orders to be hung up in Christian churches, as well as in official places, he calls attention to the kindness of Christian missionaries to the people of China, and says: "Contrasting the way in which we have been treated by the missionaries with our treatment of them, how can any one who has the least regard for right and reason not feel ashamed of this behavior? How strangely singular it is that we Chinese, followers of the Confucian religion, should not appreciate right actions! By our conduct we have allowed those who follow the Christian religion to stand alone in showing what is true goodness in our time."

Such testimony coming from a Chinese governor is full of significance, and will have immense weight with the Chinese people in leading them to a more friendly attitude to the missionary, and will tend to secure for him a hearing.

Prince Henry's Tour

OUR distinguished guest, Prince Henry of Prussia, will carry back with him to Europe pleasing recollections of his American visit. He has made a most agreeable impression here, and is unquestionably the most popular scion of royalty who has ever visited these shores. On every public occasion, he has borne himself like a dignified, cultured gentleman, betraying little of that severe exclusiveness which is usually regarded as the prerogative of royalty. His manner has been at all times genial and even democratic, and marked by a skillful adaptation to surroundings that proved him an experienced man of the world. He has been welcomed, feted, feasted and acclaimed, and has received such attentions as no visitor has been the recipient of in a generation at least. He has met the President and Cabinet, and has had a good look at our Army and Navy; he has seen our national lawmakers at work, and listened to a by no means perfunctory debate. In the metropolis he has been duly presented with the freedom of the city. He has met and dined with our "captains of industry," and has been impressed with the remarkable personality of the men who lead the world in invention, commerce, manufactures and finance. He has visited our leading cities and has seen the great centres of business. From Niagara to the Mississippi, he has admired the natural wonders of the Continent, and the vast farms and ranches, the mines, the furnaces and the great manufactories. He will leave us carrying with him a mingled recollection of the hugeness of the Western republic, the grandeur of its natural advantages and the illimitable character of its material resources.

While he will retain a glowing memory of the land and its wealth and power among the nations of the earth, of the warmth of American hospitality and the geniality of the American people, he will also have had an opportunity to form some idea of the American character. Here, as nowhere else in the world, it is apparent to the observant visitor that the source of power lies with the people themselves. Prince Henry, in noting the great gatherings of the common people he everywhere encountered, must have felt that he saw before him the power that makes and unmakes Presidents and Congresses, Cabinets and policies. In this land, where all nationalities combine to make a homogeneous whole, there is neither hereditary prince nor potentate. Every citizen is a sovereign in his own right, the day laborer as well as the merchant prince. Here the humblest German finds room for the growth and expansion of the best qualities that characterize his race; for the Germans are among our most substantial, progressive and loyal citizens. Though the Fatherland be unforgotten, and though their love of it be transmitted to their children, they find here their ideal, under the flag of freedom, just as the British, the French and the Italian find it. Lines of race and nationality are sunk in a common brotherhood.

The American people will remember the Prince's visit with pleasure and satisfaction. His genial manliness, his democracy, and his unaffected enthusiasm, have captured all hearts and won a multitude of friends for the Prince and for the great nation of which he is the representative. We only wish he might have stayed with us longer.

Christians and Cards

IS card-playing consistent with the Christian profession? This problem, which has long vexed our churches, is to-day discussed in the "Mail-Bag," on another page of this issue. Some of our readers have written, expressing the most latitudinarian views on the subject; others, reverting to the opposite extreme, have pronounced all games whatsoever to be hurtful to Christian life and character.

Although card games, in themselves, may be harmless enough, it is not to be forgotten that cards, like dice, are the tools of the gambler. Through cards, countless multitudes have been led to dissipation and moral and financial ruin. There is about them a taint that contaminates—an impure taint that cannot be dissociated from them. It is beyond question, that addiction to card games is a certain means of demoralization, especially among young people. Yet how many indulgent fathers and mothers permit and even approve of card-playing at home, on the plea that "there can be no harm in it if the young folks play with proper acquaintances," and do not gamble. "Father plays," say the children; but the example of many a card-playing father has caused the son's ruin. True, the former may never have gambled; but the son may not be able to call a halt where his father did. And so the example of his kind, well-meaning, but unwise parent, becomes to him a fatal stumbling-block. Indeed, the better the father, the more injurious his example is sure to prove in such a case.

A young man once came to Dwight L. Moody and told him that he had been converted at one of the evangelist's meetings and had become a Christian. "Now, Mr. Moody," he said, "I wish to know whether it will be necessary for me to sacrifice all my social life and friendships. Must I give up altogether those gatherings I formerly enjoyed so much—I mean balls, theatres, cards, and the like—if I still could enjoy them?" "Not at all!" rejoined the evangelist, very heartily. "You needn't give up anything that you really enjoy. You must not think that being a Christian takes all the enjoyment out of life. But if you should want to go to these places now—or, indeed, if you should ever again take any real delight in them, as you once did—I'm very much mistaken." The evangelist knew that no one, who had taken Christ into his heart and life, could longer find pleasure in amusements concerning which there could be the slightest doubt, or indulgence in which might, through the influence of example, lead others into sin. He is his brother's keeper, and to keep that brother out of sin, he must keep out of it himself. There is no alternative.

But even regarded from the worldly or social side, the question of card-playing deserves to be decided adversely. No man or woman ever advanced in character or esteem by such means; never was the grace of a girl or the manliness of a youth enhanced by card-playing; never were won any of the great prizes of life—honor, position, fame—by skill at cards; none ever found proficiency at the game a recommendation with the business world; none ever gained, as a stake, health, happiness, or moral or intellectual worth. Ever since the day when the mad king for whom cards were invented played with the first pack, they have been the peculiar paraphernalia of the gamester, mad after another's wealth, of the sleight-of-hand swindler, of the drunkard, and of the time-killer, who, if he squandered nothing else, wasted over them the golden hours that might have been devoted to some nobler purpose.

Among the Workers

—EVANGELIST IRA D. SANKEY has been lately speaking and singing to large audiences in Grand Rapids, Mich.

—REV. EDWIN S. STUCKER, evangelist, conducted union evangelistic services in Battle Creek, Mich., for three weeks in January. Six churches—three Methodist Episcopal, two Baptist and the Presbyterian united. Prof. C. E. Millard had charge of the singing. The churches were greatly refreshed and encouraged.

—THE REV. DR. W. H. ROBERTS, Stated Clerk of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church, in his analysis of church accessions during 1901, shows that of the 7,516 churches carried on the denominational roll, 2,141 had not a single addition to their membership throughout the entire year, while 2,599 had an average of less than five additions in the same period.

—FOUR CHURCHES of Delaware, O., have just closed a successful evangelistic meeting, under the direction of Rev. Francis Edward Smiley, of Chester, Pa., and his singer. Souls have been converted, believers quickened and permanent results accomplished. All the pastors united in the movement, and heartily endorsed the methods employed.

—THE WOMAN'S UNION PRAYER MEETING of Harlem, which for eleven years has been held on Thursdays in the chapel of Second Collegiate Church, Lenox avenue and 123rd street, held its annual "All-day Meeting" on March 6. Among the announced speakers were Mrs. Courtlandt Field, Miss Catherine Delaney, Mrs. Francis Gillett, and Mrs. E. M. Whittemore.

—CHRISTIAN FRIENDSHIP (wrote the late Canon Howell) never dies. How can it? It belongs to an undying life. "You talk to me of death," said a departing child of God: "where is it? I cannot see it; I see life, but not death." How beautifully true! "Verily, verily, I say unto you," said Jesus, "if a man keep my saying, he shall never see death." Death to such is life, and the grave the garden of immortality. We in truth are the dying, they are the living; we are on the way home, they are at home; we are tenants at will, they everlasting inhabitants. Then ought we not to think of them, to speak of them, to feel towards them as the "living"? We surround one throne with them, only they on the top-most step, we on the lowest. We draw near to one Father, through one Mediator, by one Spirit, only they in the inner court, we in the outer; they in praise alone, we in mingled prayer and praise.

GEMS FROM THE WORLD'S GREAT PULPITS

Living Thoughts from the Recent Sermons of Eminent Preachers of Many Denominations

LED BY LOVE AND SORROW

REV. AMORY H. BRADFORD, MONTCLAIR, N. J.

WE begin life almost like animals, with the clinging of animals to parents, but soon intelligence takes the place of instinct, and then the growing child is linked to father and mother, lover and friend, not by instinct alone, but also by intelligent choice; and that love, which in the man is a self-conscious act, shows him how he is related to others; how love in him must have its source in a fountain of love above him; reveals to him something more desirable than wealth, more to be coveted than fame, and more imperishable than power. But hardly does he begin to love, before he begins to suffer. Sorrow teaches him that even love cannot keep its own; that if love would triumph, it must have a longer period than three score and ten years; that there must be time sufficient for love to grow and complete its ministry. Sorrow teaches a great lesson concerning the solidarity of the race, and so makes those who suffer tender and careful, lest they increase the burden of the world's pain. It breaks so many plans and disappoints so many hopes that at last, from looking around, men begin to look up, and looking up catch glimpses of the King in his beauty. Sorrow is like a wind that blows away the mists and lets in the sunshine. Love and sorrow join hands and together lead to the Cross of Jesus Christ, where, as nowhere else, is taught the lesson that the noblest life is obedience to God and service of man. Thus by love, by sorrow, by the new birth, the revelation continues to grow, until at last there is reached the one great experience toward which all move and from which most shrink. What that will be no one can tell, but it must be greater than anything of which men have dreamed. It hath not yet entered into the heart of man, the things which God hath prepared for them that love him.

TRUTH INCARNATE

DR. GEORGE C. LORIMER, MADISON AVE. BAPTIST CHURCH, N. Y.

WE are all falling into the old errors of denying personality and believing only in principles: whereas the Bible, in declaring that God was incarnate, that the Word was made flesh, teaches that an ideal or principle is practically operative until it becomes incarnate. You may write a beautiful book about morals, and you may write essays about idealism, and they may be charming, fascinating, but they will make no converts, or very few; one man or woman who incarnates in himself or herself those ideals will be a living force in the community. Incarnation is not brought to you in the Bible simply to remind you that God has condescended to take upon himself your nature, but also to remind you of a truth that ought to be ingrained by this time in every Christian heart—that mere profession is valueless, that life is what is needed, truth embodied and revealed in actual doing. You have heard the old story of the man who was asked, "Under whose preaching were you converted?" and he answered, "I was not converted under anybody's preaching, I was converted under my mother's practice."

ETERNAL LIFE

DR. BENJAMIN D. THOMAS, BAPTIST CHURCH, TORONTO

THE only way into true life is through Jesus Christ. There is a life outside of Christ, no doubt, a quality of life, a moral life, a chaste life, a philanthropic life, which is the result of education along mere human lines, and I would not depreciate its value; but what the Scriptures call "eternal life" is essentially different. This is the result not of evolution, but of regeneration. It is a new life, a divine life, which comes through the identification by faith with Jesus Christ. "For if we have died with Christ, we believe that we shall also live with him." My message to you, therefore, is: "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ." Your hope is in Christ, only in Christ. Every other life fails. It may be good, but it is not good enough. It may command the respect and admiration of the world, but it has not the quality that is approved of God. "In him only is life." "He that hath the Son hath life; he that hath not the Son shall not see life, but the wrath of God abideth on him."

RENEWED VITALITY

REV. HENRY VAN DYKE, BRICK PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH, NEW YORK

THERE is a process of perishing which goes on every moment. At birth, the secret reservoir of vitality is filled for each one of us. We do not know how much our reservoir contains, but every day we draw off a certain portion. We are not told how much, but certainly there is less to-day than yesterday. It was not the last voyage that wore out the steamship any more than the first. With every step something departs from us. With every simple act something fails. There is not only a death appointed for each one at the end of the journey; not only the daily dying, but there is a kind of sinking; a spending of the soul in this limited, perishing existence; a gradual losing of the soul; a secret dying of the soul, which is going on all the time; and this death is the only real death there is. The other is not death, it is change; this is death. To have our affections set on things that are earthly, perishing, temporal, is to belong to the things that are earthly, perishing, temporal. Sin is the preference of the seen to the spiritual. The preference becomes a habit, the habit a character, and the character a destiny: "to be carnally minded is death, but to be spiritually minded is life and peace." "Life and peace." Peace in life and life in peace. Living souls, not perishing forms. That is a very great reality under the mask. There is a thirst for immortality, the quickening, the more abundant life that is sky-bound and not dependent upon the senses, the daily resurrection from the daily death. That is the great truth, the great secret of the New Testament. The sacred testament of the Egyptians was called "The Book of Death." Our book ought to be called "The Book of Life." Its central truth is that mortals are brought to life in Jesus. "He that believeth in me hath everlasting life." Not, will have it some day. Do not read your New Testament that way. It is, "hath everlasting life," now, here, in this masquerade of a world, "hath" something which makes life. "I am come that ye might have life and that ye might have it more abundantly."

SAVED AFTER FALLING

DR. PHILIP S. MOXOM, SOUTH CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH, SPRINGFIELD, MASS.

MANY a man has not only fallen as Peter fell, but gone far in sinful ways, in whom still a deep-lying faith in goodness survived, and after a time Christ has evoked that germ of faith into power, and it has renewed his life. He, too, is "saved by faith." We see, then, the profound meaning of Jesus' words to Peter: "I made supplication for thee that thy faith fail not." Jesus knew that Peter would fall, that he would sin grievously. This was almost inevitable, in view of Peter's temperament and the severity of his trial. The vital thing was that his faith should survive, that the fall into sin should not overwhelm and destroy the living spark, the pregnant germ of his spiritual life. Here is the main lesson of the text for us. In most men—in all men until it is destroyed—is a possibility, a germ of faith. It is the deep-lying conviction that goodness and truth are of supreme and enduring worth, that sin is utterly evil, that virtue is better than vice, that truth is stronger than falsehood, that love is fairer than hate, that self-sacrifice is nobler than self-indulgence. It is the conviction that God is, that he is the soul's supreme good, and that life finds its source and law and goal in him. To this possibility of spiritual life the Gospel appeals. Christianity has its creeds and philosophy, but its message is not first nor chiefly in these; it is in the call of divine love and truth embodied in the living Christ. It is a call to trust in the moral forces and obedience to the moral imperative. It is a call to repentance and abandonment of known sin. It is a call to honesty and purity and self-control, to kindness and good will, to uprightness and charity. It is a call to conscious and purposeful commitment of self to God. The appeal is voiced in the explicit and oft-repeated invitations of the church, but it comes also in the silent solicitations of the divine spirit that rise in the vague aspirations and mingle with the better thoughts of the heart.

REV. AMORY H. BRADFORD
Pastor of the First Congregational Church, Montclair, N. J.

HEAVENLY RECOGNITION

DR. J. H. WILLEY, NOSTRAND AVE. M.E. CHURCH, BROOKLYN, N. Y.

THE expectation that we shall know our friends in the future world is a human instinct. It has a part in all literature, a share in the poetry, the properties and the prayers of Christians and heathen. It is the earnest expectation of the creature which waiteth for the manifestation of the sons of God. Poetry has gilded this hope with its silvery measures. Philosophy has recognized its power and hesitated to deny its promises. The Portico of Athens, the massive temples of Egypt, the banyan groves of India, the sunny vineyards of Italy, the Druidic forest of Britain have all thrilled with the song of the living and the prayer of the dying, through which breathed the promise and the hope of recognition in the world of spirits. Homer, the exponent of primitive Grecian belief, has sent Ulysses through the abode of the dead. There he meets and greets Ajax, the invincible warrior. There Achilles and Patroclus, fast friends on earth, are again in close communion. Socrates expected to meet Orpheus, Hesiod Palamedes, and the thought sweetened the pains of death. This is a universal belief, and universal beliefs are the voice of God. The stars that twinkle on the surface of the tranquil ocean, twinkled first in the sky. It is God, and God only, who kindles the altar fire on these Mount Carmels of world thought and faith. There is but one conclusion, that in the beautiful land, the clouds will all be removed, the failings and forgetfulness of time will be swept away, and we shall see face to face, and know as we are known.

Let the soul be freed from the body, let the barriers of flesh be removed, and every nerve of the spiritual quickened, then like the City of God, will stand the immortal part of our being, with "gates that shall not be shut at all by day, for there shall be no night there." As the pollen finds the flower for which it is intended, as the bird goes directly to its mate amid the shadowy depths of the forest, so will spirit find fellow spirit in the great spirit realm. And he who clothes the grass of the field and notes the sparrow's fall, will preserve these precious things of the heart. And in the bosom of the Father shall we find those from whom we parted with pangs, and for whom we mourned with desolate loneliness.

LOVE'S POTENT FORCE

DR. J. O. LOWRY, KANSAS CITY, MO.

LOVE is life's key of gold. If we are ever to be admitted to its inner temple, its holiest place, this must be the key. Life's finest essence eludes everything else. The mother's presence gives brightness to the eye of the child. Her absence brings sorrow to its heart. Professor Fiske says that the receding image of the mother on the eye, frightens the child, who is not yet familiar with the law of sight. Losing the image, it thinks that it is losing its mother. The youth is more independent, but its love is just as real. The man, if a true man, never emancipates himself from the glorious thralldom. A day comes, however, when another chamber opens to his love, and, instead of diminishing, it increases its power. He joins heart and hand with a wife, who pours the rich gifts of her soul into the cup of his life, and makes it overflow. That also we call love. A boy or girl leads them laughing through life's garden; and we call that love. Sometimes the daisies are removed to provide a sleeping place for the silent frame of a little one—and there seems nothing left but love. The farther door of the tomb swings open, and the little one beckons to faith and hope; and they bid love be of good cheer. Taking them at their word, love takes up the journey once again, and listens with a hunger, surpassing all other hunger, to the words of the Master. "Their angels do always look upon the face of my Father in heaven." Next to the triune God, these treasures draw mightiest, and make heaven most real.

THE PREACHER'S TASK

BISHOP FREDERICK BURGESS, CHRIST CHURCH, BROOKLYN, N. Y.

THE teacher who would turn men to righteousness must learn to discern the things of the times. He must be able to study the greatest ethical teachers; men like Aristotle, and then take the truth that they teach him and make it intelligible to his people, and show its bearing upon their own daily, practical life—their struggles to provide for their families; their endeavors to keep the boys pure and honest, and their girls gentle and modest. They must show how their homes, and their shops, and their offices can be influenced by the electric truth they get in church on Sundays, and how to bear their sickness, their losses, their loneliness, their pains and their griefs in the spirit of that Master, who, when he sought an illustration for his truth, found it right in the times of his people. "We are not growers of ideas," said a friend of mine, who was one of the strongest preachers in our American church, "we are growers." And so we must learn, and read the greatest and best authors, and then, with a supreme mental effort of the preacher, we must bring the truth we have learned to the hearts of our people, and make their common property.

GROWTH IN GRACE

REV. W. C. RHOADES, ELIOT CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH, ROXBURY, MASS.

LET each one begin at his own point of contact with Christ, and from that go on to the larger experience of a full rounded Christianity. Growth is the law of this world, and God allows for growth more than he requires it. Knowledge is to a great extent the basis of growth. We need to study constantly the way of life. We need to grow in the knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ. No one should be held back from growth in Christ by the consciousness of having a weak will—by the fear that he will not hold out. He should not wait until he feels that his will has been strengthened, but should begin now and trust that Christ will strengthen the weak will as he goes on.

It is to be noted that this growth is a necessary thing if one is to be a Christian at all. It is our sign of life. Where there is life there must be growth. You must not only grow, but outgrow, for growth means outgrowth. No man is so ignorant and so depraved, or so far from God that he may not grow in grace and knowledge. Herein is a great hope and a great warning. Let us not be content to view things that are great, simply as an ideal, but let us set out to put our lives into conformity with the ideal. This is the motto of the Christian: Always onward, and always upward!

CHURCH BAND OF PATERSON, N. J.

The Wonderful Zobo

For Entertainments and Parties

The most extraordinary musical instrument ever produced; so constructed that the human voice comes out so wonderfully as to make it melodious beyond all comprehension. It seems impossible for it to accomplish so much. It gives you the vocal power of giants, yet its music may be softened to the cooing of a dove or the thrilling song of the nightingale. Money and music making feature for church choirs and other concerts. You can organize a brass band for public appearance with 30 minutes' practice.

Sing into mouthpiece—Zobo does the rest.

THE legal firm, who managed the Armitage property soon learned that it was not safe to count on Mr. Moses Armitage being blind to the nature of the investments. The old fool—as Mr. Smalley uncivilly termed him—did find out the truth of the matter, and in the following way: An interesting case had just been brought to his attention by a certain zealous agent in his employ; it was that of an English woman, widowed, of course, who lived with her four children in two rooms at the top of a North End tenement. The story was perfectly commonplace. This particular widow, like thousands of her kind, had been engaged in an unsuccessful attempt to keep the wolf from the door with a needle. The tiny weapon had fallen from

The woman gasped out these short sentences with a curious indifference, as if paralyzed by her misery.

"Who is the agent?" demanded her visitor. The woman told him.

To relieve the immediate necessities of this case was an easy matter. Nevertheless, the old man's heart was heavy as he made his way through the reeking halls and stairways to the street. It occurred to him dully that this building was more vile, more hopeless, than many of its class. He resolved to find out the owner and beg him to do something to make the place habitable. Death was busy here in these dog-days. The dingy white streamer, mutely telling of a child more fortunate than its wretched fellows, was in evidence at one of the closed doors; the smothered sound of a woman's sobs reached him as her fingers during a fit of sickness; the wolf had entered and was proceeding to devour.

Moses Armitage climbed the dark staircases of the tenement on an August day, when the temperature stood at 98° outside; inside, and under the low, sloping roof of the attic room, where the wolf had entered, it might have been 120°. The widow sat propped up in a broken rocking-chair before her machine, one of her little girls was laboriously operating the treadle, anxiously obeying the motions of her mother's livid lips.

"When I am well," she said, in answer to a question from the tall old man who stood in her presence with bared head, "I make overalls. Yes, I suppose the man who gives me work is what they call a sweater. He pays me sixty cents a dozen pairs. If I work hard, I can make five dozen pairs a week. Last week I only made three dozen; this week, I don't know what I shall do. I cannot make my feet go. I cannot see very well. The agent was here this morning for the rent. I have nothing. To-morrow we are to be put out."

he strode past. The task of ameliorating the ceaseless and horrible suffering to be found in every large city of America, began to appear to him like the labors of Sisyphus. The roots of this gigantic evil of greed cropped out here in the sweating system, there in the saloon, and yonder in the crushing competition of trade. How was one man to hew his way through this impenetrable thicket of the world's miseries? he asked himself. The words of that One who spake as never man spake, answered him out of the silence, "My Father worketh hitherto and I work." Truly if one but wrought in the power of that understanding, all things were not only possible, but assured.

From the agent who collected the rents of that tall, evil-smelling tenement he learned that the building belonged to the Armitage estate.

"Fix it up?" quoth the agent. "No; I have my orders from way back. Besides, the folks like it just as it is. They would n't keep it clean if it was fixed."

After this interview, Moses Armitage made haste to acquaint himself with the

It was a request of this sort from a certain astute individual, who had stopped to water his horse at the trough, that sent Immanuel Rossi to his guardian with a clouded brow. "What am I to do, any way, uncle?" he asked, fixing his eyes anxiously on the placid face of the old man. "I must have a vocation of some sort, I suppose. I—I am different from the other fellows somehow," he added, after a pause. "All of them have known from the first. RHEUMATISM RELIEVED Without Medicine

External Remedy so successful that the makers send it ON APPROVAL to anybody.

Magic Foot Drafts, the new remedy for rheumatism which has created such a furor throughout Michigan by relieving all kinds of rheumatism, no matter how severe or chronic, are now being sent all over the world on approval without a cent in advance. The sufferer is put upon honor to pay one dollar for the drafts, if satisfied with the relief they give, otherwise no money is asked. This plan is a novel one and would result in enormous loss if the drafts did not afford immediate and permanent relief. The remarkable success of the plan proves not only this, but also is a glowing tribute to the honesty of the American people.

The drafts are worn on the soles of the feet because the circulatory and nervous systems are most susceptible at this point, but they relieve rheumatism in any part of the body.

Magic Foot Draft Co., Jackson, Mich.:

Gentlemen:
I received the trial pair of Drafts and will not forget

PLEDGES TO HELP THE BOWERY MISSION IN MEMORY OF DEAR ONES WHO HAVE GONE BEFORE

MANY of the pledges of "one dollar a year and no more," in aid of the Bowery Mission, are given by friends or relatives of some dear dead one, as a memorial gift. There could hardly be a more fitting way of keeping alive the memory of our loved ones who have "gone before," than by conse-crating for that purpose a single annual act, which shall in itself be productive of beneficent results.

Here is a letter—one of many such that are coming to us every week on the same mission:

I want to pledge a dollar a year to the Bowery Mission, in memory of our dear boy who was drowned thirteen years ago by falling through the ice. He was a lovely boy, and I feel if I hadn't been—like the woman in "The Needle's Eye,"—so intent on work and cooking, he might have been saved. Every night, after he could talk, he said his little prayers,
"Now I lay me," and a sweet little prayer he had learned—the last of it was: "Bless the friends I love so well, take me when I die to heaven; happy there with thee to dwell." I have never for an instant doubted that he was safe in heaven, and that is very consoling to our wounded hearts. I could not doubt that the God, to whom he prayed every night, would take him to his heavenly home.

Plattsburgh, N. Y. Mrs. H. E. B.

Mrs. W. A. T., Dennis, Tex., writes:

Enclosed find $1 for the Bowery Mission, in memory of a precious boy. May it help to bring some wandering boy back to God and mother. I'll give it each year as long as I'm able.

Mrs. Joe B., Rathmel, Pa., writes:

I send enclosed $5 for the poor and destitute. It must be awful for the poor this cold weather. This is a mining country, and while there are no rich here, there are none so poor but all have homes, and home comforts, and oh! how I wish all the city poor could say the same.

M. M. B., Guthrie, S. C., writes:
Where can a dollar do more good? I will pledge myself to give it as long as I live, with the earnest prayer that it may be the means of helping some poor boy to come to Jesus.

E. C. W., Jackson, Minn., writes:

I enclose an annual pledge in favor of the Bowery Mission, of which I have been a regular patron ever since THE CHRISTIAN HERALD took charge of it. I heartily enjoy the reports given from time to time.

Dorothy Y., Orange, N. J., writes:

I enclose a dollar and also place the name of the Mission upon my prayer list. I count it a sacred privilege that I can do this little to help His Kingdom in the hearts of men.

John G., Pawtucket, R. I., writes:

I shall gladly contribute this amount ($1) every year—God helping. God bless you in the good work. I have been at your Mission and was glad to give my testimony for Jesus.

Amby H. T., writes:

I was so touched by the story of the good that is being done for these poor souls, that I made up my mind to become a yearly contributor to the Bowery Mission for one dollar or more, as the Lord may prosper me.

E. R. H. Pierrepont, N. Y., writes:

I have decided to give a dollar to help along the good cause, praying that God will prosper it, and that many poor outcasts may be brought into the fold. I also promise to contribute the same each year, if I can.

Mrs. M. T., Rockland, writes:

This ($1) from one who was an invalid for more than a year, but, thank God! I am nearly restored to health. I am a firm believer in answered prayer.
If I can, I will try to help again.

Mrs. J. D., Patchogue, N. Y., writes:

Enclosed please find dollar and pledge, trusting it may help throw a life-line to some poor wandering soul and bring him to the Father's house, where there is bread enough and to spare.

Mrs. M. E. W., Williston, Fla., writes:

One dollar and my name, with a pledge of sending you one dollar a year as long as I live, by God's help. I trust the small amount may do some good and may be instrumental, in God's hands, in saving some poor sinner, old or young.

"In His Name," Oxford, Md., writes:

I feel that I want to add my little lamp to the many already brightly burning, so you will find enclosed $1.

T. E. J., White Oak, Ga., writes:

Enclosed $1. I will pledge this amount each year and I will send as long as I possibly can. It is a great pleasure for me to help in the Master's work. "Cast thy bread upon the waters, if you have but scant supply," is my motto.

MISSIONARIES FOR THIBET

SINCE the recent experiences in Thibet of Dr. Sven Hedin, Walter Savage Landor and the Rev. William Carey, that strange "sealed land" has become more than ever an object of missionary solicitude. An account of Mr. Carey's adventures in Thibet appeared in a recent issue of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD.

MR. AND MRS. CHRISTIE

Few have forgotten the tragic story of the Rev. Peter Rijnhart's disappearance, which was published some two years ago in this journal. It is to be hoped that a brighter and more successful future awaits the two young missionaries whose portraits are here presented, being reproduced from a photograph sent from China by Mrs. J. Woodberry, the well-known Shanghai missionary. Mrs. Woodberry writes: "One of our happiest social events here was the wedding reception in Beulah Chapel of Mr. and Mrs. Christie, of Thibet, two of our best beloved missionaries."
The good wishes of God's people follow them on their journey into their new field, whence later may come interesting accounts of the work they may be enabled to do there.

5 NEW AND RARE CALLAS, 50c.

We are the only house offering these beautiful Callas this year, and we offer them at a price never before attempted by any seedman.

RED CALLA.—Can you imagine anything more beautiful than a bright red calla, with foliage variegated most artistically? 20c. each.

GREEN CALLA.—As a foliage plant this calla exceeds the Fancy Leaved Caladiums, the leaves being marked and veined in a fashion never before seen. The flowers measure from 8 to 12 inches and are a beautiful green color. 20c. each.

YELLOW CALLA.—One of the rarest colors in callas. The beautiful yellow flower, with jet black centre, is indeed charming. 30c. each.

CALLA FRAGRANCE. Flowers are very large, pure white and delightfully fragrant. 20c. each.

SPOTTED CALLA.—This is the ever blooming calla with spotted leaves; easy to grow and always in bloom. Enormous size bulbs 20c. each.

SPECIAL OFFER. For 50c. we will send the Set of 5 Callas, by mail, postpaid, together with our Colored Plate Catalog. All Blooming Bulbs.

The "Tomb's Angel" Dead

IN the death of Mrs. Rebecca Salome Foster, who perished in the Park Avenue Hotel fire, there passed away one who was ever ready "to hear the sighing of the prisoner," to minister to the needs and sorrows of the captive, to lead the erring back to paths of rectitude; and, according to her power, to "preserve them that are appointed to die." The imprisoned and the unfortunate lost in her a friend not easily replaced. In the Criminal Courts' Building, and the gloomy hostelry connected with it by the Bridge of Sighs, she had been a familiar figure for many years; and long ago, because of her mission of mercy there, she came to be known as the "Tomb's Angel."

Mrs. Foster was the widow of General John A. Foster, of our regular army, who died here in 1900. Her father, John Howard Elliott, was a prominent citizen of Mobile. She was a handsome, graceful woman, of high social standing, and all the world's honors and pleasures might have been hers, but she chose to devote her time, her talents and her money to the Master's service, in helping those who, being reft of freedom, are powerless to help themselves. Through her efforts in behalf of an old family servant accused of theft, and with no lawyer to defend him, her interest was first directed into the channel which, later, absorbed all her energies. While many a wayward lad and despairing man has been made the better for her womanly pity and gracious ministrations, her labors were chiefly directed to those of her own sex. If she had reason to believe a girl or woman guiltless of charges brought against her, there was nothing she would not do to establish her innocence. If there were extenuating circumstances in a case where offence had been committed, she was keen to discover and quick to present these to official notice—not in open court, where her good deeds might be seen and heralded, but in the privacy of judges' chambers. If a girl was so friendless that there was no one to sit beside her when brought before her judges, Mrs. Foster would appear with her. Many a girl just beginning a downward course has been drawn back by her firm yet tender hand, and restored to a rejoicing home circle. At Mamaroneck she established a home for homeless girls, who having but once transgressed the law, were discharged by their judges on the assurance that Mrs. Foster would take them under her care.

Friday, February 21, when leaving the Tombs, Mrs. Foster promised unhappy Florence Burns, accused of murder, to go with her into court next day. Of this girl, whom she believed innocent of the crime charged, she had hopes; and—one may be almost sure—remembered her and many another prisoner in her prayers before she lay down to rest that last night of her life on earth. Next day, her daughter identified her among the dead by the ring she wore, her husband's gift, bearing the inscription: "My Own. My Dear. 1866."

The Sunday following her death, many tributes were paid to her memory by ministers in their pulpits and by labor organizations. The regular services in the Tombs were marked by deep feeling—particularly those in the afternoon, which Mrs. Foster had hitherto led. When her favorite hymns were sung, "Nearer, my to God, Thee" and "Rock of Ages," there were few dry eyes among even the most hardened criminals. Monday, in the courtroom of Special Sessions, where she had so often appeared as the friend of the unfortunate, lawyers and judges paid tribute to the dead missionary. "She was indeed a holy woman," said District Attorney Jerome; and Justice Holbrook added: "To those in distress, she was a good and true angel."

ANSWERED PRAYERS

Subscriber, Reading, Pa., writes:

I prayed for many years that my husband should stop the habit of drink. When I saw the testimonials regarding answer to prayer, in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, hope was revived. I prayed with more faith in God's love and in God's willingness to answer prayer. He has answered me. I praise him for his mercy.

Anxious Mother, Fair Oaks, Cal., writes:

Reading every week in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD of many acknowledging answers to prayer, I had new faith to believe that my prayers in behalf of two dear ones would be answered. A few days ago word came to me of the change for the better in one of them; and I shall hope for the other, as I feel that God does answer earnest prayer.

F. H., Baltimore, Md., writes:

While reading a little story in last week's paper, my eyes fell on the column headed "Answered Prayers." I have had some experience along that line, but within the last three weeks I have been wonderfully blessed. I praise God to-day that I am fully delivered by his mighty power of a terrible trouble from which I had suffered eight long years.

Mother, Austin, Tex., writes:

My son was in deep and harassing trouble, resulting from the falsehood and injustice of another. I prayed that he might be delivered out of his trouble and the wrong corrected. My prayer has been answered; and I hasten to acknowledge the goodness of my Heavenly Father. O that men might praise him for his loving-kindness and his truth!

Mrs. R. E. D., Lansing, Kan., writes:

I want to acknowledge God's goodness in answering my prayer. Life was sadness and gloom for me. I took it to the dear Lord in prayer, and he has surely heard and answered me. For now our home is filled with great joy and happiness that could come to us only through God's mercy and grace, and no other way. We now receive many blessings through family prayer in our little home.

Mother, St. Louis, Mo., writes:

I wish to acknowledge answers to my prayers for my dear children. God does hear and answer prayer. I praise his name.

A. H. O., Santa Cruz, Cal., writes:

About a year and a half ago I was heavily afflicted. I often read the letters in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, telling of answered prayers. I prayed the Lord to deliver me. He has answered.

M. C. S., Dallas, Tex., writes:

Fifteen years ago, when I was doing missionary work at the jail in Dallas, Tex., I met, as I was returning from the Sunday afternoon service, a young man whose countenance somehow strongly attracted my attention. He wore a large sombrero hat and was of picturesque appearance. My mind was on our Young People's Meeting to be held that night; and a prayer from my heart went straight to the Throne of Grace that that young man might be directed to us. "God brought me East to save me," he said. I felt confident that my prayer would be answered. I was not at all surprised to see him enter our hall that evening; nor when the opportunity was given, to see him rise and ask for prayers. The next night he was at our meeting at the Y.M.C.A., and again arose and requested an interest in our petitions, stating that he had just arrived in Dallas from West Texas, where he had been, with companions like himself, living a wild and godless life. The meeting over, I spoke with him, and told him for the first time of my prayer for him at first sight. He was saved. About six months later I met him in the western part of the State, and he told me that all was changed for the better since his conversion, and it seemed like a new world to him.

S. B., Edinburgh, Scotland, writes:

I wish to acknowledge with heartfelt gratitude more than a year's protection and care, in answer to prayer. My path has been made clear, step by step, and now, looking back, I see the loving hand of my Heavenly Father, guiding and leading. I wish to cheer others as I have been cheered by answered prayers in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD.

Giant Flowering Caladium

Grandest foliage and flowering plant yet introduced. Leaves 3 to 5 feet long by 2 or 2 1/2 feet broad; perfect immense, and make a plant which for tropical luxuriance has no equal. Added to this wonderful foliage effect a mammoth lily-like blossom, 12 to 15 inches long, snow white, with a rich and exquisite fragrance. Plants bloom perpetually all summer in the garden, or all the year round in pots. Not only is it the grandest garden or lawn plant, but as a pot plant for large windows, veranda halls, or conservatories, it rivals the choicest palms foliage, to say nothing of its magnificent flowers. Thrive in any soil or situation, and grows and blooms all the year, and will astonish every one with its magnificent so novel, effective, free growing and fragrant.

Fine plants, which will soon bloom and reach full perfection, 25c. each; 3 for 60c.; 6 for $1.00 mail, postpaid, guaranteed to arrive in good condition.

OUR GREAT CATALOGUE of Flower & Vegetable Seeds, Bulbs, Plants and New Fruits, picturesquely illustrated; Large Colored Plates; 136 pages; 25c. to any who expect to order. Many great novelties.

Japanese Climbing Wonder

This discovery in tomatoes is a perfect wonder, and the most magnificent in America. It is new to American people, and every one who grows tomatoes should have it. At enormous expense I secured a quantity to offer this spring. It is very early ripening in Canada, large perfect fruits, beautiful red color, very solid, and few seeds. If you once get seed, you would not take $5.00 for it, because it must be grown to be appreciated. You cannot obtain this seed elsewhere.

Sure Crop Cabbage is the earliest in the world. Sure of a crop, and sure to head every time. Excellent quality, good keeper, and first introduced this spring. You will have first cabbage in your neighborhood if you plant it.

Picnic Lettuce Best spring, summer, fall and winter lettuce ever offered. Fancy, but grows quick, and so tender.

50 Brilliant Flowers is another of my 1902 specialties, and will produce a magnificent display of flowers. Their beauty is beyond description; cost hundreds of dollars to collect the colors.

My Souvenir Catalogue is filled with bargains, color-plates, premiums offered, and new plans worth dollars to anyone. 800,000 copies going out. It is free. I will mail a trial packet each of Wonder Tomato, Sure Crop Cabbage, Picnic Lettuce, 50 Brilliant Flowers and Catalogue for only 25c. and addresses of three friends who buy seeds or plants. Send to-day.

BY MRS M. BAXTER

In this matter the words of our lesson come home to us individually as Christians: "See that ye walk circumspectly, not as fools, but as wise, redeeming the time [or buying up the opportunity], because the days are evil." To walk circumspectly is to walk looking all round—to walk with open, observant eyes, taking in the bearings of the situation. Only so, looking to see how something touches God and how it affects our fellow-men, can we redeem the time or buy up the opportunity. Because the days are evil, we have an especial opportunity to witness for that which is good. All of us may speak by example. We may see no need to abstain from stimulants for our own sake, but we cannot stand by and see our fellow-creatures fall, without stretching out a hand to help. We are surrounded on all hands by those to whom strong drink is a terrible snare. They may mock at us, and say scornfully that such a man is too weak-minded to stop when we have had enough, etc.; but the time will come when they will remember the position we took, and possibly find that we are the example when we are least aware that it has told on anybody.

Enemy to Dirt and Disease Germs

no matter where they are—in clothing; on the hands; on the floor; in spittoons, sinks, bathrooms, toilet-rooms, cellars, all over the house; in the sick-room; in stores, offices, work-shops; in public halls—everywhere that dirt and disease germs are a nuisance and a danger.

No matter where, or how hard to get at,

Banner Lye

will get rid of them.

Ordinary disinfectants are costly and, with ordinary methods, don't do the work. Banner Lye is cheap and does the work.

Best results are obtained by using very small quantities. Directions on every package.

Banner Lye is not old-style lye.

JOY OVER MISS STONE'S RELEASE

THE cables announcing Miss Stone's release from captivity, brought rejoicing to many hearts, and God's people the world over returned thanks to the Divine Dispenser of Events for her safe deliverance. Among her kindred, her aged mother, now nearing the century mark, received the news with greatest calmness. Full of faith in God's goodness, she has never doubted that her daughter would be set free.

MISS ELLEN M. STONE

The only letter which her family had from Miss Stone during her captivity, reached them Jan. 14, through Consul Dickinson, to whom the brigands had entrusted it. It was dated Oct. 29, 1901, and in it she said: "There is little I can do but pray; and draw comfort from God's Word, a copy of which was taken with us." "Twice," she writes, "has the limit been set on our lives." Miss Stone's captivity lasted over five months.
